REPORT.—"I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch No. 17,179, of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-1876 in the Arctic, and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best, if not the very best, in the 'Discovery,' and since my return home continues to perform equally satisfactory."

OF all branches of Naval Science, that which relates to Tactics is at once the most important and difficult. The most important, since the greatest efficiency of personnel and matériel is subordinate to the system on which the manœuvres of a fleet are based, and the skill with which they are executed; the most difficult, since so many and various are the circumstances under which Naval operations are conducted, that mere practice in a prescribed series of evolutions is calculated to afford little more than a limited experience of a small portion of a vast subject. The importance granted and the difficulty appreciated, it becomes apparent that if the British Navy is to retain the proud position with respect to the navies of other nations she has acquired in past years, much care and attention should be bestowed on the instruction of her officers in all matters related thereto to the end that they may give due weight to the former, acquire ability to cope with the latter, and ultimately, should occasion necessitate, sustain with the ironclad steamer and 100-ton gun the honour and glory won by the wooden walls and the 32-pounder. Previous to the introduction of steam, the range of Naval Tactics was much restricted. The inability of a sailing vessel to proceed to windward, except by the slow process of tacking, tended to make the grand coup that of isolation of a leeward and a concentration of available force on the windward portion of the enemy's fleet. The period during which a vessel-of-war could keep the sea was also very great in consequence of her independence on coal, and the injuries inflicted in the course of an engagement were such as, when not irreparable, could mostly be dealt with by the ship's artificers and crew, thus lessening the necessity for tactical arrangements of depôts, &c. Again, the comparatively small size of the ships, and from that, the considerable number that could be put in commission for a certain expenditure, though the locomotion was more uncertain than it would have been had the vessels been steamers, rendered the disposition of a fleet over a large station a much easier matter than is the case when a less number, although with superior qualities with regard to punctuality and speed, has to be employed. Thus it will be seen that the introduction of the large, costly, powerful, swift ironclad steamer has opened a fresh department of Naval science. Let us consider very briefly its nature, and the measures which may ensure the efficiency of our Naval officers with respect to it. The whole range of the subject may be roughly divided into three parts, viz.:—(1.) The construction and maintenance of a fleet, both as regards personnel and matériel, its disposition on certain stations, and the establishment of depôts for the relief of its temporary necessities. (2.) The distribution of a squadron over a station; the arrangements for its periodical service, its supplies, &c., from the established depôts, and the means for its concentration or extension. (3.) The actual organisation of the squadron; its conduct to and from different parts of the station; and last, but not least, the method of manœuvring it in the presence of an enemy. Of these, the first is the special concern of the Naval Administration; the second, the chief care of the representatives at home and abroad; the third, the particular province of every Naval officer, from a midshipman upwards. Skill and ability in each cannot fail to secure ultimate glory and success; ignorance or neglect of any must result in disaster and defeat. Perfect acquaintance with one cannot be gained without diligent study of the other two. At present there is no established mode of instruction in Naval tactics, the nearest approach being a series of lectures in Naval history at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich; and the only encouragement given to their study is represented by a few days a year devoted to fleet evolutions, and more or less frequent exercises in the steam launches of the squadron, by which only the small proportion of the Service's executive officers present can hope to profit. Taken at its best, this is but a poor means of imparting information of so general a subject; and since it may happen that want of previous knowledge in instructor and student will, at one time or another, lead to much bad language and mishaps of major or minor consequence, it is not impossible to regard it as a display of "zeal, but not according to knowledge." It is passing strange that it has never occurred to the Admiralty to establish a special course of instruction in Naval Tactics at the College at Greenwich. Either they cannot consider the matter worthy of trial, or there is a difficulty in finding a competent person to conduct it. There is little doubt that such a course would be very popular and well attended, and, what is more to the purpose, of more practical use than the rigid mathematical application exacted from officers who have no taste for, and fail to observe the utility of, it. With the grounding that would thus be given, it is reasonable to suppose that interest would be awakened in those who have not yet given their attention to tactical science, and that the captain or lieutenant being well versed in its theory would not fail to profit by the limited practice he might obtain when afloat. Nay, he might even live to understand, and perhaps to improve, the complicated and apparently objectless portion of the general signal book that is styled evolutionary. A smattering of knowledge in the differential and integral calculus, rigid dynamics, chemistry, afternoon dances, rackets, and pool, are very good things in their way; but there is a large proportion of our Naval officers who, lacking the taste to excel in any of these branches of education, are gifted with common-sense, nerve, and intrepidity, and who may fairly be expected to develop into able tacticians if opportunity were offered to get "under way."

The commanding officers of Metropolitan Volunteer corps have unanimously selected Brighton as the site for the proposed operations next Easter Monday, and as the Under-Secretary of State for War sees no reason why the War Office should refuse its permission, there is now no doubt that a very large gathering of the force—variously estimated at from 25,000 to 30,000—will take place on the Sussex Downs on the 29th of next month. It is much to be regretted that the Aldershot project fell through, for there was an element of reality about it which commended itself as much to the Auxiliary Forces as it undoubtedly did to the Regular Services, and but for the unfortunate limit placed on the numbers, which would have resulted in a selection of particular regiments to the disappointment of others with equal claims, there is every reason to believe that the offer of a day's co-operation with the Aldershot division would have been gladly accepted. Lord Stratheden and Campbell brought the subject before the notice of the House of Lords on Monday night, and reviving recollections which were certainly not so bad as they were pictured, he entered a feeble protest against the revival of the Easter Monday field-days, principally, it may be assumed from his remarks, for the reason that the spring holiday falls unusually early in the season, when fine weather cannot be depended upon, and the Volunteers might accordingly suffer in health. The noble lord never did believe in his men taking cold, and it is evident that the humane feelings which prompted him while he held the command of a Middlesex Volunteer regiment, to keep the jackets of his men dry at all costs, still exists. The Volunteers, however, we cannot help thinking, are made of sterner stuff than his lordship credits them with, and those who know them are aware that possible bad weather will not make any difference in the attendance. It is questionable whether his lordship may be considered an authority on the issue which has on several occasions been raised, as to whether these large gatherings are useful in a military point of view. Lord Bury's long experience of the organisation has taught him that, in many respects, they are valuable, and his views are shared by Lords Elcho and Ranelagh, and other prominent leaders, whose names have been associated with the Force since the beginning, and who may safely be said to express the opinions of the Volunteers. As to the "military point of view" aspect, which has been so frequently seized upon, that is purely a question for the Military Authorities. If brilliant strategy has not been displayed, and the Volunteers were no wiser on their return from these field-days than they were before they left their respective quarters, it was not their fault; it was only a good opportunity lost of imparting valuable instruction. There can be no doubt that in the early days of the movement there was much laxity which was not surprising, considering how little the force was then in hand. The organisation has now, however, undergone an entire change; efficiency and discipline have kept pace with the vast increase in numbers, and the force has shown a constant and laudable determination to approach as closely as possible to the perfection of the Regulars. The past year has especially demonstrated how nearly a considerable number of the 200,000 are attaining to this result. It has been evidenced by the large and increasing attendances at camps of exercise and instruction, by the reports of inspecting officers in all parts of the country, by the constant desire for closer association with the professional soldier, and by the testimony of no less distinguished a critic than his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief. The Secretary of State for War on Saturday last bore testimony to the unity which is being brought about between the Services, when he said that the "Army, in the face of what it had seen done by the Volunteers, and the Volunteers, in their spirit of emulation, were becoming more and more welded into one Service for the good of the country." There are many indications that the forthcoming field-day will not prove the barren affair attributed to many others held on the South Coast. One of the main features of recent Easter outings, when it has not been possible to arrange for the conveyance of a large body of troops, has been the admirable system of route-marching, which has received high commendation from the Duke of Cambridge for the practical manner in which it has been carried out. Last Easter some of the detachments covered fifty miles in the four days they were enabled to give, and it need hardly be added that they moved on the understood principles which govern the traversing of an enemy's country, of which sketches were made by the officers, and afterwards submitted for the inspection of the Duke. The men were under strict discipline, and both on the road and in billet the officers had the opportunity, not otherwise obtainable, of ascertaining their physical and soldierly qualities. This, we understand, will be repeated on a large scale this Easter, some thousands of men having already entered their names to march a good part of the distance to Brighton. Lieutenant-Colonel Knight, the manager of the Brighton Railway Company, has, in the most spirited manner, undertaken the conveyance of the troops, and as the reputation of the force would be at stake through any unsoldierly conduct on the part of the Volunteers while in the town, it may be safely assumed that the commanding officers will take all necessary precautions, as they have done before, against this. The excellent spirit which animates the entire force is now so marked, that we shall look forward with much interest to the military arrangements which will be made at the Horse Guards and the War Office.

In alluding, on November 22, to the summary dismissal of Commander Hull from his post as Superintendent of Charts at the Admiralty, we remarked that we heard their Lordships had been induced to act hastily, and without due judgment. The suspicion which attached to Commander Hull of having been "disloyal" to the head of his Department was the principal reason for his dismissal from office; and we are glad to notice that Lieutenant Temple, with whom Commander Hull was supposed to have been associated in the preparation of a paper read at Sheffield, and which was distasteful to Captain Evans, owing to its open criticism, has not only written to the Board of Admiralty a full explanation of the case, but has also published a "statement in vindication of Commander Hull." In the opening sentence of this statement Lieutenant Temple says:—"As my name has been very generally coupled with the events which preceded the supersession of Commander T. A. Hull, R.N., Superintendent of Charts at the Admiralty, it is due to that officer that I should vindicate his disavowal of any complicity with me;" and adds that he deeply regrets that any action of his should have exposed Commander Hull to the suspicion of "disloyalty," and says in the most unequivocal manner of Commander Hull, that "he has never either said or written one word to me that could be so interpreted as to justify that suspicion." Lieutenant Temple further remarks:—"I wish it to be distinctly understood that I alone am responsible for the paper read at Sheffield, and that Commander Hull never in any way suggested, or even hinted, that I should write such a paper. I compiled it entirely from published works, with the single exception of the allusion to the Norway Pilot, a subject on which I felt justified in speaking with independent authority. I wrote it in the country, submitted it to the Sectional Committee directly it was finished, and I can state positively that Commander Hull had no knowledge of the contents so long as it remained in my hands; afterwards, they became public property. The paper contains no word of animadversion on the work that has actually been done by the Hydrographic Branch of her Majesty's Navy; it was solely intended to draw public attention to the unfriendly forces with which that branch of the Service maintains a gallant, but unequal struggle. This statement will, I trust, make it clear that, so far as I am concerned, there is no shadow of pretext for accusing Commander Hull of 'disloyalty to the Hydrographer.'" This statement has now been in the hands of the Lords of the Admiralty for some weeks, and we hope that the Board will see the justice of making reparation to Commander Hull for the injury he has suffered by his unexpected dismissal from office. It will be better for the reputation of the Board that the error should at once be admitted and repaired, as far as possible, rather than to have their Lordships' action in this matter brought before the country by inquiring Members of Parliament.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh has issued orders to the Coastguard on the west coast of Ireland to take charge of relief stores and provisions, and to lend assistance in conveying relieving officers to the islands off the coast.

We hear that it is probable that Prince Ernest, a son of the Grand Duke of Hesse and the late Princess Alice of England, will shortly be entered on board the Britannia as a Naval cadet, thus following the example set by the sons of the Prince of Wales.

The departure of the Raleigh for Australia is likely to be deferred for another fortnight, if the intention of making her act as convoy to the Wivern on her passage across the Bay of Biscay is adhered to. The defects of the Wivern will take fully 14 days to make good, and those on board are just as well pleased that this delay should have occurred, as their confidence in the behaviour of the ship in such weather as we have had this week is not overwhelming. She is far better adapted for lying snug in harbour, than for bucketing about in a heavy sea.

The death of a cadet of the Britannia, from congestion of the brain, has led to the circulation of a rumour that the ship or her berth are not healthy. These rumours recur now and again, being probably started at opposition ports which have a wish to be able to see the Britannia from the shop-windows. We may state that there is not the slightest foundation for making disparaging remarks upon the healthiness of the ship, for there are only five cadets on the sick list with trifling complaints, at this moment.

It is stated that Sir James Elphinstone has been informed that the Admiralty are quite prepared to carry out the recommendations of Admiral Sir Cooper Key's Committee on Engineer officers, but that, as the proposed scheme for retirement will entail considerable expenditure, it will be impossible to overcome the opposition of the Treasury at the present time. If this is not much consolation to the Engineer branch, it is, at least, putting the saddle on the right horse.

We regret to hear that the appearance of a case of yellow-fever on board the training-ship Atalanta has been reported to the Admiralty. The Atalanta was at St. Kitts, according to our latest information, but has proceeded northwards.

We hear that Admiral Shestakoff, the present Russian Naval Attaché for the south of Europe, will shortly return to St. Petersburg, and take up an appointment as chief of the Naval Construction Department of the Russian Admiralty.

In December we called attention to the "comparatively unprotected and absolutely isolated position of so important a station as Bermuda" without telegraphic communication. We are, therefore, pleased to learn that the question of establishing telegraphic communication with Bermuda is under the consideration of the Colonial Office.

It may now be taken for granted that the death-knell of the Vanguard has been sounded. While trials were being made at raising the Grosser Kurfürst, there was hope; but now the German Admiralty does not intend to prolong the contract for raising the Grosser Kurfürst beyond March 30, it being believed that further attempts to recover the wreck would prove useless.

Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., K.C.B., is, we are happy to find, about again, and fast regaining strength after his illness.

In alluding last week to the countries which had adopted the solid-drawn American cartridge, in preference to those of the Boxer type, full justice was not done to the case, owing to a complete line of the leading article having dropped out. To those Powers we named, there should be added Russia, Turkey, Spain, Holland, Egypt, and Denmark.

The Channel Squadron is reported to be very comfortable under the new Flag-officer, Rear-Admiral Hood, and although nothing is left undone that tends to keep up the smartness of the ships, and there is plenty of hard work, the Admiral does not forget that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." Special leave has been constantly given at Lisbon to allow the men to enjoy the opera and amusements of the shore, while steam-launches have been run to enable them to get off again to their ships.

A meeting of the officers and men of the Terror, Tenedos, Blanche, Griffon, and Contest, was held on February 4, at Bermuda Dockyard, the chair being taken by Captain Moresby, who laid before the meeting the financial condition and prospects of the Bermuda Sailors' and Marines' Club. It was shown that the Admiralty permission to erect the club on the plan proposed by the Committee was only received on the last day of 1879, when immediate steps were taken to purchase and provide building material, of which a considerable quantity was now on the ground. A contract with a local builder is nearly completed, by whom it is expected that the building will be finished in eighteen months, at an estimated cost of £2,400. It will then, probably, be the largest sailors and marines' club in our colonies, affording sleeping accommodation for 100 men, with every appliance and comfort for reading, smoking, eating, and recreation on the ground-floor. The site granted by the Admiralty is one of the most beautiful on Ireland Island. Captain Moresby announced that already more than £1,300 had been collected, in addition to which, the Commander-in-Chief, Sir Leopold M'Clintock, had promised a subscription of twenty guineas. The chairman called upon the ship's companies of the newly-arrived ships on the station to emulate the example set by those they had relieved, by subscribing six shillings each man. If they did this, a sufficient sum would be collected, aided by the local canteens, to meet all requirements, and to start the institution prosperously. We understand that there is no doubt that the additional £1,000 required will speedily be raised. We wish every success to this effort to raise the moral standard of our men, and to give them healthy amusements at dull Bermuda.

The flag of the late Rear-Admiral Hope was ordered by the Admiralty to be kept flying at half-mast until after the funeral of the deceased officer, when it was struck.

Rear-Admiral Leveson Somerset was confidently spoken of as the coming Admiral-Superintendent at Devonport, but the appointment has been conferred upon Rear-Admiral Curme. Seeing that Admiral Somerset has not yet had an opportunity of hoisting his flag, and his turn for employment has fully arrived, we trust their Lordships may select this officer for an early appointment.

Captain Colomb and Commander Sir Francis Blackwood arrived at Malta on February 7, and took command of their ships, the Thunderer and Hibernia, respectively.

Lieutenant Haggard, of the Flora, for service at Ascension; Navigating Lieutenant Whitmore, of the Industry; and Assistant-Paymaster Reid, of the Firebrand, have all been invalided home from the Cape and West Coast station.

The following circular memorandum has been issued by the Deputy-Adjutant-General of Royal Marines:—"The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have been pleased to direct that four majors only at each division, and two only at the depôt at Deal, shall be considered on duty as mounted officers, and drawing forage allowance, making 18 majors as the average number mounted."

Nine gentlemen who were candidates for first appointments in the Army at the last examination, have been selected for the Royal Marines.

On January 10 we stated that Lieutenant Wylde, R.M.L.I., of the Raleigh, would be transferred to the Wolevrene, and we were right. Last week, finding in the Navy List a notification that Lieutenant Kitching, R.M.L.I., of the Wolverene, would be reappointed, we included that officer's name among those who would be retained in the Wolverene, and we were wrong. Such is the result of trusting to an official list, published "by authority."

The following ships will be paid off on March 31, and be recommissioned on the following day:—The Asia, Britannia, Excellent, Cambridge, Dasher, Ganges, Impregnable, Indus, Nankin, and St. Vincent.

The officers of Royal Marines who were detached to Canterbury on January 1, for a course of equitation, have rejoined their respective head-quarters. We understand that three of the majors will shortly be sent on recruiting service, to relieve captains,—one of the steps resolved upon to save the forage allowance paid to each major while doing garrison duty.

By the death of Rear-Admiral Charles Webley Hope, and consequent promotion to flag-rank of Captain Frederick Herbert, a captain's good-service pension and the command of the Excellent is placed at the disposal of the Admiralty.

Captain Sir John Glover, R.N., G.C.M.G., Governor of Newfoundland, has lately been turning his attention to the possibility of making St. John's the summer port for the whole Dominion. His idea is to connect St. John's with the mainland by a railway across the island and a line of ferry steamers across the Straits of Belleisle, whence a line would form a junction with the Inter-Colonial, and it is reported that the question is now under the consideration of the Canadian Government.

The Curaçoa will be commissioned at Devonport on March 2 by Captain W. H. Cuming, for the China station, with a complement of 251.

Whenever committees are appointed to consider the welfare of a body of officers, it is usual to call a certain number of those interested before the committee, in order to ventilate the general wish and feeling with reference to the matter under discussion. We have not heard that any of the officers of the Marine Artillery have yet been summoned before the Committee now sitting to consider on the future of that corps; but we know, from the number of letters we have received, that many officers would be glad of such an opportunity of expressing their views. In our allusion last week to the constitution of the Committee, we pointed out what we considered its one-sided character, but an error crept in in reference to the number of Marine Artillery officers sitting, there being three.

We have received what we at first took to be a serious complaint against the new Commander-in-Chief on the North America station, he being accused of having given orders calculated to "materially disturb the comfort and good-feeling of the officers of Bermuda Dockyard, and cause great dissatisfaction." But, after all, Sir Leopold M'Clintock has only directed that these officers shall in future wear the uniform of their rank when on duty, instead of appearing in plain clothes at all times. Moreover, it appears from the tenor of the communication we have received, that it was much the fault of the officials themselves that they were given this order, and that the plain clothes worn by one of them were so exceedingly plain, not to use a stronger term, that the Admiral thought the officer would never be known as one unless he were put into the uniform of his rank. Surely, having to wear her Majesty's uniform on duty is not a thing to cry about, even if the aggrieved have "enjoyed the great privilege and luxury of wearing plain clothes."

The First Lord of the Admiralty stated in the House on Thursday, in reply to Captain Price, that there is no intention to assimilate the rates of pay and allowances of the Marines and the Army. Mr. Smith added that although there are considerable differences existing between them, the conditions of the two Services differ so much that no true comparison can be made between them. This is very true, and now that the scale of pensions has been assimilated, the marine is as well off as the soldier.

We are asked to state, in answer to numerous inquiries as to the time when subscriptions for the new British expedition to the Arctic regions would be called for, that circulars inviting contributions are now being issued; but as this process must be a gradual one, it is open to all intending subscribers to send in their donations at once to the honorary secretaries, Messrs. C. A. Collier and C. E. Moore, Central Arctic Committee-rooms, 107 Fleet Street, E.C., all cheques being made payable to J. H. Puleston, Esq., M.P.

A well-informed correspondent states that, "if the proposals which Prince Lobanoff has been charged with for a definite arrangement of British and Russian limitations in Central Asia be declined by the Court of St. James's, the movement to obtain a scientific frontier which Russia has projected will be vigorously prosecuted at once." The result of that vigorous prosecution will be speedily manifest, should it be pushed to our borders. And if not there, where is it to stop?

The Nihilist butchery had some sort of similitude to the Clerkenwell explosion. The cowardice of these kinds of attempts to destroy a hated existence by involving it in a common ruin with that of many indifferent persons, is one of the most odious features. A man who sets his own life against that of another, and who resolves to sacrifice it in order to kill his enemy, is seldom baffled. Successful regicides have mostly been of that stamp, and it is well for kings who are detested that the fury of political hate is generally tempered by want of physical courage. There can be no personal antipathy to the Czar. We fail to see how abdication would disarm the fiendish and implacable enemies of Czardom.

Colonel Redvers Buller, V.C., C.B., formerly 60th Rifles, is, as we stated some time since was proposed, to take up an appointment in the Adjutant-General's Department, having been selected to succeed Colonel St. G. M. Nugent as Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at Edinburgh.

Major Wilkinson Shaw, garrison instructor at Aldershot, delivered lectures on Monday and Tuesday at the Royal Artillery Institute, Woolwich, and at Wellington Barracks (where models upon his principles have recently been established), on "The Use of Modelled Ground in the Study of Minor Tactics." The increasing interest in the subject was testified by the large attendance of officers of all ranks, both in the Royal Artillery and the Household troops, and Major Shaw's very simple and direct method of instruction in what has hitherto been considered a somewhat abstruse branch of military science was very generally commented upon.

The distinguished service rewards, vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-Generals Sir E. Greathed, K.C.B., and Sir R. D. Kelly, K.C.B., to regimental colonelcies, have been given to Colonels E. W. Bray, C.B., commanding the 2nd Battalion 4th Regiment, lately on service in Zululand, and H. A. Welman, half-pay, late of a Depôt Battalion, and Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General of the Colchester District. Colonel Bray served with the 31st Regiment throughout the campaign of 1842 in Afghanistan under General Pollock, and was present at the actions of Mazeena, Tezeen, and Jugdulluck, the occupation of Cabul, and the different engagements leading to it (medal). Served at the capture of Khytul in May, 1843, with the Umballa Brigade. He commanded detachments of the 15th Hussars and 83rd Foot in the suppression of the election riots at Nottingham in July, 1865, and was highly commended by H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief "for his admirable and praiseworthy conduct, and the firmness and ability he displayed on that occasion." Served with the 4th King's Own throughout the Abyssinian campaign, and was present at the action of Arogee and capture of Magdala, and commanded the rear-guard of the army continuously on the return to the coast (mentioned in despatches, Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, and medal); and lately left England in command of the 2nd Battalion, for the Cape, where he commanded it throughout the operations in the field. He joined the Army, June 21, 1839, and became colonel, February 24, 1876. Colonel Welman commanded a detachment of the 80th Regiment, embarked in the private schooner Ariel at the capture, by surprise, of the piratical schooner Hannah, in a harbour off the Mercury Islands, on October 26, 1843, for which he received the thanks of the Governor of New Zealand and the approbation of the Duke of Wellington. He served the Sutlej campaign of 1845-46, as adjutant of the 80th, including the battles of Moodkee, Ferozeshah, and Sabraon (medal with two clasps). He entered the Army, January 11, 1840, and became Colonel, December 30, 1876.

In answer to Colonel Alexander, Colonel Stanley stated the other evening that it is intended to publish a list of Reserve Officers formed under the Royal Warrant of July, 1879.

Quartermaster D. M'Intyre, of the Rifle Depôt, Winchester, has been granted the Distinguished Service Reward of £50, vacant in consequence of the death of Lieutenant-Colonel T. M. Byrne, unattached. He served with the 79th Highlanders throughout the Eastern campaign of 1854-55, including the battles of Alma and Balaklava, siege and fall of Sebastopol, and assaults of June 18 and September 8; expedition to Kertch and Yenikale (medal with three clasps, medal for distinguished conduct in the field, and Turkish medal), and was gazetted quartermaster, March 3, 1856.

Major J. Powell, captain on the Retired Full Pay List, late 102nd Fusiliers, will be raised to the Royal Foundation of the Military Knights of Windsor, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Captain P. M'Innis, late 44th Regiment.

Major-General Engelhardt, of the Russian Ordnance Department, has just published a voluminous work called "A Collection of Data respecting the Material Portion of Field, Siege, Fortress, and Littoral Artillery, in Russia and in Foreign States." The author has been collecting information on the subject since he visited the Vienna Exhibition, on behalf of the Russian Government, in 1873, and the most interesting portion of his book deals with the alterations and improvements which have been effected in Russian artillery since that period.

An estimate of the sums required to be voted for the Civil Service for the year ending 31st March, 1880, in addition to the sums already provided in the estimates presented last Session, has been issued. The total is £556,867. A sum of £985 has to be provided in respect of the Abyssinian expedition of 1867-8. A vote was taken in 1878-9 for £19,865, of which only £17,513 was actually expended. The present estimate is, therefore, a revote of a portion of the surplus of the grant for 1878-9, and is to meet expenditure disallowed on account for that year, pending explanations from the India Office. The total cost of the expedition, including the amount now submitted, has been £8,977,500. A vote of £15,050 is required for repayment of charges defrayed by the War Office on account of India. The total amount of the charge incurred by the War Office on behalf of India, and advanced out of the Army moneys, in the years from 1870-71 to 1876-77, was £685,050; out of this sum, £500,000 was repaid out of the vote for 1875-76, and £170,000 out of that for 1876-77, leaving £15,050 still due to the War Office. This amount was shown as a "deficiency to be voted" on the appropriation account of the vote of 1876-77, but the presentation of an estimate was deferred until the Committee of Public Accounts had reported.

The Horse Guards having very properly done justice to several officers whose claims we have from time to time brought to notice, as having merited recognition for their services in Zululand, we shall yet hope to find that certain officers, who distinguished themselves in the earlier phases of the Afghan campaign, may still meet with some acknowledgment. We may mention a few cases,—there are four, at any rate, which recommend themselves. In the first place, we would mention the case of Major and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Tanner, 2nd Battalion, 8th King's, who succeeded to the command of his regiment before mid-day on December 2, 1878, in consequence of Colonel Drew having assumed command of the brigade, vice Brigadier-General Cobbe, wounded. Colonel Tanner retained this command until March, during a period of considerable peril, when the camp was threatened by many thousand Mongals; and he was always referred to as a good, most trustworthy, and thoroughly efficient officer, who spared himself neither trouble nor anxiety. Secondly, comes the case of Captain, now Major, J. A. S. Colquhoun, Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, Commissary of Ordnance, who accompanied the force on the staff of Major-General Sir F. Roberts, in charge of that department, and who was present at the assault of the Peiwar Kotal and subsequent operations, including the expedition to Kosht. Major Colquhoun's five years' tenure of office expiring, he was relieved in July last, and returned to England; but it seems to have been the opinion of one and all with General Roberts's force, that a better and more hard-working officer never buckled on a sword. Thirdly, we may refer to the case of Captain Guinness, senior captain of the 72nd Highlanders, who accompanied the right wing of his regiment from Thull as major, holding that position until March, when the left wing rejoined head-quarters, accompanied by both majors. Captain Guinness also was present at the assault on the Piewar Kotal, and subsequent operations, with the exception of the expedition to Kosht. And lastly, we would point to Captain T. A. A. Barstow, 72nd Highlanders. Captain Barstow was selected (having been nearly seven years adjutant of his regiment), as an aide-de-camp, by Brigadier-General Cobbe. Was with him when he was wounded on December 2; but on his being taken to the rear, went on the staff of his successor, Colonel Drew, accompanying the force through its subsequent operations, including the expedition to Kosht. He remained on the Staff of the 1st Brigade until July 1, when Brigadier-General Cobbe took his departure for Agra, to assume command there. Shortly afterwards, he was ordered home, to take over the duties of adjutant of the Highland Borderers Militia. The cases here mentioned might certainly be favourably considered, and the fact of the officers not having received any reward is due, we have reason to think, entirely to oversight.

Since the introduction of short service, great difficulty has been experienced in providing a sufficient supply of non-commissioned officers and bandsmen. We believe this difficulty could be met by enlisting a much larger number of boys than is at present authorised by the Regulations. In almost every regiment, some of the best non-commissioned officers are men who were originally enlisted either as band or drummer-boys; but, unfortunately, the regulation number of boys is too small to supply a quarter of the vacancies that occur.

Without wishing to detract from the merit due to the force under Sir Garnet Wolseley, in the victory gained at Secocoeni's Staadt, and the complete ferreting-out of the obstinate and concealed Kaffirs, the public should know that the 2,400 white troops and 10,500 native auxiliaries who took part in these operations were much assisted by the fact of the whole of the mule transport and military stores and resources, obtained for the Zulu campaign, being made available for the force. The defeat of the Zulus and capture of Cetewayo had also, doubtless, a demoralising effect on the Basutos. The desired end was, therefore, attained with preponderating numbers, and an unsparing usage of the best transport and war matériel. In bestowing praise, and possibly lavishing honours, for the Secocoeni campaign of 1879, it will be but just to take into consideration the fighting and harassing fatigues undergone by the force,—850 white troops and 150 native auxiliaries,—under the command of Colonel Rowlands, V.C., C.B., which, with ox transport and imperfect and inadequate military stores, penetrated through thick bush up to Secocoeni's Staadt, and maintained its position in the midst of the enemy's mountain fastnesses for three months in 1878, finally retiring, owing to scarcity of water, after an unprecedented long drought, and to the impossibility of attacking the chief with such small numbers without risking a disaster.

With reference to a paragraph concerning the pay and allowances of Militia adjutants, which we published last week, we have received a communication pointing out that Volunteer adjutants are still more to be pitied. A Volunteer adjutant receives altogether the following sums, from which income-tax is deducted:—

Lodging allowance, at 2s. 3d.	41	1	3
Fuel and light	9	12	3
Servant's allowance, at 1s.	18	5	0
Forage, at 1s. 6d.	27	7	6
Stable allowance, at 9d.	13	13	9

According to the statement of the adjutant of a five-company Militia regiment (which statement we published last week) his pay and allowances amount to £350 8s. 11d., and this, we believe, is less than what many Militia adjutants receive, owing to the small number of Militia and Line recruits estimated for. Even, however, comparing the income of a badly-paid adjutant of Militia with that of a Volunteer adjutant, it will be seen that the latter is much worse remunerated than the former. The Volunteer adjutant is obliged to keep up a horse all the year round, while a Militia adjutant can dispense with one, save for a few weeks. This is one cause of the higher money-value of a Militia over a Volunteer adjutancy. Again, a Militia adjutant receives £16 12s. per annum for mess expenses, while no such item is to be found in the pay and allowances of a Volunteer adjutant. Why should a Volunteer adjutant be worse paid than a Militia adjutant? It certainly cannot be because higher qualifications are required in a Militia than in a Volunteer adjutant, for the direct reverse is the case. Neither can it be because the duties of a Volunteer are less onerous than those of a Militia adjutant. The latter has little or no work during nine months out of the twelve, while the former is thoroughly employed throughout the year, and has to incur much bodily fatigue in visiting outlying companies. We hope that the matter will be inquired into, for at present the inequality in the remuneration of Militia and Volunteer adjutants is both unjust and unwise.

Amongst the multitudinous duties that fall to the lot of the Engineer officer, none are more onerous or more disagreeable than that of keeping in repair the barracks and other buildings used by the troops. Why should not this duty, or at least a portion of it, be relegated to the troops who occupy the barracks? To do this, the number of pioneers or artificers would require to be slightly increased, and placed under an officer specially instructed and trained for the appointment by a special course at Chatham. The regiment would thus be more independent and more self-supporting, and much correspondence and friction with the Engineer Department would be avoided. The officer holding this appointment might further be rendered responsible for the cleanliness, &c., of thg barracks, and even be placed in charge of the beddine and barracks utensils, by which arrangement the Quartermaster would be relieved of a portion of his much too onerous duties.

The attempt to form a Council of Government for the Transvaal seems to be a failure. Mr. Marais is a very respectable gentleman, but his nomination will not conciliate the Boers, who regard him as a deserter; Mr. White is a tradesman of Pretoria, and a strong annexationist; the Chevalier Forssmann is a Swedish immigrant, who is engaged in business at Potchefstroom, where he holds a good position, but he is extravagant in his views of Imperial duties and expenditure; Mr. Joubert is not to be confounded with the eminent leader of the Boer party of the same name, and is a man of much less consideration and ability than his namesake. The announcements respecting Mr. Pretorius are mysterious. First, he is arrested; next, he is asked to become a member of the governing body; finally, he refuses to support Sir Garnet Wolseley. It seems clear that British regiments will be needed in the Transvaal for some time to come.

We understand that up to the present time nearly £4,000 has been collected towards the fund for erecting a memorial to the late Prince Imperial. The sympathy of the United Services towards the above object is evidenced by the large number of members who have contributed, which includes Field-Marshals, Admirals, Generals, officers of the Staff of the Army at home and abroad, and the following regiments and departments:—Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, Household Brigade, Cavalry, Infantry, Brigade Depôts, Commissariat, Pay Department, Army Medical Department, Yeomanry, Militia, Volunteers, Native India Regiments, Volunteers, &c. As it is probable that the list of subscriptions will be shortly closed, intending contributors should forward their donations as soon as possible to either of the undermentioned Army agents:—Sir Chas. R. M'Grigor and Co.; Messrs. Cox and Co.; Messrs. Grindlay and Co.; Messrs. Vesey, W. Holt, and Co.; Messrs. Ridgway and Sons.

We find we did an injustice to Sir Henry Havelock last week when we included him among those who desire to see flogging entirely done away with. Sir Henry Havelock is one of those who hold that the punishment should be inflicted on service in all cases of crime arising from drunkenness, and it was only his dissatisfaction at the finding the Government was determined to yield to the abolitionists in the main points that caused him to act as he did last session, when the matter came before Parliament. He went out of the way to point out to the Secretary of State for War how utterly impossible it was to maintain discipline in the field without the use of the lash, and had his advice been taken, power would have been placed in the hands of commanding officers to at once put down any spirit of insubordination, such as that which has unfortunately tended so much to mar the reputation of British arms lately at the Cape.

The behaviour of the party of the Finland Guards, on the occasion of the explosion in the Winter Palace which blew up their guard-room and killed or wounded almost the whole of them, was simply splendid. Those who were not absolutely disabled positively refused to be relieved by another party until ordered off their posts by their own non-commissioned officers. Considering the liability even of the best and most veteran troops to panic from an explosion, the Finland Guardsmen, it must be admitted, displayed the best qualities of a soldier, and stood the severe test to which they were exposed in a manner which reflects undying honour on the regiment.

A society called the "Ladies' Aid Society" has been established, with offices at 9 Northumberland Street, Charing Cross, for the purpose of providing a light and suitable employment for ladies of limited means. At present this work consists of the manufacture of cigarettes, which work can be carried on by ladies at their own homes. These cigarettes are made of the finest tobacco, with great care, are below the price usually charged, and being made only in sufficient quantities to meet the demand, are fresh. Those who wish to obtain these cigarettes, which range in price from 4s. to 10s. per 100, are requested to ask for the "L. A. S." cigarettes. They can be obtained among other places at most of the co-operative stores. The undertaking deserves the best support of the public, for not only is the object an excellent one, but the composition of the committee is such that it cannot but inspire confidence. It is hoped in time to provide ladies with other work in addition to cigarette-making. Presidents of mess committees would help the widow or orphan daughter of many an old brother officer, were they to arrange that at least a proportion of the cigarettes consumed in the ante-room were those manufactured under the auspices of the "L. A. S."

Among the rumours which have disturbed Paris may be mentioned the report that all the able-bodied Germans in France (and the hotels in Paris are crowded with German waiters) had been ordered to rejoin their corps. This, however, has been denied by the Cologne Gazette. An unpleasant feeling has also been created in the French capital by the translation of a German skit in the style of the Battle of Dorking, but the countrymen of the writer triumph over both Russ and Gaul. France, under the dictatorship of M. Gambetta, suffers defeat, and in order to avoid further humiliation replaces M. Gambetta by Prince Napoleon, who consents to ratify the cession of Alsace-Lorraine, and to pay a war indemnity, not of 5, but of 12 milliards, the milliard being £40,000,000. England, in this imaginary campaign, sides with Germany, and that Power is consequently enabled to march an army through Belgium, and to come down on the French flank.

THE ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY.

H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge proceeded to Woolwich on Tuesday morning for the purpose of presenting commissions and prizes to the Gentlemen Cadets at the Royal Military Academy. His Royal Highness was met by Gen. Sir John Adye, R.A., Governor of the Academy. Gen. Sir D. Lysons was in attendance upon the Duke, and amongst others there were present Gens. Sir M. Biddulph, R.A., recently returned from Afghanistan; Radcliffe, R.A.; Turner, R.A.; Phillpotts, R.A.; Maclagan, R.E.; Col. Sir J. Stokes, K.C.B., R.E.

Gen. Beauchamp Walker, director-general of military education, presented his report of the recent examination of the first class, which consisted of 42 cadets, of whom 38 had passed, and were recommended for commissions, 7 in the Royal Engineers, and 31 in the Royal Artillery. In Artillery studies, the examiner, Major Ford, R.A., pronounced the class as rather below the average, and in Military drawing Major-Gen. Scott and Major Courtney, R.E., remarked that, even allowing for unfavourable weather, the work had not been quite satisfactory. The landscape drawing was certified by the Rev. W. Kinsley to be more deserving; the French, according to M. A. de Charente, was the best in his remembrance, but in the opinion of M. Capel, deficient; the examination in German by M. C. Schoell was described as very creditable. Capt. Annesley said that the riding and sword practice had been good; and Major Duncan regarded the artillery work good on parade, but imperfect on paper. As to mathematics and mechanics, the Rev. Canon Heaviside made no special report; and Professor Livesay, in commenting upon the study of chemistry and physics, said that it was of unequal merit, and hardly up to expectation. In fortification, both Gen. Hutchinson and Col. Graham were dissatisfied; and in Military history, although Col. Montgomerie reported an improvement, and recorded his approbation, Major Clarke was less pleased, and suggested an increase of marks to render the subject more attractive. In summing up, the Director-General reported that the result of the examination in general had not been up to the standard of previous classes.

Gen. Sir John Adye then presented his report as Governor of the Academy, in which he certified that the 38 cadets who had passed examination were well qualified, both in scientific acquirements and military exercises, to receive her Majesty's commissions as officers in the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers. Their average age was 19½ years, and they had resided at the Academy about two years. The general conduct, tone, and bearing of the gentlemen cadets during the past term had been satisfactory, notwithstanding the fact that two cases of misconduct had to be punished by periods of "rustication." The severe winter had somewhat interfered with drills, but not to any serious extent. The report went on to say that certain abnormal causes had recently increased the number of vacancies for officers in the Royal Artillery, and although the deficiency was partly met by a somewhat diminished demand from the Royal Engineers, the requirements of the Service rendered it necessary that an additional number of cadets should be brought forward for commissions during the next few months. This circumstance having been carefully considered, it had been decided, with the approval of his Royal Highness, to continue the studies until July without the usual interval of a month's vacation, so that batches of cadets will be ready for commissions at the end of May and July. General Adye considered that there was no real difficulty in meeting requirements. The estimated vacancies in the Royal Artillery and Engineers were about 75 per annum, but during the last few years, owing to changes as regards promotion and retirement of officers, the number of commissions presented had averaged about 90 per annum, the excess falling sometimes to one corps and sometimes to the other. The number of candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy remained, as usual, about four candidates to one vacancy, and at the last examination the average was rather exceeded, and the marks gained by the successful candidates were unusually high. In concluding his report, the Governor recorded his gratification at the support which he received from the staff and the gentleman cadets in maintaining the high reputation of this institution.

The names of the successful candidates were then read out, and each stepped to the front as his name was called. It was explained that Messrs. Dames and Guinness, who were entitled to join the Royal Engineers, had elected to serve in the Royal Artillery. The following is the list, and the number of marks gained:—

Col. Marsh, R.E., secretary and treasurer, read the list of prize-winners, and the prizes were presented by the Duke of Cambridge, as follows:—To Mr. E. H. Hemming, the Pollock medal, for distinguished proficiency, and prizes for artillery, military drawing, chemistry and physics, drills and exercises, and classics; to Mr. H. Huleatt, prize for military history; to Mr. R. S. Maclagan, the regulation sword for exemplary conduct; to Mr. F. L. T. Dames, the Tombs' Memorial Scholarship, as senior cadet for the Royal Artillery; to Mr. C. D. Guinness, prize for riding; to Mr. St. John Mildmay, for landscape drawing; to Mr. L. P. Carden, for gymnastics; Mr. J. E. Edmunds, for German; Mr. E. M. B. Newman, for French.

The Duke of Cambridge then addressed the cadets, congratulating those who had passed their examination upon having won their commissions, and the opportunity of gaining further distinction in the regiments they were about to enter. The report of the Director of Military Education was not quite up to the mark, but the deficiency might probably be ascribed in some measure to the unfavourable weather. Failure through inattention, however, was a fault which he could never overlook. He was pleased to hear so good a report of their conduct and discipline. He complimented them on being a fine body of young men, tall and good-looking, and he had no doubt that they would be a credit to their regiments. The Duke returned to town at 12 o'clock.

REGIMENTAL COMMANDS.

The Times says:—"It is understood to be the intention of the military authorities to take an early opportunity of appointing to other suitable positions those lieutenant-colonels commanding cavalry and infantry regiments who, having attained their grade before the abolition of purchase, were not included in the rule under which the period of regimental command is limited to five years. There are now 17 of these lieutenant-colonels. The necessity of removing them from their regiments arises from the fact that but for such removal they might retain their position until promotion to the rank of major-general—a period of probably eight or nine years in some instances—and thus injure, if not entirely destroy, the professional prospects of the officers junior to them, who are liable to be compulsorily retired if not promoted at the expiration of certain periods of service. The officers more especially liable to supersession in this way are the captains. During the present year very few—probably not more than a dozen—need be displaced; but in 1881 the rule will come into full force whereby a purchase captain of 25 years' service rendered over 20 years of age becomes ineligible for promotion, and a post-purchase captain of 20 years must leave his regiment. Many of the former entered the Service in 1855, and a still larger number of the latter in 1858 and 1859. The authorities are, therefore, not premature in taking measures to clear the way of the lieutenant-colonels serving under the old rules, and thus injuriously affecting those below them, whose prospects in some instances would be otherwise hopeless. These lieutenant-colonels, although not included within the five years' rule, are yet, like all officers of the Army, liable to displacement or removal at the pleasure of the Crown. In the days of Purchase, many of their predecessors in the rank were placed upon half-pay when changes were made in the establishment, notwithstanding the fact that heavy pecuniary loss was thereby entailed upon them. The removal now about to be made will cause, instead of pecuniary loss, a substantial gain to the officers concerned; the Staff appointments and brigade depots, to which it is proposed to nominate them, being more remunerative than a regimental lieutenant-colonelcy, while by their removal the new system of promotion and retirement will be brought into play in every regiment in its advantageous as well as its disabling provisions. The lieutenant-colonels thus affected are Cols. Nugent, Scots Greys; Montgomery Moore, 4th Hussars; MacGwire, 1st Royal Scots; Roberts, 5th Fusiliers; Waller, 7th Fusiliers; Davis, 20th Regiment; Mostyn and Prevost, 23rd Fusiliers; Glyn, 24th; Ruddell, 25th; Madden, 51st; Pigott, 70th; Macdonell, 71st; Kent, 77th; Brown, 83rd; Appleyard, 85th; and Stevenson, 87th Fusiliers."

Major Bayley entered the Army, Sept. 21, 1852; became lieut., Aug. 26, 1853; capt., April 28, 1857; and becoming major in his regiment, the 7th Hussars, in 1870, exchanged on Oct. 12 of the same year to the 16th, with Major (now Col.) ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The 24th Compy., now stationed at Portsmouth, are under orders to hold themselves in readiness to leave for Aldershot about the end of the month, when their place will be taken by the 29th Compy., from Gibraltar.

94th Regiment. The wives and families of the men are to be conveyed to the Cape in H.M.S. Orontes, which sails to-day from Portsmouth. Shepherd, who fell at Isandlwana, has just been finished at the works of Macdonald, Field, and Co., Euston Road. It is a massive tablet, 4 ft. high by 3 ft. wide, of white marble on a black marble background, having an elegant raised border and carved runic ornaments in the upper part of the design. Underneath the inscription, which records the name and age of the deceased, and the circumstances of his death, is the word "Isandlwana," in bold raised letters. The monument has been subscribed for by brother-officers and friends of Surg.-Major Shepherd, and it will be erected in the church of Leochel Cushine, his native parish in Aberdeenshire. It may be remembered that this unfortunate young officer might have escaped in safety from Isandlwana had he not dismounted from his horse to render aid to a wounded trooper, when he himself was struck down by the spear of a pursuing Zulu.

Veterinary Department. Vet.-Surg. W. A. Crow has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate.

2nd Royal Lancashire. The Liverpool Daily Post has the following:—"In reference to the proposed change of uniform of the Rifle Militia, it appears that the officers of the following regiments do not object to the alteration, viz.:—The Denbigh, Merioneth and Flint, Carlow, King's County, and South Mayo. As the 2nd and 7th Royal Lancashire do not appear in this list, it may be assumed that they are opposed to the change. Several of the Militia regiments were converted from redcoats to riflemen shortly after the peace of 1815, and the 2nd Lancashire became 'rifles' in 1855. They were embodied for permanent duty during the Crimean war, and left Liverpool in red coats, and returned in 1856 clothed in green. It should be remembered that in the old days it was not a mere change of dress but a change of arms also, the redcoats having smooth-bore muskets, and the greenmen carried rifles. The rifle had, however, become the regulation weapon for all infantry before the 2nd Lancashire were converted into riflemen. At the battle of Alma, in 1854, the 5th Division had smooth-bore muskets, and the remainder of the infantry had the new Minie rifle, but during the campaign rifles were served out to all. The 7th Royal Lancashire Militia were formed in 1855, and have always been a rifle ocrps."

1st (West) Norfolk. The Freemason announces the death of Brother Lieut.-Col. L'Estrange, who was found dead in his bed on Monday last. He had been in failing health for some little time past, but his death was quite unexpected. Col. L'Estrange served formerly in the 31st Regt., was appointed adjt. of the 1st Norfolk Militia April 17, 1859, and retired on pension in 1875. He held the appointment of Grand Superintendent of Norwich, to which office he was appointed by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales on June 24, 1879.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

26th Kent (Woolwich Arsenal Rifles). The Under-Secretary of State for War, Viscount Bury, presided on Saturday night at the annual distribution of prizes in the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich. Gen. Sir John Adye, R.A., Governor of the Royal Military Academy, who is Hon. Col. of the regiment, was upon the platform, together with Col. E. Hughes, 9th Kent (Plumstead) Artillery. The annual report, as read by Major Farrell, showed an increase in numbers during the past year, and an advance in the proportion of efficients from 91 to 92 per cent., while one company, Capt. M'Grath's, had 97 per cent. of efficient members. The corps had for the eleventh time won the chief prize at the county meeting, and had at Wimbledon and elsewhere maintained its shooting fame. Lord Bury, in remarking upon the rise and progress of the Volunteer force, said that 21 years ago there was no such thing as a Volunteer corps in England, and they felt, as Englishmen, that when the army was called abroad they were comparatively defenceless at home. Then sprang the Volunteer force from the heart of the people, and one of the foremost corps was that which he then addressed. He referred to his connection with the force, in which there were but three or four commanding officers senior to himself, and said that he had some facts to present which he was sure would be welcome to the Volunteers of the country. He had on the previous day presented to Parliament a return, and from the mass and maze of figures which it contained he had extracted only a few. In 1863, with which the returns commenced, there were 162,925 Volunteers enrolled, of whom 69 per cent. were efficient. The numbers gradually increased until 1873, when they fell off somewhat; but the standard of efficiency went up to 85 per cent., and now, largely as the force had increased during the last four years, the percentage had reached the satisfactory figure of 96 per cent. He presented these figures as the most satisfactory offering that he could give to the Volunteers. Sir John Adye, in conveying the thanks of the corps to Lord Bury, remarked that the Volunteer movement had not only added materially to the national defensive force, but had united the civil and military elements, had made military questions familiar to the people at large, and had rendered the Army popular throughout the country.

The sub-committee appointed a short time since by the committee of Metropolitan Volunteer Commanding Officers to go into the facilities for holding a Volunteer review next Easter Monday, on Saturday afternoon presented their report to a full meeting, held at the offices of the National Rifle Association, in Pall Mall East. The chair was taken by Lord Ranelagh. Lieut.-Col. Laurie proposed, Lieut.-Col. Baylis seconded, and it was carried unanimously, "That, subject to the approval of the Military authorities, a field-day of the Volunteers be held at Brighton on Easter Monday next." Mr. Knight, the general manager of the L.B. and S.C. Railway, attended the meeting, and gave full explanations of the facilities which, on behalf of his company, he was prepared to offer. The prices for conveying Volunteers will be 5s. each for officers, and 2s. 6d. each for other ranks. Horses will be charged at 10s. each, and guns will be carried free. The following commanding officers were then appointed to form a deputation to wait upon the General commanding the home district—viz., Lord Ranelagh, Lieut.-Cols. Sir T. F. Buxton, Hope, V.C., Routledge, Baylis, Vickers, and Wilkinson.

4th Goorkhas. A Reuter's telegram, dated Bombay, Feb. 17, states that "Lieut.-Col. Tytler has died at Thull of pneumonia." Col. J. A. Tytler, V.C., C.B., commanding the 4th Regiment, the officer referred to, served with the force under Sir Colin Campbell against the hill tribes on the Peshawur frontier in 1851-52; and in the Boori Pass in 1853 (medal with clasp). Served in the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1857-59, including the defence of the Kumaon Hills and Rohilcund against the rebels, and was shot through the left arm and received a spear wound in the chest while engaged in a hand-to-hand fight in the action of Choopoorah on Feb. 10, 1858 (Victoria cross); also served in the Oude campaign of 1858-59, including the actions of Pusgaon and Russoolpore, attack and capture of Fort Mittowlee, and the action of Biswah (medal). Commanded the 4th Goorkhas in the Umbeylah in 1863, including the assault and capture of the Conical Hill and villages of Lalloo and Umbeyla. Again in the Hazara campaign in the Black Mountatn in 1868 (clasp); and in the Looshai expedition in 1871-72 (clasp). He joined the Army Dec. 10, 1844, and became col. Dec. 10, 1875, and had commanded the 4th Goorkhas since Dec. 4, 1865.

5th Punjab Cavalry. A correspondent writes from Cabul:—"It is not unlikely that there will be a batch of 'V.C.'s' for the late fighting. Vousden and Hammond, of the 5th Punjab Cavalry, and Guides, have, I believe, been recommended for the distinction. Capt. Vousden's charge, on Dec. 14, is worth recording. With twelve troopers he charged several hundred men, who were streaming out of the city after being driven off the Asmai heights. He cut his way through the crowd and reached the city wall, and then rode through them again. Out of the twelve men who accompanied him, one was killed on the spot, one mortally, and four more or less wounded. The ten survivors have already been rewarded with the order of merit. With the exception of a native officer (a Punjabi Mussulman), they were all Sikh sowars."

2nd Madras Light Cavalry. Major H. R. E. Wellesley has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate.

10th Madras N.I. The death is announced of Major W. C. Bayley, Madras S.C., at Aditeegala, in the Rajahmundry District. He proceeded with his regiment a couple of months ago to quell the disturbance in the Godaveri, and during this short period his services were highly appreciated, as he always kept to the front while in pursuit of the rebels. The exact cause of his death is not known, but is believed to have been sudden. The date of his first commission is June 12, 1858, and he became a major June 12, 1878.

5th Bombay N.I. Capt. P. C. Heath, station staff officer at Hyderabad, has been appointed brigade-major of the 2nd Bombay Brigade, proceeding on service to Afghanistan.

11th Bombay N.I. Capt. W. F. Hume has been appointed an instructor of Army signalling and telegraphy in India, vice Lieut. Selby, R.E., proceeded on field service.

13th Bombay N.I. Referring to the Bombay musketry return for the last season, the Bombay Gazette says:—"We are glad to notice that the 13th N.I., which comes third on the list, has 59 marksmen, out of 372 men exercised. We note this with satisfaction, because it is the highest percentage of marksmen ever yet attained by a regiment of native infantry on this side."

17th Bombay N.I. Lieut.-Col. H. Vaughan, officiating commandant, died at Dharwar on the 24th ult.

21st Bombay N.I. The Bombay Gazette says:—"We have before us the last return of the musketry practice of the Bombay Army for the current year, and we cannot say that it is altogether satisfactory. That the Marine Battalion heads the list with the respectable figure of 82·54 is largely owing to the exertions of the late Capt. Becke, whose characteristic it was to throw himself heart and soul into whatever he undertook, whether work or pleasure."

25th Bombay N.I. The Bombay Gazette says:—"The 25th Regt. N.L.I. have had a very narrow escape of being kept another year at Aden, and had it not been for the strong report sent in by Dr. Moore, depty.-surg.-gen., on his recent visit to Aden, they would have been detained there until 1881. But Dr. Moore has reported that the regiment is so sickly from scurvy that it must be relieved as soon as possible, so the 14th Regt., which is still encamped at Vingorla, will go to Aden in relief, as soon as transport is available. The 2nd Grenadiers suffered so severely from being kept a third year at Aden, that the authorities naturally hesitate to repeat the experiment."

28th Bombay N.I. The Bombay Gazette says:—"The present Adjutant-General has laid it down as a self-evident proposition that "a good regiment cannot shoot badly," and it is understood in the Service that bad-shooting regiments will not be sent into the field. It is a somewhat curious commentary, then, on the above that the 28th N.I. is at the tail of the Army as yet, with the small figure of 49·46, and that the 28th N.I. has just gone to the front. But theory is one thing and practice is another, and every one knows that really good-shooting regiments often have very bad years, in which they fall off from their former high averages, and there are few steadier regiments in the Bombay Army than the 28th."

THE ARMY ESTIMATES.

The Estimates for the effective and non-effective Services for the ensuing financial year were issued yesterday, and they show a net decrease compared with the current year of £104,400, the totals being £15,541,300 for 1880-1, as against £15,645,700 this year.

The number of the forces proposed to be voted, including staff of Auxiliary Forces, is 131,859, being a net decrease of 3,766. The regimental number is 123,791. The decrease in the total numbers to be voted arises mainly from the reduction of the additional force of 3,900 men, added to the Estimates in 1879-80, in order to provide special reinforcements for the troops in Natal. The establishment of the Army Service Corps has been augmented by 40 men, and that of the Army Hospital Corps by 7 officers and 200 men. The difference between the net decrease on Vote A and the decrease on the regimental numbers is accounted for thus:—51 men are added to the staff of the Militia upon the augmentation of certain regiments; the Departmental Staff is increased by 63, chiefly owing to the introduction of the rank of warrant officer in the Commissariat and Ordnance Store establishments; and the Miscellaneous establishments are also increased by 36 officers and men.

Although the total number of officers in Staff employment is the same as for 1879-80, there is an increased charge on account of changes in the constitution of the Staff in South Africa. There is an addition to the item for contingencies of General Staff, chiefly due to the increased expenditure upon telegraphic communication. The proposed reduction of the regimental force causes a large decrease upon the item for regimental pay; but this is to some extent counterbalanced by the additional provision necessary in order to meet the growing expenditure for deferred pay. Owing to the arrangement under which stationery for regimental purposes will in future be supplied by her Majesty's Stationery Office, instead of being provided by the regiment out of a money allowance, the charge for this service will no longer be borne by Army funds. There is an increased charge for pay on account of length of service, and for additional clerical assistance hitherto estimated for regimentally. Increased pay for length of service in the veterinary department accounts for an increase in veterinary charges. There is a large increase in the sum taken for the purchase of horses, owing to the small amount provided for this service in 1879-80, in consequence of the reduction in the establishment of horses which was then contemplated. An increased vote is proposed for working pay of engineers employed in practice with torpedoes, and for instruction in field works. The payments to clergymen for officiating to troops at detached stations and at brigade depots are slightly in excess of the amount voted for 1879-80. Upon the items for pay of chaplains' department and for payment for buildings for divine service, there is, however, a nearly corresponding reduction.

The vote for Volunteer Corps is increased by £27,200, to meet the charge for capitation grants earned by a larger number of men than were returned as efficient for the previous year. There is also a further increase in the amount provided for Volunteers who attend regimental camps. Provision is made for the number of additional men who will pass to the Army Reserve during the coming year. Neither class of the Reserve will be called up for training in 1880-81. The decrease on the Commissariat Vote mainly arises from the reorganisation of the Commissariat and Ordnance Store Departments, under which the routine work of a subordinate character will be performed by quartermasters and warrant officers. The retirement of superior officers in consequence of the reorganisation throws some additional charge upon Vote 19. The fall in the price of provisions and the abolition of the special hospital ration of the Army Hospital Corps are the chief causes of the net decrease of £217,000 upon the vote for provisions, forage, &c. The increase upon the item for lodging-money is required in order to provide for the longer training of the Militia. Additional provision is also found to be necessary for the transport of the Auxiliary Forces. A reduced amount is estimated for iron ordnance, as it is intended that the supply of practice ammunition for machine guns, which was provided last year as ordnance, shall be made in the Government factories, instead of being obtained from private manufacturers. There is a reduction in the charge for the Royal Gun Factory, due to a partial suspension of work in consequence of the unsettled state of certain questions relating to ordnance; but an increase is provided for the carriage department and Royal laboratory, owing to increased demand both for land and sea service. The supplies of camp equipage, saddlery, harness, and miscellaneous stores obtained during the last two years has rendered it possible to make reductions in the sums to be provided under those heads of service for the coming year.

An increase of £117,600 for non-effective services is principally on account of the heavy additional charge for out-pensions of men now about to be discharged, who were enlisted at the time of the Indian Mutiny. A very considerable addition due to the same cause was provided for in the estimates of 1879-80. Upon the vote for unattached pay there is a decrease, in consequence of the effected and anticipated reductions in the number of General officers. There is likewise an important reduction in the amount to be voted for compensation to officers retiring from the Army by the sale of their commissions. This is, however, to some extent counterbalanced by the additional charges for pensions and retired pay to officers, including those retired upon the reorganisation of the Commissariat and Ordnance Store Establishments. The increase upon superannuation allowances, provides for the retirements consequent upon the changes in the establishments of the War Office and manufacturing departments.

The amount included in the vote for warlike stores estimated to be produced for the Royal Navy during the year is estimated at £303,000. The sum taken in aid of Army Estimates to meet the expenditure for raising and training the recruits, and for the non-effective services of the European army serving in India, amounts to £1,100,000, for which a separate estimate is presented. The sum includes £310,000 as the probable amount incurred in raising and training recruits for drafts to regiments on Indian service; £38,000 for pay of General officers; £100,000 for retired pay; £20,000 for widows' pensions; £390,000 for out-pensions. The extra receipts from the Indian Government to meet these charges are estimated at £1,100,000.

CANADIAN ARMAMENTS.

The Morning Post has the following:—"The administration of Sir John Macdonald in Canada will probably be remembered as giving considerable impetus to those military preparations which every strong and growing people deem necessary to inspire respect, and in this instance, to hold with power the all-important position of the great western wing, or flank, of the British Empire. There was a report that the Hon. Col. Masson, Minister of Militia, was likely to resign from ill-health, which would probably have delayed progress, as few Ministers could have taken a greater interest in the armaments he recommended, and to which he devoted considerable personal attention, such as visiting the depôts of arms, inspecting the manufacture of rifled cannon, and being present in person to see tests carried out in the firing of rifled cannon, to satisfy himself that such weapons could be made in Canada by Canadian workmen, and with Canadian iron. It is therefore with much satisfaction we learn that the Minister of Militia is restored to health. Not very long since some armed Russian merchant cruisers lay near Canadian waters, ready to pounce on the Canadian merchant fleet, in the event—then very probable—of Russia going to war with England. The harm these cruisers could have done would have been immense, and the losses inflicted on the Canadian marine would have taken years to recover; indeed, it is not going too far to say that the Canadian ocean trade would have, perhaps permanently, shifted to American bottoms. The Marquis of Lorne, his Premier, his Minister of Militia, and the General Commanding, Sir Edward Selby Smyth, appear to have been fully aware of this; for, now that the manufacture of cannon has been established in the country, a considerable number have been ordered to be made at once, with 6,000 shot and shell; and, further, the carriages are to be suitable for sea service, pointing to the supposition that, having already a very large seafaring population of the hardiest kind, together with an unequalled (excepting in England) supply of fine ocean steamers, the Canadian Government are making such preparations as will enable Canada to anticipate her enemies; and, in conjunction with the Royal Navy, to make a formidable demonstration, and so perhaps avoid the calamity of war. We are informed that a factory for the manufacture of cartridges for small arms has been established at Quebec, and that an officer of the Canadian regular artillery is coming to England, to receive instructions at Woolwich. It is with the greatest satisfaction we notice these steady and well-matured preparations. Hasty preparations under the panic of war are to be deprecated. Preparations under such circumstances are sure to be not only bad and wasteful, incurring a lavish expenditure of money, but they inspire an enemy with confidence. We trust the Canadians will not think us going beyond all bounds of expenditure, if we remark what a welcome sight it would be to see a Canadian man-of-war corvette with the British fleet in our home or foreign waters. Let Canada but lead the way, and her good example is certain to be followed by Australia and New Zealand."

SIR,—I have the honour to forward to your address, by this mail, a copy of the Peruvian paper La Patria, Lima, Oct. 18, 1879, containing what purports to be a representation of the Huascar, as she appeared in reality after her action with the Chilian ironclad. The paper was sent to me from Callao by a friend. Immediately on its receipt, I forwarded the paper to the Army and Navy Journal, of New York, with the remark that I thought the reproduction of the sketch in this country would prove of interest to the Naval profession generally. Subsequent accounts, received from officers who visited the Huascar shortly after the action, undoubtedly bear me out in my original supposition that the sketch conveyed a tolerably correct idea of the ship as she actually appeared at that time. From this explanation, you will see that in attributing the authorship of the sketch to me, your issue of Dec. 27, 1879, as well as that of Jan. 10, 1880, has been led into an error, which I would deem it a great favour if you were to correct.—I am, &c., S. B. LUCE, Captain, U.S. Navy.

THE "CARMICHAEL"
PORTABLE BOOT-TREE.

A want long felt has just been supplied by this most important invention. All sportsmen and military men know the great advantage of having both their long and short boots treed up every day, especially after they have been wet, but there is often great inconvenience in carrying about the boot-trees.

An officer in the 5th Lancers has lately hit upon the idea that an India-rubber tree, which, with ease, can be carried in the pocket, can, when put inside the boot, be inflated, filling out the boot tightly, and so making it an impossibility to shrink.

For officers on active service, autumn manœuvres, or whenever it is impossible to carry wooden trees, this invention will be invaluable.

This invention is patented for Great Britain and other countries.

Orders should be sent as early as possible, accompanied by an old boot as a pattern, to

Extract from the Civil Service Gazette of December 13, 1879:—"All classes of society will learn with the greatest satisfaction of an undoubted remedy for Neuralgia, Gout, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Nervous and Sick Headaches, Gravel, and other most painful disorders, which has been discovered. It is known as RUSSELL'S TIC-SANO, is of a vegetable nature, and is consequently of a completely harmless kind, and much to be preferred to the thousand and one remedies and so-called specifics which have already made their appearance amongst us. NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

R.M.A.—We quite agree with you in your admiration for the corps, but that is no reason why you should throw dirt at others; and your notions of jealousy are much exaggerated. If you will modify your language and enclose your card, we shall be pleased to hear from you again,

NAVAL MEDICAL SERVICE.—Yes; certainly.

NAVAL CADETSHIPS.—We have no sympathy with the agitators for open competition.

CONSERVATIVE.—Yes, if he has completed four years' sea-service as lieutenant. He wears the uniform of his rank, whether active or retired.

MANCHESTER.—So far as we can learn, there is no provision of the kind made; and the appeal, we believe, is a legitimate one.

X. Y.—The year passed at Sandhurst is net allowed to count.

POST-CARD, Guernsey.—Very many thanks.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1880.

THE Army Estimates for 1880-81 were published so late yesterday, that we cannot pretend to deal with them exhaustively this week. They are by no means of a sensational description, but are satisfactory in showing a diminution of £104,400, the amount for the coming year being £15,541,300, as against £15,645,700 for 1879-80. As to number, the net decrease is 3,766, the total number for 1880-81 being 131,859 officers and men. The chief cause of the reduction is the omission of the 3,900 who appeared in the last Estimate under the head of "Additional force consequent on dispatch of reinforcements to Natal. The other changes are, as usual, insignificant, and to be regretted. Nothing is so objectionable and foolish as the annual paring off a dozen men here, and adding half-a-dozen there. Why cannot the Authorities have a fixed establishment? They know perfectly well how many men they want. The increase in the estimates before us is Horse Artillery, 3; Cavalry of the Line, 27; Artillery, 31; Engineers, 30; Army Service Corps, 40; Army Hospital Corps, 207. The decrease is, Engineers, 5; Infantry, 349. In the Auxiliary Forces there has been an increase of 51 to the Staff, caused by the augmentation of certain Militia regiments. The Departmental Staff is increased by 63, chiefly owing to the introduction of the grade of Warrant Officers in the Commissariat and Store Departments. The miscellaneous establishments are also increased by 36 officers and men. The number of horses is increased by 54. We are glad to find that the estimate for the Militia is for 139,111 of all ranks, as against 137,556 for 1879-80. We hope that the additional men will be forthcoming, but we note with regret that the numbers present at last year's training only reached 113,184. The establishment for the Yeomanry is 103 less than for the current year, the number for which a vote is asked being 14,511, quite high enough, considering that only 10,508 were present at the annual training in 1878, since which time the force has not been called out for permanent duty. The establishment of the Volunteer Force is 245,648, being 463 higher than in 1879-80. The 1st Class Army Reserve is estimated at 23,000 men, being only an increase of 1,000 over the estimate for the current year, a most unsatisfactory result, considering how long the short-service system has been in existence, and that regiments have by it been rendered inefficient. Certainly the calculations of Lord Cardwell as to the growth of this Reserve have been proved terribly wrong. The 2nd Class Army Reserve remains at its old figure—namely, 24,000. Neither class of the Reserve is to be called out for training this year. With regard to the financial side of the question, we find that the saving effected in the number of men is, to a certain extent, counterbalanced by the provision for the growing expenditure of deferred pay. There is a saving through a new regulation, according to which, instead of adjutants receiving a stationery allowance,—part of which was spent on the clerks employed in the orderly-room,—the stationery will in future be supplied in kind by the Stationery Office. Both adjutants and orderly-room clerks, who generally received something extra from the former, will suffer by this arrangement. It is true that provision is made for extra clerks, but we fear that the amount sanctioned will not meet requirements. There is a large increase in the amount to be voted for horses, owing to the small sum asked for last year. One of the best features in the Estimates is the vote for £30,000 for the attendance of Volunteers at regimental camps, the sum asked for last year being only £10,000. The reorganisation of the Army Medical Department and the increase of pay sanctioned by the recent Warrant quite accounts for an increase of £42,000, under the head of Medical Establishments. Army Doctors, whatever may be their grievances, certainly cannot pretend that they are badly paid. Apparently there is to be an increase in the time of Militia training, for this is the reason assigned for the increase upon the item of lodging-money. In provisions, forage, &c., however, there is a decrease of £217,000, fully accounted for by the fall in prices, and the abolition of the special hospital ration of the Army Hospital Corps. In Clothing Establishments and Supplies there is an increase of £23,000, though upon the ordinary services included in this vote there is a considerable decrease. The net increase is to be partly accounted for by the relaxation of the rule requiring Volunteer corps to pay immediately for the supplies of clothing issued to them. A considerable expense will also be incurred by the very judicious step of providing soldiers on discharge with plain clothes, instead of allowing them to take away with them their regimental clothing. Under the head of warlike stores there is a decrease of £145,000, accounted for in three ways. Ammunition for machine-guns is to be supplied from Government factories, instead of, as hitherto, from private manufacturers. There is a partial suspension of work in the Royal Gun Factory, owing to the unsettled state of certain questions relating to ordnance. There is a large accumulation of camp equipage, saddlery, harness, and miscellaneous stores. We are heartily rejoiced to find that there is a decrease under the head of Administration of the Army of £16,800, caused by certain changes in the organisation of the War Office. In the non-effective Services there is an increase of £17,600, chiefly owing to the heavy charge for the out-pensions of discharged soldiers, who enlisted at the end of the Indian Mutiny, and also to the pensions of the discharged War-Office clerks and Commissariat officers. If there were a little more finality in our Military system, the charge for non-effective services would be substantially reduced.

It is reported, as we stated many weeks ago, that General Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B., will go to Aldershot; and if he does, he will, we believe, be succeeded at Pall Mall by Sir Garnet Wolseley, till such time as Sir Charles Ellice relieves Sir F. P. Haines of the command in India, when Sir Garnet Wolseley will assume the duties of Adjutant-General of the Forces. The latter appointment would cause a considerable change in the personnel of the military administration,—and it was always understood that Sir G. Wolseley was destined for a command far away from Pall Mall. He was to have left the Cape at the end of last month, but he had postponed his departure at the request of an order of the Government; but the news about Lord Airey's report and other matters may have led to his urgency in returning, and it is stated he requested the report might be held back till he arrived in England.

General Sir Edward Lugard, G.C.B., is about to retire from his appointment as Chief Commissioner of the Army Purchase Commission, and will not be succeeded.

A Committee, composed of Lieutenant-General Walker, C.B., Director-General of Military Education, of Major-General Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., K.C.B., D.Q.M.G., and Brigadier-General Sir H. E. Wood, V.C., K.C.B., commanding the Chatham District, is at present engaged in enquiring whether, under the present system, the Army derives the fullest possible benefit from the Staff College. It is generally believed that the recommendations of the Committee will be to limit the course of study to one year; to render certain certificates of military practical knowledge and of skill in riding, &c., compulsory, and a discriminating, an effective selection of really efficient Staff officers.

The appointment of Military Secretary to the General officer commanding the troops in South Africa is to be abolished. The Staff of the command, including Natal and the Transvaal, has been fixed as follows—viz., one lieutenant-general commanding, one colonel on staff, one D.A. and Q.M.G., two A.A. Q.M.G.'s, three D.A.A. and Q.M.G.'s, two brigade-majors, and three aides-de-camp.

Representations will, we understand, be made to the Horse Guards of the serious injustice which certain regimental Lieutenant-Colonels, who commanded their regiments in the Zulu campaign, have been made to suffer in consequence of their supersession by Lieutenant-Colonels Bond, 58th Regiment, and Rogers, V.C., 90th Regiment, and it is not improbable that all the officers will ultimately obtain the rank of brevet colonel from November 29 last, in order that they may occupy their proper position on the List, before Colonels Bond and Rogers. The officers referred to are the following, viz.:—Lieutenant-Colonels Parnell, C.B., 3rd Buffs; Gilbert, C.B., 13th Light Infantry; Degacher, C.B.; Pemberton, C.B., 60th Rifles; Tucker, C.B., 80th Regiment; Lambert, C.B., 88th Regiment; Bruce, C.B., 91st Highlanders; Malthus, C.B., 94th Regiment, and Welman, C.B., 99th Regiment, all of whom stood senior on the List to the lately promoted officers, and took the field with their regiments as substantive Lieutenant-Colonels.

It has been decided to erect quarters for the General Officer commanding at Aldershot, and a vote of £9,000 will be taken for the purpose in the 1880-81 estimates, the works being commenced with all possible dispatch. Hitherto, the officer entrusted with the command has had to seek accommodation in the vicinity of the camp. Sir William Knollys, it may be remembered, lived at Bagshot; Sir John Pennefather, at Tongham; Sir James Scarlett, at Forest Lodge, Farnborough; Sir Hope Grant, also at Farnborough; whilst Sir Thomas Steele occupies the residence known as Knellwood, close to Mr. Longman's seat at Farnborough.

The expenses of the Army Purchase Commission—the body constituted in 1871 to settle the claims of officers applying to retire from the Service under the terms of Lord Cardwell's Act—are, we are pleased to learn, to be considerably reduced; and in future, instead of the Chief Commissioner drawing the magnificent salary of £1,500, he will be employed only during a portion of the year, and paid according to the amount of time he devotes to his official duties. The sum fixed upon to be paid him will, we believe, be £375 per annum. Mr. J. C. O'Dowd's services will be continued as legal adviser, at a salary of £200,—this in addition to the £1,000 he draws as Deputy Judge Advocate-General; but the Second Commissioner will not be retained, and £180 will be saved by his services being dispensed with. Two instead of three clerks will carry out the subordinate duties, a saving being effected under this head of £545 per annum; the total sum being £1,873 per annum. This is a very judicious curtailment of expense, which will meet with hearty approval throughout the Army, for it has been evident for some time past that the work of the Commission has gradually diminished until it has become next to nothing, and that one at least of the members held a sinecure appointment.

The Secretary for War has not yet received the report of Lord Airey's Committee. The evidence will not be given in full, as some matter in the shorthand writer's notes is considered too strong for the general public. But will Lord Airey consent to this suppression? Is it fair to the witnesses, or to the members of the Committee, or to the country?

Brigadier-General Dunham Massy has made a very fortunate discovery of a safe and easy ford over the Cabul river, about eight miles from Sherpur. The energetic General was visiting the detachment of the 14th Bengal Lancers on January 16, at Butkak, when a sowar stated that there was a good ford at the junction of the Cabul and Logar rivers. Everyone laughed at the improbable intelligence, but General Massy, struck by the soldier's earnestness, put spurs to his horse, and, accompanied by Major Combe, of the 10th Hussars (his D.A.Q.M.G.), and by his escort, galloped to the spot, striking at about due north. The General plunged into the river, and was able to ride across with the greatest ease, the water not reaching to the girths of a small horse. This ford will be of considerable use, and if staked out carefully, will lead to the avoidance of any recurrence of the fatal accidents which have happened to parties of cavalry in crossing the treacherous river.

As an illustration of the hardships and injury to the Service caused by the delay in the appearance of the Royal Warrant concerning "boy-service," we may mention the following case:—A captain went on sick-leave from May to November last year. At the end of his leave, finding that there was no chance of his health being re-established, he resolved to retire. As, however, he ascertained that, according to the terms of the expected Warrant, he would receive £1,600, instead of £1,200, he applied for and obtained an extension of leave till the new Warrant's appearance. This long delay is very hard on the senior subaltern, an officer of long service, who thus loses several months of rank and extra-pay. There are, no doubt, many similar cases.

The following retirements take place from the Ordnance Store Department on its early reorganisation, under the terms of the recent Royal Warrant, viz.:—Assistant-Commissaries-General J. I. Lilley, A. H. Young, D. Gibbons, and J. Moore—these officers are all of them over fifty-five years of age—Commissaries C. W. Elphinstone-Holloway, G. A. Brunett, and W. G. Boyes; Deputy-Commissaries A. Montanaro, W. D. Bennett, W. H. Chambers, W. C. Gordon, J. C. Freeburn, W. H. Howell and H. M. Dunstan; and Assistant-Commissaries R. S. M. de Ricci and H. P. Burt.

The announcement from India that Sir Pomeroy Colley is going to succeed Sir Garnet Wolseley in South Africa, and that Lieutenant-Colonel H. Brackenbury is to be Private Secretary to Lord Lytton, if well founded, prepares the military and official mind for a variety of changes and surprises. But those which are to come will be great and startling enough, notwithstanding all this preparation. Sir P. Colley is an admirable officer, a tête-forte, with charming manner, and of a conciliatory, easy disposition, which is, however, quite absolute in dealing with Service matters; and as he knows the country and the people well, he will be able to do as much as can be done in reconciling the Boers to our aggression, and in dealing with the difficult questions which exist and are arising in Natal. Colonel Brackenbury is a very hard-working and capable official, whose selection is no doubt very much due to the excellent recommendations of Sir Garnet Wolseley, with whom he has seen most of his service, and who is well acquainted with his merits. He has written much and well, and has acted as special correspondent for the Press. He is a man who would be sure to make his mark in the Service by his natural ability.

The permanent staff of a Militia regiment in the Home District have, we understand, just forwarded to the Mansion House a subscription of a day's pay each, for the relief of the distress in Ireland. This is an example which might be followed by others.

BELLEROPHON. Very extensive repairs and alterations are to be carried out on board the Bellerophon. Her boilers are to be replaced by new ones, and her machinery thoroughly overhauled, while a variety of structural modifications are to be executed. Her armament is also to be strengthened, and is to be fitted with the electric light, prepared for the Whitehead torpedo, and to receive a Nordenfelt equipment. It follows, therefore, that she will be for a considerable time in the hands of the dockyard officials, and to this circumstance must be attributed the decision of the Admiralty to send her to Devonport.

BRITANNIA, Capt. H. Fairfax. On Saturday Mr. Anthony B. Sclater-Booth, cadet on board the Britannia, and son of the Right Hon. G. Sclater-Booth, died at the sick-quarters, Dartmouth, from congestion of the brain. Deceased had enjoyed good health up to a few days since. On Wednesday last he was to have joined Capt. Fairfax in a drive, but as he complained of feeling unwell, he remained, by Capt. Fairfax's advice, on board. On Thursday deceased was worse, and on Friday he was removed to the sick-quarters, where he died. Mr. Sclater-Booth was in his third term, and in all his studies gave promise of a bright career in the future. He was also very popular on board the ship. This is but the third or fourth death amongst the cadets on board the Britannia since that vessel was moved to Dartmouth, more than sixteen years ago. The remains of Mr. Sclater-Booth were interred on Wednesday at the Dartmouth Cemetery with full honours. A correspondent of the Western Morning News hears from the Britannia that the recent removal of seven cadets as unable to pass was very nearly increased to nine, but although the two who have escaped so narrowly have been allowed another trial, notwithstanding that they had twice been warned, their Lordships have been pleased to consider that there are some special circumstances surrounding these cases which entitle the boys to a further chance. One of the recently rejected was made the subject of a special appeal on behalf of his widowed mother, but the Board failed to see that there was anything to entitle that cadet to leniency, and the prayer was refused.

CONFLICT, Lieut.-Com. H. Archer. Letters received at Plymouth from Pentecost Island state that the Conflict called there respecting the murder of some British seamen. The surrender of the murderers was demanded, and, being refused, the village was burnt down.

COQUETTE, Lieut.-Com. Festing, was to leave the Piræus on Feb. 15 to visit Crete.

DRYAD, Com. J. Hext, arrived at Malta on Feb. 9, and left for China on Feb. 14.

FIREBRAND, Lieut.-Com. Sisson. On Jan. 1 the Firebrand arrived at Ascension from Sierra Leone, with mails for the Commodore and the Forester, and sailed on the 24th for Cape Coast Castle, to take on board the senior officer of the Bights of Benin Division. During her stay at Ascension, her Assistant-Paymaster-in-Charge (Mr. Cecil Reid) was invalided for debility, after fever and ulcers, following a severe cut and bruise on leg.—Western Daily Mercury.

FOAM is to be brought forward for another commission at Devonport. She has been surveyed, and an estimate of £6,830 has been submitted and approved. The repairs will be at once proceeded with.

HECLA, Capt. M. Singer. After an inquiry at Portsmouth, lasting eight days, the coroner's jury who have been inquiring into the circumstances attending the collision between the Princess Alice steam-packet, plying between Portsmouth and Ryde, and a sailing wherry conveying a party of men to the Hecla torpedo vessel, at Spithead, by which collision a leading stoker, named Henry Page, lost his life, have been unable to agree. They were locked up for several hours, and the coroner dismissed them at midnight on Wednesday, binding them over, however, to appear at the next assizes at Winchester. A similar course, it may be remembered, was pursued in the case of the collision between the Alberta and the Mistletoe.

INCONSTANT, Capt. Lord Walter Kerr (bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour), is expected to sail for the Mediterranean on Monday.

INVINCIBLE, Capt. the Hon. E. Fremantle, C.B., from Alexandria, arrived at the Piræus of Athens on Monday, and will remain for a while as senior officer's ship in Greek waters.

IRON DUKE, Capt. H. Cleveland, flagship of Vice-Admiral Coote, C.B. A correspondent of the Hampshire Telegraph says:—"Vice-Admiral Coote left Hong Kong on Jan. 2 in the Vigilant, having as guests Gen. and Mrs. Donovan for a trip to Canton. The Iron Duke is keeping up her name for readiness to enter into any sports and pastimes, and recently one of her cutters had an exciting race with a boat from the French flagship, the result being a dead-heat, so I am told. The Iron Duke was also getting up a rifle team to accept a challenge from the the police, and the match was to come off at Kowloon. I am sorry to hear she has lost a seaman named Allen, whose body was picked up on Dec. 13, it being supposed that he fell overboard when about to return to his ship from leave."

MALLARD, Lieut.-Com. H. B. Lang, was paid off on Wednesday morning, under the superintendence of Capt. Morant, of the Valorous.

MINOTAUR, Capt. H. Rawson, flagship of Rear-Admiral Hood, arrived at Vigo on the 10th inst. A correspondent, writing from the Minotaur, at sea, on the 4th inst., says:—"We arrived at Lisbon, after a rough passage from Portland, on the 10th ult., not having done our full-speed trial, as we anticipated. At Lisbon we met the Achilles and Newcastle. There has been a large amount of tactics practised on the Tagus by the steam-pinnaces of the fleet, but in consequence of the rapid current of the river, there was no torpedo practice, for had any of the projectiles sunk, there would have been little chance of their being recovered. We had many visitors of distinction, including the King of Portugal, who dined with the Admiral shortly after our arrival; and on the 28th the officers belonging to the whole of the ships were entertained by the King and Queen at the palace near Belem. We left Lisbon on the 29th, and are to cruise for ten or twelve days before anchoring at Vigo. We expect the Salamis to meet us this afternoon to take a mail for us and bring letters. We had prize firing last Friday, and, considering that the guns' crews are all new, the practice was exceedingly good, with the ship going at a rate of seven or eight knots. The crews of the fleet are continually being exercised at sail and water-tight-door-closing drill, while signalling by the steam siren is frequently performed. We are to stop in Vigo for a week, and then to cruise back to Lisbon, arriving there by the 28th. After a stay of ten days we shall sail for a two days' cruise to Gibraltar, where we shall remain for a week, and then start for Madeira, arriving early in April."

NELSON had her machinery examined at Spithead on Wednesday, after trial on the measured mile. She was under steam for several hours, and the results were in all respects satisfactory, the engines and machinery working remarkably well. Three runs were made at full power, two-thirds power, and one-third power. The speed and horse-power developed exceeded the contract.

ORONTES, Capt. Kinahan, sails from Portsmouth to-day with the wives and families of the men belonging to the 58th, the 2nd Batn. 21st, and the 94th Regiments, now at the Cape. On her return voyage she will bring home the 80th Regiment, and invalids and time-expired men.

POLYPHEMUS. In preparing the estimate for the completion of the hull and machinery of the Polyphemus, at Chatham, the sum of £134,000 was set down when the ship was designed. It has, however, been found possible to reduce this estimate by £30,000, the revised sum to be taken for the building and completion of the ship being now set down at £104,000. No date has yet been named for launching this new type of vessel,—steel torpedo ram. The steel-face armour glacis plates with which she will be defended will be supplied by Messrs. Cammell, whose experimental steel-face plates have so well stood the test on board the Nettle at Portsmouth.—Western Morning News.

REPULSE. The preliminary trial of the electric light on board the Repulse, which was to have taken place on Friday evening, has been postponed until Monday next, in consequence of the necessary arrangements not having been completed. The trial will be conducted by the Chief Constructor and the Chief Engineer of Portsmouth Yard.

RIFLEMAN, Com. J. Ingles, arrived at Malta on Feb. 16, en route for England, to pay off.

SIRIUS, Capt. G. L. Sulivan will be paid off at Devonport on the 26th inst. Recently, while the Sirius was lying in the Sound, a waterman slipped his hold and fell into the water, alongside, at night. The officer of the watch, Sub-Lieut. Gwynn, seeing something on the water, and imagining it to be a man overboard, though it was too dark to distinguish the object, immediately jumped over and swum for it, to be disappointed in finding a hat only. On his return to the ship, however, he was fortunate enough to seize hold of the by this time three-parts drowned man. Lieut. Gwynn hailed for assistance, and both were taken on board. At the time of the accident and rescue there was a strong tide and a hard breeze blowing, and the gallant young officer, who was in his night gear, is to be highly commended for his intrepid conduct, to which the saving of the waterman's life is wholly due.

VALIANT, Capt. W. C. Chapman. On Monday evening the quiet little town of Tarbet, on the banks of the Shannon, was aroused from its accustomed apathy by a concert in aid of the distressed Irish, given by permission of Capt. Chapman by the men of the Valiant, assisted by their officers and by men of the Coastguard stationed at Tarbet Island. The programme comprised vocal and instrumental music by the Blue-jackets, a negro selection by the Coastguardmen, and the old and ever welcome farce, "Box and Cox," in which Com. Boyes ably sustained the part of Cox, and Lieut. Needham was simply perfect in the part of Box, while Mrs. Bouncer was well represented by Lieut. Muirhead. All hands worked with a will to make the performance a success, under the direction of Lieut. Tatham, R.M.A., who must be congratulated on the result, as we understand that he will be able to send about £25 to be distributed by the Protestant and Roman Catholic clergy of the neighbouring parishes.

VICTOR EMMANUEL, Comdre. T. E. Smith. A collision has taken place between a steam-launch of the Victor Emmanuel and a steam-ferry, which ran into the Victor Emmanuel's boat amidships, and did her very serious damage.

VULTURE, Com. Elliot Pringle, was at Muscat on Jan. 24, on her return to the Persian Gulf from Bombay, where she had been flying the flag of Rear-Admiral W. Gore Jones, C.B., in the absence of H.M.S. Euryalus, flag-ship. The Vulture was to await the arrival of the Beacon, which was en route to Bombay, to have a flying deck fitted; and then, having a quantity of stores for the Ready, expected to proceed to Bushire, to meet that ship. The Vulture completed three years in commission on the 28th of last December. Having spent two hot seasons in the Persian Gulf, all hands are hoping to be relieved before the next one.

WIVERN, Com. J. G. Jones. arrived in Plymouth Sound on Saturday last, from Portsmouth. The six hours' final steam trial—which was satisfactory—took place on her passage down Channel. Various defects will be made good by the dockyard, before the ship will be ready to leave for China. She will be accompanied across the Bay of Biscay by the Raleigh. The Wivern has several defects in her machinery to make good, which will be attended to at Plymouth, but some of her additional fittings, such as a water-heating arrangement to enable torpedo launches to get up steam without loss of time, will not be completed until she reaches Malta. The reason for the Wivern going from Devonport to Portsmouth was to take on board a couple of second-class torpedo-boats, for conveyance to Hong Kong. When she arrived here, however, it was found that she was down to her load-line, and the dockyard authorities were reluctant to accept the responsibility of so overloading a vessel, whose seaworthiness is at least a disputed point, as to bring her down 6 in. further in the water. The result has been that the Admiralty telegraphed that the Wivern must return to Devonport without the boats.

The Admiralty have awarded medals for long service and good-conduct to the following men:—William Clarke, captain of maintop, and Alfred D. Wood, able seaman, of the Excellent; Thomas R. Colvill, leading stoker, of the Indus; Charles Palmer, leading stoker, of the Euryalus; James Chism, and Herbert Horn, commissioned boatmen; John Scott, chief boatman in charge, of the Coastguard.

Accounts which have reached us, says the British Medical Journal, seem to show but too plainly that the death of Rear-Admiral Hope, like that of Inspector-Gen. Domville, C.B., has been due to structural defects in the system of sewerage in connection with his official residence. It is stated that, when Admiral Hope entered on the duties of his post, the drainage of the official residences was investigated, and a considerable sum was expended on alterations and improvements. It would seem, however, that the system adopted was faulty, for complaints have since been made by a resident of bad smells supposed to come from the sewers, and it is said that more than one death from typhoid fever has occurred in the families of officers occupying houses within Devonport Dockyard.

The chairman of the Parliamentary Bills Committee of the British Medical Association had this week an interview with the Naval Lord of the Admiralty on the subject of the present position of medical officers in the Navy, which was recently brought under the notice of the committee. Subsequently, Mr. Hart forwarded officially to the First Lord of the Admiralty a draft scheme for the improvement of the position of the medical officers (which appeared last week in the pages of the Journal), together with a detailed statement of the reasons for the suggestions made. Mr. Smith, in reply, has given the assurance that "the subject shall receive his serious attention." It is understood that an Admiralty committee will shortly be appointed to consider the present state of the Naval Medical service, to which this memorandum will, with others, be referred.—British Medical Journal.

Mr. E. J. Physick, sculptor, has been commissioned to execute the memorial of the late Mr. Hogg, Vice-Principal and for thirty-four years mathematical master of the Royal Naval School, New Cross, which is being erected by former pupils and other friends, under the management of the Memorial Committee, and will be placed in the chapel belonging to the school.

MACHINE GUNS.—SHOEBURYNESS TRIALS.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The Select Committee appointed to inquire into and report upon the relative merits of different competing systems of machine guns re-assembled on Wednesday at Shoeburyness. The mitrailleuses under trial are the Gatling, Nordenfeldt, and Gardner. The Gatling gun differs materially from the original type, in that the bronze casing surrounding the barrels and breech mechanism gives it all the appearance of an old twelve-pounder brass howitzer. The Nordenfeldt gun has something of the appearance of an ordinary gridiron, mounted between two wheels, and the two guns competing are of five and ten barrels. The Gardner gun has but two barrels. The system admits of no more, as the cartridge cases are discharged at the side after use. The loading action of the Gatling is rotary, and since it is only on the striker igniting the cartridge that the extractor commences to act on the shell of the one previously fired, while no cartridge can be struck until it passes under the firing-surface, it is evident that in this system the mechanism is perfectly safe and free from all danger of explosion from jambed cartridges. In the Nordenfeldt and Gardner systems the loading action is horizontal, and as all the barrels are extracted and loaded by this horizontal motion of the tiroire, it is evident that should an extractor fail to act, the advancing cartridge is jammed with such force against the non-extracted shell, that an explosion, such as has recently occurred on board the Northampton, whereby the magazine was blown overboard and those serving the gun wounded, is at any time likely to take place. In this lies the great danger and drawback of the horizontal or tiroire loading system, a danger much intensified when Boxer cartridges are used, the yielding nature of their own cases rendering them utterly unfit for machine guns. This has been most conclusively proved by the last three days' experiments at Shoeburyness. On Wednesday the trials commenced by firing one round from each barrel of each gun as fast as possible at 500 yards' range, at a target; the divergence of the bullets, due to the recoil of the gun, being then noted. This was repeated five times, when it was ascertained that the Gatling was the steadiest system. Fifty rounds were then fired from each gun as fast as possible at the same range, but, owing to jambs arising from defective cartridges, neither the ten-barrelled Nordenfeldt nor the Gardner succeeded in accomplishing the task in any decent time. The five-barrelled Nordenfeldt fired the 50 rounds without hitch in about seven seconds, while the Gatling rattled off the rounds in four seconds and seven-tenths, the cartridges only jambing in the feed cases, which do not appear to have been accurately adjusted to the Boxer cartridge. Indeed, it may be said at once that the Gatling gun under trial is in no manner a perfect Boxer-cartridge-firing weapon. This is due to a mistake which is likely to cause the present experiments to prove abortive, and may necessitate a fresh series being commenced. For it appears that Sir William Armstrong and Mr. Nordenfeldt, having applied to the Government for 5,000 rounds of Boxer ammunition, wherewith to fire and adapt their guns to the requirements of the Committee, orders were given to extend to each competitor the same privilege. By some mistake the Westley Richard solid-drawn cartridge, forming the original Gatling ammunition, was sent to Sir William Armstrong, who forwarded the package over to America. Its arrival created quite a sensation. The generosity of the British Government was extolled, although it did seem rather like carrying coals to Newcastle to send 5,000 rounds of United States ammunition to America where it is made. It now turns out that these rounds should have consisted of Boxer ammunition. The mistake caused the Gatling Gun Company to send over a weapon constructed to fire the American ammunition. On its arrival at Woolwich, the Committee ordered the barrels to be altered and adapted to fire the Martini-Henry Service cartridge. This was done in a hurry, and the plungers, having been constructed for the smaller cartridges, do not strike the cap fair in the centre; hence it is what may be termed a misfit. It is to be presumed that this mistake will have to be remedied, as it is undeniably certain that the sole object of the Committee, and of the Government, is to secure the most effective weapon, and not to favour any invention,—unless it be, indeed, the Boxer cartridge. On Thursday the experiments consisted in firing with and without automatic gear and scattering motion, each gun firing for 30 sec., at 200 and 500 yards' ranges. The Gatling fired 198 and 171 rounds in the given time, the Nordenfeldt, owing to defective cartridges, but 79 and 158, but made up on Friday by firing 346 rounds in 30 seconds, after several jambs, and in two intervals. The Gardner also fired 202 rounds in the same time. The Gatling tried to fire 1,000 rounds. Eleven jambs took place. The case of a cartridge stuck in one of the chambers, and a lock had to be quickly removed, and the gun fired with but five barrels working, the sixth cartridge being thrown out each round. The faulty cartridges and cartridge-cases were preserved, and it is to be hoped that the authorities will examine them, for if any proof is wanted that Boxer cartridges are unfit for machine guns, it is to be found in the relics of the last three days, when, at times, the Gardner beat the other competing guns solely from the luck it had in the cartridges that fell to its share. It would be unjust to condemn any weapon on such trials; indeed, all those now competing have some special feature to recommend them, and some special use to which they can be adapted. The Gatling, however, is decidedly the safest system. Vice-Admiral Boys did all in his power to render things pleasant to the competitors, as did also Col. Macfarlane, R.A., Lieut.-Col. Maitland, R.A., Major King-Harman, R.A., Com. Custance, R.N., Capt. Adams, 52nd Regt., Capt. Lewis, R.E., and Capt. Bainbridge, the energetic secretary of the Select Committee. On Thursday Col. Alderson, of the War Office, visited the ground, with Capt. Bridge, R.N. Capts. O'Callaghan and Skinner, of the Royal Artillery, conducted the experiments most ably and to everyone's satisfaction, even to that of the inventors. These experiments stand adjourned until next week.

Some target practice has been carried out on Whale Island, Portsmouth, during the past week with the Nordenfeldt and Hotchkiss machine guns. The former, which fires a shot weighing half-a-pound, penetrated an inch-and-a-half plate at 300 yards; while the latter, which fires a shell a pound in weight, bulged the plate, without penetrating. Further tests are to be made on board the Comet, at a target at Spithead, while the ship is under way; and as the principal use of these guns is to sink torpedo-boats, which are seldom more than 3-16 in. thick, this will afford a much more practical trial of their comparative utility and efficiency. The Times says:—"The great defect in the Nordenfeldt is the liability to go off prematurely before the cartridges are properly in the barrels, with consequent danger to the whole magazine in the hopper exploding. We believe this defect has been confirmed by the practice at Whale Island, and by recent experience on board the Northampton."

The Hampshire Telegraph hears that "the competitive trials between the Nordenfeldt and the Hotchkiss guns will be suspended, until the report of the accident with the Nordenfeldt gun on board the Northampton has been received and digested at the Admiralty. Following so soon after the fatality on board the Comus, it is not to be wondered at if this new arm is looked upon with suspicion; and naval officers are beginning to think that their Lordships had better have allowed the Service to stick to the Gatling, in its improved form. It is in the cocking and loading device that the Nordenfeldt is defective, and experience has shown that there is danger of premature explosion of ammunition, either by the locks firing the charges before the breech is closed, or by the cartridges becoming jammed and being exploded during the loading process. We have just spent thousands of pounds in the experiments with the Thunderer's gun, so that the confidence of the Service in its guns might be restored, and steps must now be taken to sift the causes of the Nordenfeldt accidents, for the Service cannot have confidence in a weapon which slays the the operator, a crime which was never committed by the first machine gun used afloat, the Gatling."

ROYAL NAVAL RESERVES.

A report on the Naval Reserves made by Vice-Admiral Phillimore has just been laid before Parliament. From this report it appears that there are 79 lieutenants, 76 sub-lieutenants, and 107 midshipmen of the Royal Naval Reserve; and Admiral Phillimore thinks "it is desirable that the list of Royal Naval Reserve officers, both active and honorary, should be confined to a very limited number, so as to include only those noted for professional knowledge and distinction, capacity for service in case of war, and of social worth." The number of reserves sanctioned by Parliament is 30,000. The reserves, have, however, never attained that number, and the vote for several years has been for 20,000. Even this number is not obtainable in the present state of the mercantile marine, except by admitting a second-class reserve from the fishing populations, qualified for the duties of ordinary seamen afloat. The number of able seamen in the reserve fluctuates, as reported by Admiral Sir Walter Tarleton, between 12,000 and 13,000. The actual numbers in Nov., 1879, were 12,000 first-class, 4,962 second-class, and 76 third-class. Care has been taken, however, to eliminate from the first class all those who, in the first period of their enrolment, had settled down to a shore life, and given up the sea as a profession, and the present force is composed of a very fine body of seamen, the leading and best men of our merchant ships. The second class could be increased without difficulty, when thought politic. The third, which will, the Admiral hopes, form a very important element in our future reserves, and exercise an excellent influence on our mercantile marine, is composed of volunteers from the training-ships. At first sight, the number of able seamen who form the reserve bears a very small proportion to the 207,446 men who, according to returns furnished by the Board of Trade, formed the crews of the merchant shipping in the United Kingdom and Channel Islands in 1875. The analysis of these crews shows that deductions must be made for persons "other than seamen," such as engineers, firemen, artificers, servants, &c., of 121,000, and that (exclusive of masters and apprentices) the number of able and ordinary seamen employed was 82,474; deduct for foreigners, 16,070. From this number the able and ordinary seamen alone, who from desertion, imprisonment, misconduct, sickness, death, or other causes, never complete their engagements, amounts annually to 38,424, leaving apparently, as the number from whom the reserve must be selected, 27,986. As 12,000 able seamen are actually enrolled in the force, the proportion of those who do not volunteer is smaller than it appears, especially as a further diminution must be made for men physically unfit, and others disqualified by age, the limit of which for first entries is 30 years. Nearly six per cent. of those who do volunteer are rejected by the medical officers on examination. The Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Force has slowly but steadily increased, and consists of very zealous, active young men, who are animated by a desire of making themselves more useful citizens from being trained to arms. In 1879 the force of London (including Brighton and Hastings) numbered 440; Liverpool (including Bangor and Carnarvon), 601; and Bristol, 168; total, 1,209. Admiral Phillimore added:—"I think this movement will increase still more; but, whether it does so or not, the originators have no reason to be dissatisfied with the result, for there has been no capitation grant nor pecuniary allowance awarded to the force, which is essentially a volunteer organisation. They drill extremely well, and their practice at the great-guns is satisfactory."

The German ironclad squadron is to start on its annual cruise on May 3. It is under orders to go through a series of evolutions for the practice of the crews, in the Baltic and German Ocean.

THE ROYAL MARINE ARTILLERY.

SIR,—With reference to your article regarding the Royal Marine Artillery in your paper of the 14th inst., and your remark that a "sop" will be given to the seniors of that corps to induce them to retire, and to the captains a sort of "salve" to smooth matters over, whilst the subalterns will not be considered at all, it is as well to point out to you that the latter have greater and more substantial claims than the former, for the commissions of the older officers are, it is supposed, for service in the "Royal Marine Forces," whilst the subalterns of the last few years hold theirs in the "Royal Marine Artillery." There is also another great and material point to be considered, as they obtained their commissions by open competition. These young men, in the first instance, went up as candidates for Woolwich, and in the examination-room were requested to sign a paper, issued through the Commander-in-Chief's office at the request of the Admiralty, to notify whether they would accept the Admiralty's offer of a commission in the Royal Marine Artillery on certain conditions, one of which was a long (two years) and severe course of study at the Royal Naval College, at Greenwich. Could these young men, whose attainments are of the highest nature, have foreseen that the corps in which they entered after so great a trial would be either disbanded or amalgamated with the Royal Marines, they would naturally have preferred going to Woolwich for either the Royal Artillery or the Royal Engineers, and doubtless would have done so, if it had not been for the Admiralty's letter offering them their commissions in the Royal Marine Artillery, thus inducing them to abandon their intended career in the other scientific branches of the Services. Therefore, you will see, should these proposed alterations be carried out, how hardly and how unjustly they will press upon the junior officers, who have qualified and complied with all the Admiralty requirements in every respect. Consequently, how much greater their grievance will be, if their prospects are blasted in that branch of the Service which the Admiralty induced them to enter. It must be remembered, it was not of their own seeking originally, but the Admiralty led them to select the Royal Marine Artillery. If, as you say, the Committee "is of a one-sided character," the whole proceedings should be at once quashed. You justly remark, that the Royal Marine Artillery is the finest corps in her Majesty's service, and it is certain that the officers are the most highly educated and most scientific of any; and it will indeed be well for the authorities to pause before interfering with such officers and trained men who have done good service to the State, and are ready again to do the same, and whom, in view of the dark cloud rising over the continent of Europe, the nation may have cause to feel thankful of possessing, should emergencies arise. If Admiral Sir Cooper Key, as some paper said, is the chief mover of this radical change, the weight of a great responsibility to the country will rest upon him, and will have to be accounted for, and it is hoped her Majesty will ponder well ere she gives her consent to any measures affecting a corps which was so highly esteemed and regarded by her uncle, William IV,, who acknowledged how greatly "they had contributed in the reign of Queen Anne to the establishment of the Royal family on the throne of these realms."—I am, &c.,

Q. C.

SIR,—I was much pleased to see in your issue of Saturday last that you advocated making the Royal Marine Artillery into garrison brigades of Royal Artillery. May I be permitted to point out to you that in the second of three articles on the Royal Artillery in the columns of a morning contemporary on the 20th December last, I suggested the same thing, and that the most simple way of dealing with this corps would be to transfer them as they now are, over to the War Office, as a valuable addition to the Royal Regiment of Artillery, for garrison brigade duties, for which they are specially qualified? I had just then seen the Royal Marine Artillery at Portsmouth, and certainly a finer set of men I never witnessed on parade, or smarter officers. I thought they seemed particularly fitted for heavy-gun work. My suggestion, I know, was taken notice of by the Committee at the time, and I have been surprised at not seeing in your already excellent remarks on the subject some similar suggestion on your part. Last Saturday's issue, however, convinced me that other and better heads than mine were now putting the suggestions prominently forward. It appeared to me, when making it, so simple a way of dealing with the question, that there can be no practical difficulty about deciding it. I trust there will not be now, even at the eleventh hour. I spoke to several Royal Artillery officers of rank about this point, when writing on the subject of the regiment, and asked if there would be any objection on the part of the regiment to the addition, putting it to them that it would ultimately extend the area of promotion, commands, staff appointments, &c. These officers agreed with me that such would be the effect, and that the arrangement would give a very valuable increase to the strength of the Royal Artillery, also that there could be no insuperable objection to the amalgamation.—Apologising for trespassing on your space, I am, &c.,

W. J. ELLIOTT, late W.O. Staff and Reserve.

[It is only "if, therefore, they are not required for duty at sea," that we put forward the suggestion that the Marine Artillery should be converted into Garrison Brigades R.A. For our own part, we should much regret to see the R.M.A. taken from the Naval Service, for it is Artillery more than Light Infantry that the Navy really wants, with ships of the later types.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

SIR,—Without wishing to draw invidious comparisons, which although at the present day not uncommon, is none the less to be deprecated, allow me to point out that your leading article on the 14th inst., relative to the Committee now sitting to consider the reorganisation of the corps of Royal Marines, more particularly as to the proposed abolition of the Artillery branch of that service, will tend to mislead those of your readers who have not full knowledge of the subject. You state that "the majority of the Committee appointed to consider the reorganisation of the Royal Marine Artillery is unquestionably of a biassed, and thus one-sided character." The actual composition of this committee is two Naval officers, three officers of Royal Marine Artillery, and three of Royal Marine Light Infantry, exclusive of the Royal Marine Light Infantry officer acting as secretary. Where is the biassed and one-sided majority? If any, it would be on the side of the Artillery, considering that the branch thereby represented consists of about 3,000 men, more or less, whereas that of the Infantry branch numbers upwards of 10,000. Your remarks would further lead one to suppose that the Naval element of the committee was antagonistic to the interests of the Artillery branch. What are the grounds for assuming this to be the case? The observations drawing a comparison as to the educational qualification existing between the Royal Marine Artillery and Royal Marine Light Infantry are hardly borne out by facts as regards three-fourths of the officers now serving, as up to only a recent date the examination for both branches was identical. Formerly, the vacancies for the Royal Marine Artillery were offered to the competitors in their order of merit, but this arrangement was subsequently modified, by making the test for that branch of the Service a superior knowledge in mathematics, to the exclusion of other subjects. For instance, in June, 1866, the candidates who passed in order of merit 1 and 2 were given commissions in the Infantry branch, No. 3 being appointed to the Artillery, he having obtained more marks in mathematics than Nos. 1 and 2. Can it be said that the educational attainments of the one were superior to those of the other two? I quite agree in your remarks that the Royal Marine Artillery is one of the finest bodies of men in the Service, but the question of its abolition or otherwise should not be made the opportunity for drawing a distinction at the expense of the corps which gave it birth.—I am, &c.,

UNBIASSED.

SIR,—I quite concur with your leading article of last week respecting the Royal Marine Artillery; but it would seem that there are a few points beyond those mentioned by you which call for consideration. By reference to the Navy List for the present month, you will see there are six subalterns posted to the Royal Marine Artillery who competed at the last Civil Service (Woolwich) examination. Now, it is manifest that at the very time when these commissions were given, it was known in the Admiralty that there was an idea of abolishing the Royal Marine Artillery as a separate corps. Is not the above misleading the officers just referred to? Take the case of the subalterns, who have studied their profession six or seven years,—how fares the matter with them? If they object to be transferred to the Light Infantry, why, they can of course resign, and commence life de novo—a pleasant prospect! In all service there is an implied, if not a written, contract on the part of the employed to render a faithful service, and on the part of the employer to render a just recompense. On either side, no infringement of this implied contract should be committed without due compensation. To carry out the proposition of amalgamation with the Royal Marine Light Infantry will form an endless, as well as fertile, source of contention. As a parent, who had his son trained, specially, for the Royal Marine Artillery, and would have refused for him the Royal Marine Light Infantry, I feel particularly strongly on this point; and I do not hesitate to say, that I will do my utmost to show up the enormity of the injustice, by every means in my power; and I intend, unless I get some early satisfaction, to bring it forward in a quarter where answers can be enforced.—I am, &c.,

The funeral of Rear Admiral Hope, Admiral Superintendent of Devonport Dockyard, took place at the Naval burial-ground of the port on Monday, with full Service honours. The coffin was placed on a gun-carriage, and drawn by seamen of the Indus, the late Admiral's flagship, and the procession, which extended for about a mile, was composed of the naval and military officers representing every branch of the two services in the port and garrison, the heads of the various Government establishments, a large number of civilians, a hundred metropolitan policemen, a funeral party of 500 seamen, and a firing party of 500 Marines. The weather, which had been stormy throughout the earlier part of the day, cleared up in time for the ceremony. The eight paul-bearers were the Commander-in-Chief, Admiral the Hon. Chas. Elliot, C.B.; Lieut.-Gen. the Hon. Leicester Smyth, commanding the Western District; the captains of the Raleigh, Royal Adelaide, and Impregnable; Col. H. P. Newton, R.A., commanding officer of Artillery in the district; the District Commissary-General, Deputy-Comy.-Gen. Dowes, C.B.; and Col. Heasty, Commandant of the Royal Marines. The procession was sadly marred by the crowd, which broke in upon it, and the funeral service in the burial-ground had been completed long before the rear of the procession could obtain entrance to the ground.

The Vega arrived at Naples on Saturday, and Professor Nordenskjöld and his companions received a hearty welcome. In the evening, they were entertained at a banquet.

A beginning has been made in the erection of the proposed Naval barracks at Portsmouth. They will be built on neither of the sites originally suggested, viz., on Whale Island and adjoining the Portsmouth Hospital, but within the dockyard enclosure, at the extreme eastern corner between the Unicorn Gates and the Round Tower. They are to accommodate about 1,000 men, but it is not intended at present to more than dig the foundations and prepare the ground. In fact, it is not intended to proceed with any of the contemplated new works at any of the dockyards which are estimated to cost more than £500, so that the vote for new works in the forthcoming estimates will display a very important reduction. The necessity for retrenchment will put a stop to nearly the whole of the proposed improvements here.

INDIA.

The Statesman of Calcutta says:—"The arrival in India of Gen. Olpherts, C.B., V.C., one of our most distinguished soldiers and commanders, will no doubt be shortly followed by his appointment to some post of high charge and responsibility. Knowing nothing of official secrets, we cannot tell in what particular sphere the authorities propose to utilise his great experience and the high qualities which he has exhibited on so many fields. But we cannot suppose that in these stirring times, an officer like Gen. Olpherts will long be left unemployed. If his high rank be an obstacle to his receiving a command in the field, the Madras Army is calling aloud for such a man as Gen. Olpherts to take the Command-in-Chief."

The Government has sanctioned the formation, in the Quartermaster-General's Department in India, of an Intelligence Branch, to which three officers will be attached, each representing one Presidency.

The Lahore paper hears from several quarters that considerable difficulty is found in recruiting for the Native Army.

In consequence of the removal of Lieut.-Gen. W. B. Salmon, Bombay S.C., to the Retired List, the name of Major-Gen. G. Verner, Bengal S.C., has been placed on the list of Lieuts.-Gen., and that of Col. R. Phayre, C.B., Bombay S.C., on the list of Majors-Gen. of the Indian Army. Major-Gen. Verner has also been removed to the Retired List, and the names of Major-Gen. the Hon. Sir H. Ramsay, K.C.S.I., C.B., Bengal S.C., and of Col. J. H. Babington, Madras S.C., have been placed on the lists of Lieuts.-Gen. and Majors-Gen. respectively.

It is said that Brevet Lieut.-Col. the Hon. A. Stewart, C Brig. R.H.A., will succeed Col. Preston as Military Secretary to H.E. Sir Frederick Haines.

The Military Governorship of Cabul, held by Major-Gen. Hills, V.C., C.B., has been abolished.

The Viceroy decorated Sir F. Haines, Sir G. P. Colley, and Sir R. G. Sandeman with the Insignia of Knight Grand Commander and Knight Commander of the Order of the Star of India, respectively, on the 12th ult., at Calcutta.

Cols. C. C. Ekins, and J. M. Nuttall, C.B., Bengal S.C., are about to retire from the Service.

The Government proposes to give to the Secretary of State for India in Council the power of curtailing the outfit allowances of the higher Indian officials, and of reducing some of the salaries and allowances in the ecclesiastical establishment. With this view, Mr. Edward Stanhope has introduced a Bill authorising the Secretary of State in Council from time to time to fix, alter, or abolish the allowances for equipment and voyages of the Governor-General and the members of his Council, the Governors of Madras and Bombay and the members of their Councils, the Commanders-in-Chief of the Forces and of Madras and Bombay, and the Bishops and Archdeacons of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay. At present, the allowances are fixed by an Act of 1813 as follows:—To the Governor-General, £5,000; to each member of his Council, £1,200; to the Governors of Madras and Bombay, £2,500 each; to the members of their Councils, £1,000; to the Commanders-in-Chief of the Forces, £2,500; to the Commanders-in-Chief at Madras and Bombay, £2,000 and £1,500 respectively.

The last-announced batch of retirements from the Indian Service contains the name of Col. H. S. Rammell, of the Madras S.C. Col. Rammell, it will be remembered, commanded the Madras troops in the Rampa disturbances. His health has broken down by exposure in that little campaign, and he has been ordered home by his medical advisers. We hear that his services have been brought to the notice of the India Office by Sir Neville Chamberlain.

Lieut.-Col. E. M. Norrie, Madras S.C., has been appointed an assist.-qrmr.-gen. on the Madras Establishment from Dec. 1, 1879.

The Indian Medical Service is very sore about the Secretary of State's order in the Gazette of India of Jan. 3. It abolishes the following appointments:—The Surgeon-General, I.M.D., with an income of £3,240 per annum, and extra pension of £350 per annum; six Deputy-Surgeons-General, I.M.D., each with an income of £2,160 per annum, and extra pension of £250 per annum. This, we are told, simply ruins the service, unless compensation is obtained. It is proposed to insist upon the "Henley Clause." "If," says a member of the Indian Medical Service, "we quietly accept the new order, we shall be acquiescing in our own ruin."

The Viceroy has paid the Volunteers a compliment by appointing Col. Graham, Commandant of the Calcutta Rifle Corps, to be ex officio an honorary aide-de-camp on the personal Staff of his Excellency.

A telegram to the Times, dated Feb. 15, states that "the Nagas have again assumed the aggressive. They attacked the Nichi (native) guard near Samaguting on the night of the 11th, but were beaten off, without loss on our side. There have been no fresh raids in North Cachar, and the military authorities deem the precautions adopted there sufficient. This does not, however, appear to be the opinion of the planters of the district, who insist that a stronger military force is necessary for their protection. The Government has sent a supply of rifles for distribution among the tea gardens. Nearly all the coolies who deserted after the raid on Baladhan have returned to work. The Baladhan raiders were, it is believed, men of Konoma, the village which three months ago offered such obstinate resistance to our troops. Paplongmai, a village in the south-west of the Naga Hills, has been captured by a flying column under Lieut. MacGregor, and some slight skirmishes are reported near Konoma."

To an inquiry by the Government of India, whether it is the intention of her Majesty's Government that the brevet rank for length of service, heretofore granted to officers of the Indian Services should entirely cease, the Secretary of State has replied that, considering the circumstances under which the rank was originally introduced, and the fact that its immediate cessation would lead to the supersession of some Staff officers and majors and captains of cavalry, under the old conditions of service, by the officers of the General List, he considers that these brevet promotions should not cease in each rank, until the extinction of that rank among the officers of the Local Service.

The following appointments are gazetted to the Viceroy's personal Staff:—Lieut.-Col. W. L. Dalrymple, 88th Foot, to officiate as aide-de-camp, dated Jan. 8, 1880. Lieut. G. C. Kitson, 60th Foot, to officiate as aide-de-camp, vice Capt. Lord W. L. De la P. Beresford, V.C., 9th Lancers, resigned. Lieut. B. M. Hamilton, 15th Foot, to officiate as aide-de-camp, vice Lieut. A. F. Liddell, R.A., on field service. Lieut.-Col. W. L. Dalyrmple, 88th Foot, officiating aide-de-camp, to officiate as military secretary, with effect from Jan. 21, 1880, vice Major A. C. W. Crookshank, proceeding on field service, and during the period Col. (Brig.-Gen.) T. D. Baker, C.B., may be employed on field service, or until further orders.

The following appointments have been made to the Staff of the Bombay Army:—Lieut.-Col. B. H. Pottinger, R.A., Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., to be Deputy-Qrmr.-Gen., vice Col. A. G. F. Hogg, Bombay S.C., whose period of service on the Staff has expired. Major J. Jopp, Bombay S.C., to be an Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen. on the Establishment, vice Col. Pottinger, dated Dec. 9, 1879. Capt. T. Harris, 66th Foot, to be a Deputy-Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen. on the Establishment, to fill an existing vacancy. Lieut.-Col. B. H. Pottinger, Deputy-Qrmr.-Gen., to officiate as Qrmr.-Gen., in succession to Brig.-Gen. Burrows, proceeded on service. Major F. J. S. Adam, Bombay S.C., Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., to officiate as Deputy-Qrmr.-Gen., vice Lieut.-Col. Pottinger, dated Jan. 23, 1880. Capt. A. B. Stopford, R.A., Deputy-Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., to officiate as Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., vice Major Adam.

MILITIA ADJUTANCIES.

SIR,—If you could elicit information for me on the following point, you would confer a favour on many of your readers. A friend of mine lately applied for the adjutancy of a Militia regiment, in his own sub-district. He was given to understand that, being over 45 years of age, and over 25 years' service, he was not eligible; and that, as the late adjutant had belonged to one of the linked regiments, the appointment would be offered in the first instance to the captains of the other regiment. I cannot find "book or chapter" for this, and if it be a new rule the sooner it is made known, the better.—I am, &c.,

SCEPTIC

Memoirs of Madame de Remusat. Published by M. Paul de Remusat. Translated by Mrs. Cashel Hoey and Mr. John Lillie. (Sampson Low and Co.)—It would be difficult to name a more interesting work than the Memoirs of Madame de Remusat. In addition to being a thoroughly connected narrative of some of the most important events in French history, it abounds in anecdote, particularly as regards the First Consul, some of whose adventures are sketched with a piquancy and frankness which cannot fail to charm the reader.

The Standard says:—"It is not proposed that any steps shall be taken to mark the services of officers generally during the latter phases of the war at the Cape, pending the return to England of General Sir Garnet Wolseley. Sir Garnet will, however, be called upon to recommend for reward those who have been the more conspicuous for their zeal and devotion to duty."

An important order has been received at Portsmouth with respect to the Canada and Cordelia. The auxiliary rudder has not given complete satisfaction in the ships of the Comus class which have been tried at sea, and it has been determined to introduce an important modification in the two ships building at Portsmouth. Instead of the auxiliary rudder being fitted at the stern, it will be placed under the forward dead-run, where a box is constructed into which it will be lifted when not wanted. It will be worked through the keel by means of manual gearing well under the water-line, and in design closely resembles the bow rudder with which Messrs. Yarrow have provided their recent torpedo boats. The new rudder is upon the balanced principle.

We regret to have to record the death from drowning of a man of the Coastguard of Rickham station, near Salcombe, when endeavouring to save a man from a wreck. The vessel was within fifty yards of the rocks, directly under Rickham station. The rocket was fired across the vessel, and the line was caught; the vessel in the meantime striking on the rocks. Just as the man had got the line in his hands a heavy sea struck the vessel, going completely over her, followed very quickly by another sea, which washed the man overboard, clinging to the rocket-line. The men on shore then began to pull him through the surf on to the rocks by the line; those so engaged being two Coastguards named Keast and Clements, and three young men. The two Coastguards were standing nearest the edge of the rocks, but the sea was breaking over all of them. They had pulled the man close to the rocks, and it is supposed that Clements stooped to catch hold of his hand, when a heavy sea washed over them, carrying the two Coastguards off the rocks. Keast retained his hold of the rocket-line, and was got back again, although much bruised by coming in contact with the rocks. Neither Clements nor the man was seen again, and it is thought the seaman must have so clutched the hand of the Coastguardman as to carry him away. So great was the sea, that the vessel was dashed to atoms in about five minutes after striking the rocks. During the whole of the time the vessel was driving ashore, no more than the one man was seen on board, and it is supposed the rest of the crew were washed overboard.

NOTICE TO GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS AND OTHERS.—Macniven and Cameron's Pens are the best invented, and it is only bare justice to the patentees to record the fact.—Shrewsbury Journal. Special quotations may be had from the patentees, direct or from their own stationers. EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.—CAUTION.—These effective and agreeable confections are sold by most Chemists. By others, however, attempts are often made at substitution. We therefore deem it necessary to caution the public that they can only be obtained in boxes, 6d and 1s; labelled JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, 48 Threadneedle Street, and 170 Piccadilly, London.

ROYAL UNITED SERVICE INSTITUTION.

Com. V. Lovett Cameron, C.B., R.N., read a paper yesterday afternoon, before a large audience, at this institution, on his travels in Mesopotamia, especially with reference to the proposed Euphrates Valley Railway. Gen. Sir W. Codrington presided. The author described the route over which he travelled, from Cyprus to Beirut, crossing the Lebanon to Homs. Any body of troops concentrated at or near Homs, and having railway communication with Tripoli, would command the whole of Syria behind the range of the Lebanon. If ever the Suez Canal was to be threatened by an army marching from Asiatic Turkey, that army would have to pass through the districts around Homs; and a force there might easily be reinforced from Cyprus, if the railway to the coast be constructed. From Homs to Hamath, with the exception of crossing the Valley of the Orontes, at Rusta, there was scarcely any work to be done, and the whole country was fertile. At Hamath the Valley of the Orontes was gradually left, and the whole distance from there to Khan Shaykh Khaun was almost perfectly level. Marah was the next point, and from thence to Aleppo. Owing to the commercial importance of Aleppo, and the number of pack animals constantly passing through, transport and supplies for a very considerable body of men might easily be collected there; and as it commanded the routes to Syria, Iskanderun, Aintab, and those of the Euphrates Valley and Mosul, it would always be a place of the greatest strategical value. If the line were commenced, as most people considered it should be, at Seleucia or Iskanderun, very much greater engineering difficulties would have to be encountered than by the route he had traced out. The fertile regions of Homs, Hamath, and Idlib would be left unprovided for, and if an army from the north or east had managed to possess itself of Aleppo, there would be no means of opposing its advance on the Suez Canal, through Syria and Palestine; whereas, even if Aleppo should be in the enemy's hands, we could, by the line advocated by the author, pour in troops and supplies from Tripoli on Homs, and there make a second stand to cover our great waterway to the East. The lecturer then proceeded to sketch his route from Tedif, Hierapolis, Urfa, Mardin, Nisibin, and Mosul. It was a question whether it would be better to cross the Tigris at the latter place, or continue on its right bank as far as Baghdad. If the river was crossed at Mosul, a very much more difficult country would have to be traversed, two other rivers, the Greater and Lesser Lab, would have to be crossed, and the railway would be open to raids from the east. If the right bank was followed, the railway would be protected its whole length by the river, and the distance was much less than if the line passed by Erbil and Kerkuk. Having traced the course of what he hoped might be the first section of the Indo-Mediterranean railway, the lecturer remarked that instead of its being a rival to the Suez Canal, it would prove a most satisfactory ally, and would enable us to thwart any attempt on our present lines of communication with India. By steamers from our now first-class port of Kurrachee to Bushire, troops could be conveyed from our Indian possessions to the railways, which would place them in the commanding positions in the battle-fields of Armenia, there to find themselves met by their brothers-in-arms arriving from Cyprus and other places des armes in the Mediterranean. The lecturer was frequently applauded during the delivery of his paper. In the discussion which followed, Col. Champion contended that unless the proposed line could be supported by local traffic, it would not be desirable to construct it. The cost of trans-shipment would be very great, and few passengers would be found to travel by it, owing to the excessive heat. Mr. Scott Russell discussed the subject in its relation to through communication between Europe and India, to English interests, strategetically, and with reference to the prosperity of the country through which it would pass. Mr. Haddon considered the route sketched out by Commander Cameron was the best that had been suggested for facility of railway construction. Gen. Sir John Adye pointed out that the line proposed would necessitate trans-shipment of goods, and consequently would be a failure. There were greater objections to the route from a military point of view, because portions of it would pass through Turkey and the frontier of Russia, and it being liable to attack, would be not only useless, but positively dangerous. The discussion was continued by Capt. Colomb and other gentlemen.

Obituary.

The death is announced of Lieut.-Col. T. M. Byrne, unattached, whose name stood second on the Seniority List of Lieutenant-Colonels. He entered the Army in 1824, and served as a captain in the Royal Scots during the Crimean war. He was desperately wounded in the trenches before Sebastopol, and incapacitated from further active service, the Horse Guards awarding him unattached promotion and a distinguished-service reward of £50 at the close of the campaign.

Capt. Baldwin Arden Wake, who was recently drowned at Nanaimo, British Columbia, was born in January, 1813, entered the Navy in 1827 as a first class volunteer on board the Espoir, and was employed for some time at the Cape of Good Hope. He afterwards joined the Falcon on the West India station, and subsequently served in the Forester, and also the San Josef and the Racehorse. On his promotion to a lieutenancy in 1837 he joined the Melville, bearing the flag of Sir Peter Halkett, the Commander-in-Chief on the North America and West India station. He was promoted to the rank of commander in 1849, and became a captain on the Retired List in 1866. The gallant officer was several times instrumental in saving life at sea, and his conduct on those occasions was acknowledged by the Royal Humane Society.

Rear-Admiral Charles Webley Hope, whose death in his 51st year we briefly recorded last week, entered the Navy in 1841, passed his examination in 1847, and obtained his commission as lieutenant May 11, 1848. As lieutenant he served in the Arrogant, 46, commanded successively by Capt. Robert Fitzroy and Robert S. Robinson, from March 13, 1849, till May 20, 1852, when he was transferred to the Prince Regent, 90, Capt. Frederick Hutton, as flag-lieutenant to Rear-Admiral Armar L. Corry, in command of the western squadron; and on March 7, 1854, removed into the Neptune, 120, in the same capacity, and proceeded to the Baltic: and on Aug. 2 was advanced to the rank of Commander. He was appointed to the command of the Prometheus, 5, paddle-sloop, on the West Coast of Africa, Jan. 19, 1856, and brought her to England, and was paid off in the summer of 1857. On May 4, 1859, he obtained command of the Flying Fish, fitting for particular service, and was posted from that ship on May 15, 1861. His next command was, August 29, 1864, of the Brisk, fitting for the Australian station, and returned with her to England, and was paid off Jan. 19, 1869. He afterwards successively commanded the Wivern, Invincible, and Audacious, employed in Coastguard service in the River Humber, from April 5, 1870, until April 30, 1873; and the Resistance, attached to the Channel Squadron, from Jan. 23, 1875, until April 1, 1877. He was a Naval aide-de-camp to the Queen from Feb., 1873, until advanced to flag-rank, Aug. 1, 1877, and had been admiral-superintendent at Devonport since Feb. 1, 1879. Admiral Hope was author of a useful little pamphlet on the Education and Training of Naval Officers.

Amusements.

No novelty has been produced at any theatre during the week, though in many instances the performances have undergone a change. The season of the Carl Rosa company at HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE will be prolonged at least another week, and this extension of time has afforded the opportunity of adding to the repertory an English version of Verdi's popular opera of "Aida," neatly rendered by Mr. Henry Hersee.

At the PRINCESS's has been revived Mr. Boucicault's realistic drama of the "Streets of London," originally produced here in August, 1864, when it ran for 209 consecutive nights. The scenic effects are not quite so good as they were formerly, but this is possibly explained by the intimation that the term of the revival is limited to a month. Mr. Charles Warner, who now plays Badger, the man of many vicissitudes, gives a highly effective rendering of the character.

At the GAIETY has been played Mr. Byron's cleverly-constructed four-act drama, called "Blow for Blow," originally brought out at the Holborn Theatre, under the management of Miss Fanny Josephs, in September, 1868. Mr. Beveridge and Miss Louise Willes as John Drummond and Mildred Craddock effectively support the serious interest of the play, and Miss E. Farren and Mr. Edward Terry make the audience merry by droll embodiments of Kitty Wobbler the vivacious and Charley Spraggs the musical.

Laughter of the heartiest kind, raised by the most legitimate means, is now to be heard at the OLYMPIC, where that admirable comedian, Mr. John S. Clarke, is nightly diverting crowded audiences by his highly humorous and thoroughly artistic impersonations in the drama of "Red Tape," and the old comedy of "The Heir-at-Law." As a dramatic study, exhibiting a singularly minute attention to all details of change of feature, and form of gesture, Mr. John S. Clarke's Dr. Pangloss must secure a foremost place in the estimation of the modern playgoer. From the top of the bushy wig to the really talkative tongue of the shoe-buckle, the impersonation is complete.

The pantomime season at COVENT GARDEN terminated this week, and on Monday morning next a special performance of a very diversified and attractive kind will be given for the benefit of Mr. F. B. Chatterton, whose star has not been in the ascendant since the disastrous termination of his last Drury Lane campaign.

A pleasant little sketch, entitled "Castle Botherem; or, an Irish Stew," written by Mr. Arthur Law, and furnished with some tasteful music by Mr. Hamilton Clarke, has been successfully added to the always pleasant entertainment of Mr. and Mrs. German Reid. The amusing trifle is very vivaciously rendered by Mr. Corney Grain, Mr. Alfred Reid, Mr. Alfred Bishop, Miss Edith Bruce, Miss Lucy Williams, and Miss Hudspeth, who has been added to the lively company engaged at the ST. GEORGE'S HALL.

The DRAMATIC FINE-ART GALLERY, just opened at 168 New Bond Street, will be found to possess considerable interest for all caring about the memories of old theatrical celebrities, or curious about knowing the varied talents of those connected with the modern stage. The original works of actors and actresses display an amount of unsuspected skill in portrait and landscape-painting that will astonish the outside public, by showing how comprehensive are the artistic powers of many of their most esteemed favourites. The pictures executed by Miss Genevieve Ward, Mr. Frederick Vokes, Mr. W. H. Kendal, Mr. Charles Lyall, and Mr. Sothern are especially commendable, and the fine portrait of Mr. Henry Irving as Charles I., painted by Mr. James Archer, forms a conspicuous feature of the collection.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.—The most effectual cure for Gout and Rheumatism.—A frequent cause of these complaints is the inflammatory state of the blood, attended with bad digestion, lassitude, and great debility, showing the want of a proper circulation of the fluid, and that impurity of the blood greatly aggravates these disorders. Holloway's Pills are of so purifying a nature, that a few doses taken in time are an effectual preventive against gout and rheumatism; but anyone that has an attack of either should use Holloway's Ointment also, the properties of which, combined with the effects of the Pills, ensure a perfect cure. The Ointment should be thoroughly rubbed into the parts affected at least twice a day, after they have been sufficiently fomented with warm water to open the pores, to facilitate the introduction of the Ointment to the glands.

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.

The PUREST. The MOST PALATABLE. The MOST DIGESTIBLE. The MOST EFFICACIOUS.

Incontestably proved by Thirty Years' Medical Experience to be

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

SIR GARNET WOLSELEY'S Report, in answer to the allegations made by Dr. Russell regarding the conduct of the troops in South Africa, has been published in the shape of a Parliamentary paper. It opens with a letter, dated January 1, from Sir Garnet Wolseley, in which, before making any inquiry at all, he commits himself to the statement that Dr. Russell's allegations "grossly exaggerate any acts of disorder which may have been committed by a few individuals," &c. He concludes by saying that he has directed the Landdrosts and magistrates of the several districts in which troops have been quartered, to "report specifically on the various assertions referred to." On January 16 he forwards reports from the Landdrosts alone of the various towns and districts in the Transvaal in which troops had been quartered between the 1st July and 10th October. He states that he directed the Landdrosts to confine their reports to the period mentioned, because it was not till after 1st July that any troops from Zululand were moved into the Transvaal, and the letter of Dr. Russell was dated the 10th October. One of the charges of Dr. Russell was that there had been much housebreaking, burglary, assault, and robbery, and that the gaols and scenes of convict labour were filled "with men wearing her Majesty's uniform." Sir Garnet asserts that up to the date of the article, only seven of these offences had been committed by soldiers, and that only two soldiers had worked in or out of the gaols in uniform as civil prisoners. With reference to reports from Landdrosts of outrages to the residents, Sir Garnet declares that only two cases had been reported. Another report of damage to some deserted buildings, he says, was made direct to the Administrator of the Transvaal. Dr. Russell's assertion that soldiers were awaiting trial for murder, Sir Garnet disposes of by saying that no soldier had been accused of murder in the Transvaal. One soldier was tried and acquitted in Natal. Dr. Russell wrote that, with few exceptions, all the houses in Heidelberg close at hand had been broken into, and that other stations were nearly as bad; Sir Garnet meets this by saying that out of the forty houses in Heidelberg, only three had been broken into, and that in no case had the offence been traced to soldiers. At Leydenburg, one house was, Sir Garnet admits, broken into by a soldier. At no other town was any house broken into. He denies, on the authority of the Landdrosts, that any women fled on account of the conduct of the soldiers. He equally denies that Utrecht had suffered since the departure of Sir Evelyn Wood. No house was broken into, the Landdrosts speak well of the behaviour of the troops, and only one soldier was convicted of a civil offence and assault upon a native, for which a fine of 2s. 6d. was inflicted. The allegation that an inhabitant of Herdelberg had said that the soldiers had "cleared out the poultry-yards, broken into all the canteens, and most of the stores, ransacked our houses, and stolen even the church clock," Sir Garnet meets with the following statement of the Landdrost:—"Poultry yards were cleared out, but not traced to soldiers; the presumption is that the boys and natives attached to the Commissariat did most of it. Canteens were broken into, but not reported; also one of the stores, not reported nor traced. The church clock was stolen, but not traced." Sir Garnet considers it absurd to suppose that a soldier on the march would steal a church clock, which he could neither dispose of nor conceal in such a place as Heidelberg. Quitting the specific allegations, Sir Garnet says that the accusation of treating in an easy way serious evils falls to the ground, because there were no serious evils to be dealt with. Indeed, he considers that the conduct of the troops was very good. An Oriental commences a letter with compliments. Sir Garnet does the reverse, and winds up with what may be termed an official slanging, using very hard words towards Dr. Russell, and comically regretting that he did not refer to unofficial personages, in order to ascertain the truth of the reports which reached him. So much for Sir Garnet Wolseley and the official side of the question. Let us now look on the unofficial side. The inquiry, considering the vast area of which it was the subject, was carried out with remarkable speed, for only on January 1 was the Colonial Secretary ordered to grant the co-operation of the Transvaal Government in making it, yet it was closed within 15 days. No Court of Inquiry, or Committee, was ordered to investigate the matter; but simply certain cut-and-dried questions were sent, not to the landdrosts and magistrates, but to the former alone. Now the landdrost is simply a juge d'instruction, and cannot take action unless requested to do so by the public prosecutor or the police. In the Transvaal the police, as civil police, are almost non-existent. Clearly, therefore, Sir Garnet—in his haste, we presume,—did not adopt the best means for ascertaining not only the truth, but the whole truth. There is also no doubt that it was well known what sort of answers would be most grateful to his Excellency, who naturally has a great moral influence over all his subordinates. Sir Garnet confined, as we have seen, his inquiries to the Transvaal, and to the period between July 1 and October 10. But Dr. Russell's allegations had reference to a much wider area, and a far longer time. Neither did he confine himself to accusing the troops of having committed civil offences. He spoke, on authority which he either mentioned or offered to mention, of scares in the field, and of drunkenness, as well as of housebreaking and outrages against the civil population. He referred alike to Zululand, Natal, and the Transvaal. On this ground alone, therefore, the inquiry—if it can be so-called—is valueless. But even if we admit the restriction of time and place to be justifiable, we fail to see that Sir Garnet has succeeded in disproving Dr. Russell's statements. Indeed, in some instances, he unintentionally confirms them. There may have been only seven soldiers convicted of civil offences in the Transvaal, but that by no means proves that many other offences of the same nature were not committed. Indeed, Dr. Russell's chief point is that outrages of every sort were committed with impunity. Only two soldiers may have worked in uniform, as prisoners for civil offences, but many others may have been undergoing hard labour in uniform, under sentence of court-martial, for crimes for which in England they would have been handed over to the civil magistrate. As to Sir Garnet's assertion that no soldier was ever accused of murder in the Transvaal, we, of course, accept his assurance that such was the case, and concede that Dr. Russell has been in error. It may, however, be pointed out that he did not refer to the Transvaal alone, and that the one soldier acquitted in Natal, he only got off by the skin of his teeth. The defence of the conduct of the troops at Heidelberg is almost amusing. This is a very scattered station, and some of the outlying houses are at a considerable distance from the main group. Dr. Russell alluded to the houses "near at hand." Now in all Heidelberg there are only forty houses; and of these, two liquor-shops and one store, were, by Sir Garnet's own admission, broken into; and, after all, much depends on what he calls broken into. A house may, in a certain sense, be broken into, without the door having been so forced as to be conspicuously injured. But, says Sir Garnet, none of these cases were traced to soldiers! By that, we suppose brought home to soldiers is meant; and what Dr. Russell complained of is that crimes of this sort were not brought home to individual soldiers, for otherwise the offenders must have been punished. As to the denial of the statement that women fled from fear of the soldiers, we are inclined to think that the landdrosts were not possessed of sufficient energy and zeal to thoroughly carry out the inquiry in the large districts with which they are connected. Of Utrecht, Dr. Russell only asserted that it had suffered somewhat, but did not say that any house had been broken into. The Landdrost of Heidelberg admits that robberies and outrages took place, but merely says that these offences were not traced to soldiers. As to the stealing of a church clock, there is no accounting for the eccentricities of a larcenous or mischievous soldier, and the useless plunder may have been buried or destroyed. Sir Garnet affirms that only at Leydenburg and Heidelberg were houses broken into. The Landdrost of Middleburg, however, says that a charge was brought against three soldiers of assault and breaking windows in the Cook's Hotel, but that it broke down from the contradictory nature of the proof and difficulty of identifying the offenders. On the whole, considering the machinery employed to make the inquiry, the short time allowed for the latter, the fact that after all only a comparatively small number of troops were in the Transvaal between July 1 and October 10, and the natural unwillingness of the inhabitants to leave their homes to prosecute, we cannot admit that Sir Garnet's refutation of Dr. Russell's charges is satisfactory. The latter gave positive, the former only supplies negative evidence. Dr. Russell is impartial, Sir Garnet and his civil and military officials are not. To suppose that Dr. Russell made wilful mis-statements is absurd. Equally so is it to imagine that he, with his wide experience of camps, made mountains out of mole-hills. While as to his being the victim of a hoax, that cannot well be, unless several hundred jokers combined to deceive him. The official mind may consider Sir Garnet's report perfectly satisfactory, but we do not think that the public will take the same view. At all events, the matter cannot end here, and it will be necessary for Dr. Russell to give, as he has offered, names and dates.

On subjecting the Army Estimates to a more careful analysis than we had time for last week, we find little to add to our criticism. They are by no means of a sensational character, and afford no symptoms of any great deviation from the usual routine during the coming year. It is pretty clear, too, that no recommendations which may be made by Lord Airey's Committee will be carried into effect for another twelve months,—at all events, not to any considerable extent. The aggregate differences between the amount of money and men for the current and the coming year are slight, The net decrease in money is £104,400, but on deducting the extra Exchequer receipts for both this and last year, it will be found that the actual decrease is only £1,115, and that the Army will really cost something under fifteen millions. Probably the amount will be considerably smaller, owing to the extra regiments detained in India, and which will certainly not return to England till the winter. As to the number of men, it is 376 under the estimate for the current year, chiefly owing to the reduction of the 3,000 men sent out as special reinforcements to South Africa. Owing to the reduction of these, the Army is now some 350 above its establishment. It is to be hoped that a regular advantage will be taken of this circumstance to get rid of some of the bad characters and weakly men, who are only costly encumbrances to the Service, and of slightly raising the height and chest measurement of recruits. We should regret very much to see the equilibrium restored by either stopping recruiting, or transferring a large number of men to the Reserve before the completion of their six years. The First-Class Army Reserve is evidently a complete failure. Of course, a Reserve is necessary, but setting aside the fact that to obtain one we have sacrificed the efficiency of the first line, the numbers are very far short of the sanguine estimates in which Lord Cardwell and his admirers indulged. A vote is taken for the coming year for 23,000 men of the First-Class Army Reserve, showing an increase of 1,000 over the numbers estimated for a year ago. This number is very disappointing, and, what is worse, it is doubtful whether we shall get it. On January 1 last, the actual number of effectives was only 16,651, not 22,000, the number voted; and making a small deduction for vacancies in the force during the next 12 months, it would be necessary to pass 7,000 men into the First-Class Army Reserve during the coming year. Of course, that process can be performed by still further sacrificing the efficiency of regiments, but not in any legitimate way. The establishment of the Militia is 139,111, being an increase of 1,555 men, but this estimate is evidently delusive, for there were present at training during 1879 only 113,484 of all ranks, the absentees from various causes numbering some 24,000 men. We are convinced that a large proportion of these absentees consisted of bounty-jumpers, men who enrol themselves in two or more regiments at once, and we would suggest the advisability of a simultaneous muster. The Yeomanry Cavalry is also rather a paper force, for, whereas in 1878-79 the establishment was 14,614, the number present at training was only 10,508, or rather more than two-thirds of the total nominal strength. Last year, there was no regimental training; this year, the Yeomanry are to be called out for eight days. Turning to the Volunteers, we find matters far more satisfactory; the establishment is now 245,648, being an increase of 643; and the number of efficients in the year ending October 30, 1879, amounted to 194,191. The long item for the cost of the War Office has long been an eyesore, to all who look at military matters with an unofficial eye. Apparently, this year, there has been a decrease of expense to the extent of £16,000, but on turning to the superannuation vote, we find that against this must be set the greatest part of a sum of £10,464 odd, granted in pensions to reduced War-Office clerks. Reorganisation is, indeed, an expensive amusement for War Ministers. Indeed, an enormous sum would be saved, and increased efficiency obtained, if we avoided the annual petty charges which the framers of the estimates annually indulge in. As the Pall Mall Gazette, in a very able article on Wednesday, pointed out, we do not fix the establishment with any regard to the well-considered needs of the country. What we ought to do, is to determine what force we need for the efficient defence of the United Kingdom and foreign dependencies, add to that the number necessary or advisable for continental expeditions, and arrange the number and strength of our cadres accordingly. It would always be possible to make a larger or smaller addition to the fixed minimum peace establishment, as exigencies arose, but we should have something to go upon, and should be spared the absurdity of taking off a dozen men from one branch of the Army this year, and adding on a score to another branch next year, and so on. The difference in and the number of the establishments are productive of great inconvenience. At present, in Infantry alone, including the European Army in India, we have no fewer than eight establishments! Another point dwelt upon by the Pall Mall Gazette is, that whatever force we consider necessary to keep prepared for foreign service, should be in every way fit to embark at a moment's notice. Surely that lesson has been sufficiently impressed upon us, yet it does not seem to have been earnt by the War Office. In taking leave for the time of the Army Estimates for 1880-81, we cannot refrain from expressing a hope that a little more information will be afforded next year. Even those people who are accustomed to study estimates, and are well acquainted with military matters, find it difficult to trace the sources of expenses and to institute comparisons with former years. To the ordinary M.P., the task is quite hopeless, yet it is chiefly for the information of the ordinary M.P. that the Estimates are compiled.

It is not our province to enter into any discussion on the rival merits of the two great systems of loading heavy artillery, but the present seems to be a fit time to consider the necessity of adopting that of Breech-loading. While we cannot find fault with the Authorities for not having introduced this system somewhat sooner, we feel bound to support the resolution of the Admiralty to commence the introduction of heavy guns on the breech-loading principle. The primary advantage of loading at the breech is economy of time. Other considerations are subordinate to this; and as a set-off in favour of loading at the muzzle, we have in the breech-loader a more or less complicated mechanical structure, and consequent liability to disorder and weakness, which does not exist in the muzzle-loader. For five-and-twenty years, modern muzzle-loading guns have been subjected to almost every condition of service, and have, on the whole, given the greatest satisfaction, and it has been found in practice that while breech-loaders have been in many instances dangerous weapons to work, they have shown no superiority as regards rapidity of fire to their opponent guns. In the Navy, the favourite of one class is, perhaps, the 40-pounder Armstrong, a long-ranged, easily-handled, finely-proportioned gun, the 7-inch Woolwich gun being a favourable specimen of the other. Both of these, however, are nearly obsolete in the days of 80-ton and 100-ton guns. Experiment has determined that the power of a gun—cæteris paribus—depends on the length and chambering of the bore. Now, with a gun loading at the muzzle, the first necessarily increases the time required to load it, while the second renders it impossible to sponge the gun properly without a special contrivance in the head of the sponge. With the breech-loader, on the contrary, neither the length nor chambering of the bore has the least affect on the rapidity of loading, &c. The system is equally applicable to a very short or very long gun, so that if it be decided to continue loading at the muzzle, and retain the possible power of the gun, rapidity of firing must be sacrificed. Another strong point of the breech-loading system is, that it enables a gun in a certain position to be worked with ease when, under other circumstances, it would be too long to be mounted. This is very applicable to the armament of a vessel-of-war, as it is absolutely necessary that the whole breadth of the deck shall not be occupied with gun-slides, &c. It may be true that the "breech-loader is useful in one position and the muzzle-loader in another." The same might be said of the 32-pounder carronade and the 18-pounder long gun; but if we are to believe Mr. James, the latter was the favourite with those who had to use them, and whose lives and honour often depended on the effect their shot produced on an opponent's vessel. Tom Cringle, whose "Log" is about as true to nature as anything in print, states therein that he had often seen the shot from the former drop off a ship, while at a longer range the ball of the latter crashed through both her sides. It is also a most important consideration to avoid different systems of loading, as each requires special training to work it effectively, and the difference in stores, &c., leads to endless confusion. It would not be wise, neither would it be practicable, to effect one immediate sweeping change from the muzzle to the breech-loader, but it cannot be too strongly urged on the Authorities to remove gradually the old guns, and supply in their places those of the new construction. The advantage of such a course of action is evident. For example, by increasing the length and chambering the bore of a 6½-ton gun, it is possible to render it a weapon as powerful as one of double its weight of the present or recent manufacture. With regard to light artillery, it must long be a disputed point as to whether the muzzle-loader, even with increased length, be not a more serviceable weapon than the breech-loader. Both being constantly subject to removal, to exposure, to the chance of being covered with earth, sand, mud, &c., the latter is necessarily weak in the breech, which may give way in consequence of the action deteriorating from any of these causes, while a little dust or grit in a muzzle-loader, so long as the vent be clear, is no great matter. Of one thing we may be certain,—the decision of the Authorities will be just. Twenty years ago discountenancing the breech-loader, it has again sanctioned its introduction, directly it has seen the advantage of doing so.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, intended to visit the West India Docks to-day, to inspect the men of the Royal Naval Reserve drilling on board the President, and to inspect the London Brigade of Royal Naval Volunteers. The unexpected departure of the Duke of Edinburgh for St. Petersburg on Tuesday night has necessitated the postponement of this inspection. The Duke of Edinburgh visited Brighton on Monday, and inspected the Coastguard at Cliftonville, Fishergate, and Shoreham.

The question of giving a special pension to the widow of the late Mr. David Hopkins, so well-known to Naval officers on the West Coast of Africa, and who died at his post as Consul, is, we are glad to hear, under consideration. His influence with the native chiefs was very great, and his services to the country in establishing friendly relations with the coast tribes is worthy of recognition.

Lieutenant Horace Adams, of the Vernon, and Sub-Lieutenant Morris Thompson, of the Hecla, who were in charge of the torpedo boats which came into collision at Spithead while practising at night, have both been informed that the Admiralty considers them absolved from all blame in the matter. At the same time, officers engaged in such night work in swift torpedo boats are enjoined to use every possible precaution to prevent accidents of this nature.

There is but one opinion at the Ports of the treatment which the Admiralty have seen fit to accord to senior assistant-paymasters and engineers, by depriving them of their second stripe of distinction lace. Such treatment is most humiliating, and it is not improbable that the manner in which their Lordships deal with her Majesty's Orders in Council will be made the subject of inquiry in Parliament.

Rear-Admiral Hood, C.B., with the Minotaur, Agincourt, Achilles, and Northumberland, intended to leave Vigo on February 23, and to arrive at Lisbon on March 7. The Salamis left the squadron at Vigo on February 21, on her return to Lisbon for mails, and was to rejoin the Admiral at sea to-day.

We are glad to hear that a strict examination of the drainage system of the official residences at Devonport Yard has been ordered, for the death of Admiral Hope from typhoid fever would seem to point to the suspicion that Devonport is no better off than Portsmouth with respect to the healthiness of its Government houses. Admiral Ryder very wisely refrained from taking up his residence at the Admiralty House, Portsmouth, until the drains had been overhauled, having good reason to suspect them of being imperfect. The suspicions were verified, and the Naval College at Portsmouth has also been ordered to be examined as to its drains. The fact of Dr. Domville's widow having been given a special pension of £200 a year, and that she is also to be provided with apartments at Hampton Court, looks, too, as though the death of this officer of fever is attributed to his duties or his dwelling; and as the hospital was at the time free from fever cases, it does not seem likely that the late Inspector-General at Haslar Hospital took the disease in the execution of his duties among his patients, but rather in his own house.

Captain George T. M. Purvis (B), whose death a Yokohama on the 11th inst. is reported, was a lieutenant of 1849, commander of 1852, and retired captain of April 1, 1870. He was the son of, and was on the same list as, Captain George T. M. Purvis (A), who obtained his lieutenant's commission in 1823, was made commander in 1842, and retired with the rank of captain in 1862. It is not often that father and son run so closely together as in this case, where there were but ten years' difference in the date of their commissions as commanders.

The faith of their Lordships in the Nordenfeldt gun, which was so largely ordered some few months ago, appears to have been rather shaken by recent accidents, and orders have now been given for several gun-vessels to have fittings for two Gatling guns prepared for them. Nothing could be wiser than this return to their "first love" in machine guns, provided the Gatlings now to be fitted are of the improved pattern.

The Corps of Royal Marines is to be congratulated upon the concession now made to its junior officers by the sanction of the Secretary of State for India, to admit candidates into the Indian Staff Corps. Such an opening has never before presented itself to aspiring young officers, anxious to qualify themselves for special work. Hitherto, they have seen no loophole for advancement beyond the pale of their own seniority corps, in which an adjutancy was the limit to which the utmost zeal or intelligence of a subaltern could aspire; for, with the exception of the professorships held at the Military College by officers of the Royal Marine Artillery, any appointments to the Staff of the Army have been jealously withheld from officers of Marines. This concession from the India Office has not been obtained without difficulty; but since the wall of partition has once been broken through, there can be no valid reason why any Staff appointment in the Army should not in future be open to the officers of a corps whose examination on entering the Service, and whose subsequent training is the same as that of any officer serving under the Horse Guards. The admission to the Indian Staff Corps' List of Marine officers is at this moment very opportune, for in the event of the Admiralty desiring to carry out the reported scheme, with regard to the Royal Marine Artillery, it will give them a means of providing for some of the junior subaltern officers. Already several have offered themselves as candidates for this unlooked-for opening for their future career.

The Admiralty hurried forward the commission of the Curaçoa, which hoisted the pendant on Tuesday last, instead of on Tuesday next, as had been previously arranged, so that the Raleigh might be allowed to sail for her station with fresh crews for the Wolverene and the Australian schooners, instead of waiting for the Wivern. As the Curaçoa is destined for the China station, she will be able to convoy the Wivern as far on her passage to Hong Kong as may be thought desirable.

Lieutenant Mervyn Bryan, who commissioned in the Boxer at Chatham in December, 1876, has not paid off in her, as it was, unfortunately, necessary to leave him behind at Bermuda, where he was sent to hospital

Some curiosity is felt as to why only fourteen Commanders were promoted to Captain last year, instead of fifteen, which the Admiralty promised to make. Also, why the vacancy caused by the cancelling of the promotion of Lieutenant C. F. M. Gordon, in December, 1878, was not filled up; and whether Lieutenant F. R. Carr is a Lieutenant or Commander? He was gazetted as Commander, but still appears on the Lieutenants' List, and we believe he will remain there. These cancelled promotions have deprived two senior Lieutenants of their Commander's commission, and the Commanders have, for some reason, lost one.

It is reported that a committee, under the presidency of Rear-Admiral Hoskins, C.B., will shortly assemble to inquire into the position of the medical officers of the Navy, with the view to assimilating their pay, rank, &c., to that of Army medical officers under the recent Warrant.

Rear-Admiral A. Herbert, having been promoted to flag rank, has given up the command of the Excellent, and until a successor has been appointed his duties will devolve upon Commander Beaumont.

The deposits received in Naval savings'-banks in the year ended March 31, 1879, was £112,259 11s. 11d., and the total amount due to depositors on March 31 (including £7,145 15s. 6d. for interest), £139,029 5s. 4d. The number of accounts open was 12,081, which is a very fair portion of depositors.

Can nothing be done to expedite the mails for the Channel Squadron, the letters received at Vigo on the 15th being of no later dates than the 9th? Even those addressed to the ships at Vigo, viâ Spain, were sent to Lisbon, and were taken on by the Salamis. Yet Vigo is no more than three days' railway journey from London.

We regret to hear of the death, at San Remo, of Lieutenant Lord William Phipps, R.N., who retired from the Active List in 1874, and had for some time been in an indifferent state of health.

Rear-Admiral Charles T. Curme, who hoisted his flag on Monday as Admiral-Superintendent of Devonport Dockyard, entered the Service on October 10, 1840, and became a sub-lieutenant on October 6, 1847, and lieutenant on March 4 in the following year. He attained the rank of commander on February 26, 1858, and was posted on February 16, 1864. He has only just been promoted to flag rank. Admiral Curme acted as engineer in the defence of Shanghai against the rebels in March, 1853, and was favourably mentioned in the Foreign Office despatches. He was actively employed against the Chinese pirates, and was present at the operations in the Canton river in 1856-57, and at the destruction of the Chinese flotilla of war-junks at Fatshan Creek on June 1, 1857, and was again mentioned in the despatches. Later on he became adjutant to the Naval Brigade at the attack and capture of Canton on December 1, 1857, for which he was again mentioned and promoted. He wears the China medal, with the Fatshan and Canton clasps. Rear-Admiral Curme's experience of the Dockyard at Devonport, where, as captain of the Steam Reserve until December 31 last, he often had occasion to temporarily take the duties of the Admiral Superintendent, doubtless made him more than usually fitted for the post of superintendent on the death of Admiral Hope. Still, the appointment has been received with considerable surprise in the Service, and the dozen Rear-Admirals above him on the list, who are quite ready to hoist their flags, are not a little disappointed, not to use a stronger term, at seeing this selection of their Lordships. There is nothing so extraordinarily special in the duties of an Admiral Superintendent, supported, as he is, by a dockyard staff, that any admiral of ordinary ability is not quite capable of fulfilling. Rear-Admiral Somerset, having last been employed as senior officer at Bermuda, was assuredly fitted for the post, and the Service fully expected to see him given this opportunity of hoisting his flag.

The First Lord of the Admiralty, in writing to Mr. Puleston, M.P. for Devonport, respecting the naval barracks at Keyham, states that the Government intend to press on the building of the barracks, which will probably accommodate upwards of 3,000 men, and it is hoped to make a beginning with the first block for 1,000 men early in the coming financial year.

The gunnery course on board the Excellent, which was to begin in April, has, we hear, been postponed until June 18, as there will not be any accommodation at the Portsmouth College for the officers who are ordered to join the class, that building being about to be vacated by all its occupants to enable the drains to be examined.

The First Lord of the Admiralty, in reply to a question put in the House of Commons on Thursday, remarked that he did not consider it right to state what questions have been referred to the Committee on the Royal Marine Artillery.

We are glad to hear that the cycloidal screws designed last year by Lieutenant Armit, R.N., for several large steamers, have secured such good results that the proprietors of the patents for this invention have formed a company to develope the undertaking.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., re-hoisted his flag in the Inconstant on Wednesday, and sailed for the Mediterranean, to relieve Sir Geoffrey Hornby, K.C.B., who completed his term of three years in command on January 15.

Mr. Armstrong, surgeon of the Encounter, has, we hear, been transferred to the Fly, in consequence of her medical officer, Mr. Jennings, having been invalided home.

Practice with Hale's rockets, which was ordered to be discontinued owing to recent accidents, is now to be resumed in ships having rockets of less than five years of age.

The Lord Mayor's visitors' list must surely contain the name of some few Naval officers; yet at a banquet on Wednesday, at which some three hundred were seated at his lordship's board, it fell to the lot of Sir Harry Parkes to be called on to respond for the Navy, none of the sea service being among the guests.

Commander Cameron's new book, Our Future Highway, is, we hear, causing a stir among the ardent advocates of the Euphrates-Valley route, his striking out a new line having rather upset their preconceived ideas on the subject.

A Commander's Naval pension of £65 per annum has become vacant by the death of Captain Baldwin Wake, upon whom the pension was conferred in May, 1878.

Some who had seen the Italian ironclad Duilio did not anticipate the success which is reported to have attended her trials. Her increased immersion—a defect with which our own constructors have become well acquainted—was expected to reduce her steaming powers very materially. But with stores and ammunition on board, she is even said to have exceeded the fondest hopes of her designers. The other defect which was alleged to exist was inferiority of workmanship. At present, that has not shown itself, though, if it exists, it may become apparent in actual service. The statement of the success of this ship by the Italian Minister of Marine, on Saturday, more than pleased the Chamber of Deputies, and the thanks of the House were voted to the constructors of the Duilio, which was declared to be "absolutely superior to any other ironclad as regards the power of her machinery and armament." Italy may well be proud of such success at her first attempt at turning out a ship of the latest type, and she has been wise in waiting while we have borne the costly experiments which have led up to Italy's improved Inflexible. That she is an improvement on anything we have, we may take for granted, for Mr. E. J. Reed, C.B., has claimed the honour of being the originator of the Duilio design.

The forty-ninth anniversary meeting of the Royal United Service Institution will be held in the theatre of the Institution on Saturday next. The chair will be taken by Admiral Sir Cooper Key, K.C.B., F.R.S., Lord of the Admiralty, at twelve o'clock precisely, when the gold medal will be presented to the writer of the prize essay on "Naval Tactics on the Open Sea, with the Existing Types of Vessels and Weapons."

Is a "stalwart savage" a more formidable enemy than a disciplined soldier? One would be led to suppose that there are people of authority who think so, by some recent and previous speeches. But such an opinion cannot be maintained by any one who has experience of war. Our Army, fortunately or unfortunately, has had only savage or partially civilised enemies to deal with since the Russian war of 1854-6, and it would be deplorable if it were to be accepted as a military axiom that savages, however "stalwart," are more to be dreaded than regular troops. If 1,000 regular troops, armed with breech-loaders and supported by artillery, are overwhelmed and destroyed by even 20,000 savages armed with spears, it may be asserted with confidence that the regulars were badly handled and unskilfully disposed, and it would be monstrous to maintain the like could possibly happen again where they were so.

The death of General A. Huyshe, C.B., will cause a run of promotion on the Indian List of the Royal Artillery, Lieutenant-General Sir Arnold B. Kemball, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., becoming General; Major-General W. S. Hatch, Lieutenant-General; and Colonel G. G. Pearse (late Bombay), a Major-General.

A distinguished-service reward is vacant by the death of Lieutenant-General T. E. Lacy

Both General Spencer Stanhope and Lieutenant-General T. E. Lacy, whose deaths are announced this week, were on the Retired List; no promotions, therefore, takes place in the Army, in succession to the deceased officers.

We may point out that, in addition to the 5th, 16th, and 28th Bombay N.I., forming General Burrow's, or the 2nd Bombay Brigade, the following Bombay troops have been ordered on service to Afghanistan, and will by this time have reached or crossed the frontier at Jacobabad:—E Baty. B Brig. R.H.A., C Baty. 2nd Brig. R.A., 2nd Sind Horse, Poona Horse, 2nd Batn. 7th Fusiliers, 66th Foot, 4th Bombay N.I., 10th Bombay N.I. The following troops have also been detailed to form a reserve division for service in Southern Afghanistan:—D Baty. B Brig. R.H.A., F Baty. 2nd Brig. R.A., 2nd Batn. 11th Foot, 2nd Batn. 15th Foot, 1st Sind Horse, 3rd Bombay Light Cavalry, 3rd Bombay N.I, 9th Bombay N.I., 23rd Bombay N.I., 24th Bombay N.I. The troops belonging to the Bombay Army, either on service, or held in readiness for service, will thus consist of:—2 Batys. Horse Artillery. 2 Batys. Field Artillery, 1 Mountain Train Battery, 4 Regts. British Infantry, 6 Regts. Native Cavalry, and 13 Regts. Native Infantry.

We learn from Aldershot that the officers commanding regiments at that station have sent in their reports on the several forms of equipment, and the Committee, under the presidency of General Sir Thomas Steele, is expected shortly to make known its final decision. The prevailing opinion is that the Oliver system is far superior to anything hitherto submitted, and if the views of officers are respected, the Magazine accoutrements will be issued in an unmodified form. Eight men in marching-order—four from the 52nd Light Infantry, wearing the Oliver accoutrements, and four from the 53rd Regiment, equipped in the valise—proceeded from Aldershot to Windsor the other day, for the inspection of her Majesty, Lieutenant-Colonel Barwell, 52nd Light Infantry, and Captain Gatacre, the excellent and hardworking secretary of the Equipment Committee, attending. These two equipments were the only ones submitted for her Majesty's inspection. It may, therefore, be inferred that the inspection was merely for the purpose of enabling her Majesty to have the advantages of the magazine system pointed out to her, in view of its adoption. Any way, the subject has now assumed a more satisfactory aspect, and we have reason to feel hopeful that the War Office has at length been brought to admit that what we have all along maintained is right, viz., that it would be false economy to allow any question of expense to stand in the way of the adoption of an equipment which is allowed to be as near perfection as can be, and which possesses undoubted advantages over all the other systems at present in the field, as has been plainly demonstrated, after a full trial, by the reports handed in by the officers commanding the 52nd Regiment and 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade.

An announcement on the back page of the monthly Army List requests officers to communicate with the Under-Secretary of State for War in case of errors o omissions which may be discovered in that work. They are even informed that their letters must be verified by the writers' own signatures, and should be addressed in a certain manner. Notwithstanding the unmistakeable language used in this announcement, it is as well to caution officers against complying too readily with the request, for many instances have occurred lately in which officers have received what has been tantamount to an official snubbing for having presumed to address the War Office otherwise than through the recognised channel, their commanding officers, though not a word is said in the announcement to lead any person to suppose that in such trivial matters the regimental authorities are to be troubled. Somebody in office evidently imagines that commanding officers and adjutants have nothing to do. We had hoped that red-tapeism was dying out to some extent in our Army, but it seems that whilst it is disappearing in certain quarters, it is cropping up in others—the evil is so deep-rooted, apparently, that it cannot be killed outright.

We would draw the attention of the Horse Guards to the fact that many commanding officers have refused to forward the applications of officers to join the Commissariat and Transport and Ordnance Store Departments, on the ground that no General Order has been issued authorising them to do so. Thus the services of many of the most eligible candidates will be lost, unless immediate action be taken in the matter.

Lieutenant Dean-Pitt, R.A., A.D.C. to the Governor of Bombay, has published a most interesting and really valuable treatise on the important subject of transport, which, as he says, is "the most burning question to which the late campaigns have given rise." The author has evidently mastered his subject, and we shall hope to find his "Notes" published ere long in the Journal of the Royal United Service Institution, for the benefit of the Army generally, for they will deserve to be reproduced.

A valued correspondent writes from the Punjab on the 22nd ult.:—"Your generous paragraph in your issue of December 20, relative to the temporary abandonment of four guns in the action before Cabul, was read with interest by all British officers in India. Here it is well known that telegrams and despatches of Divisional Generals in Afghanistan are documents which should always be accompanied with running commentaries from independent sources. As you rightly observe, General Massy at Charasiab had definite and distinct orders, which he carefully followed. The trap into which his handful of cavalry fell at Cabul was a surprise as much to General Roberts as to General Massy. Every precaution was taken by the latter. But the former, who is his own Intelligence Department, should have been able to give his Brigadier sounder information than he did, and he has been heavily blamed for his complete ignorance as to the position and the numbers of the enemy."

A return has been called for by the Adjutant-General in India just lately which has brought to light some curious facts, well enough known to regimental officers in India, but to few others. This was a return of the numbers of the men under the Short-Service Act, and the probable dates when their service would be completed. All regiments which have lately gone out to India are much the same in this respect, and one may be taken which arrived in India about a year ago, and in no way differs from others. This regiment has a strength of 774 privates. Of these, under the Short-Service Act, there will be sent to England 32 men in 1880, 31 men in 1881, and 540 men in 1882, and these numbers are exclusive of any men who may die or be invalided. The result is that, by 1882, out of the 774 men, 603 will have gone home, to be replaced in India by a lot of recruits, all arriving about the same time, and who have been under different officers at the depôts and on board ship. Fortunately there is some difference in the years in which different regiments become denuded of their men, but there can be little doubt but that there will be, in each year from 1880, an immense efflux from India of fine young soldiers, and that a mob of boys, in unorganised bodies as drafts, under officers whose connection with them is merely temporary, will have to be sent to replace the acclimatised and trained soldier.

Although a great deal has been done since the Franco-German war in the way of reorganising the French Army, M. le Faure, a Republican Deputy who devotes most of his time to military matters, informs the new War Minister, General Farre, that he has lots of work cut out for him. It appears that there are many important questions which have long been pending, and which require immediate settlement. In the first place, a law of promotion is required, he says, based neither on seniority nor selection, nor selection by seniority, as in Prussia, but on merit. He would have the colonel give marks to his officers which would serve to show the manner in which they have performed their daily duties, promotion to depend on these marks. The present laws of military justice, which, except in the case of capitulations, apply entirely to the rank and file, must, according to M. le Faure, be entirely changed, because the fundamental principle of military justice is that a crime must be punished in ratio to the consequences which may result from it. On this subject, we may observe that M. le Faure intends to ask Parliament to be more severe upon officers, and less severe upon men, guilty of dereliction of duty. He wishes to see the military code made less Rhadamantine than it is at present, as far as the soldier is concerned, by the introduction of "extenuating circumstances," by which the harshness of the civil code is toned down. L'Armée Française, alluding to this motion some days ago, remarked that the penal code of the Army does not and cannot admit of extenuating circumstances, that military law intended for time of war must be inflexible; it has to examine not so much the gravity of the crime taken by itself, as the consequences which it may entail. "Our code of military justice," added the writer, "is based less upon justice than necessity, its preponderating principle being the general security of an army united for the defence of the country." An attempt was made in 1857 to introduce "extenuating circumstances," but it was rejected by the War Minister of the day, Marshal Niel, who, to expose the impossibility of making any concession to the humanitarian party, said,—

"An army is in the enemy's country. A soldier steals a chicken. He is arrested and tried by court-martial. If he had to do with common law, there would no no difficulty about the matter. The soldier was hungry, and he took what he needed. The punishment would be light. The military judge, on the other hand, has not to take into consideration the gravity of the misdemeanour, but in revenge, he minutely weighs all the consequences of the act committed. Up to that moment the population had remained tranquil, but in presence of this violation of property, it commenced to exhibit symptoms of hostility. If the punishment be not severe, the bad example will soon be imitated. It will be impossible to get guides, and the enemy will reap the advantage of the discontent created. Point of departure, a chicken stolen; point of arrival, an army compromised; and the judge punishes with inexorable severity. Second example, more decisive still. A soldier has marched all day without receiving any rations. In the evening, he is placed sentry. He is overcome by fatigue and cold, and falls asleep. Here there is no misdemeanour, but simply a case of force mageure. The man struggled and succumbed. The civil judge would dismiss the case. The military judge turns away his head; he refuses to admit 'extenuating circumstances,' and strikes without pity, &c."

M. le Faure also demands the remodelling of the law on retirement from the Service. He wishes to see French officers permitted to retire sooner than at present, in order to quicken promotion. And he makes several remarks concerning that law on the composition of the Permanent Staff, which has now been under the consideration of Parliament for the last eight years, and which has given rise to so many reports and counter-reports, projects and counter-projects, and which is still as far off a settlement as ever. M. le Faure seems to think that the intention of legislators is to make staff officers machines for transmitting and executing orders, and he condemns the theory of selecting the most intelligent, the most capable, and the most highly-instructed officers for such a service. His idea is that staff officers are necessarily designed to become Generals, and that they should be allowed a certain amount of initiative, and incur a certain amount of responsibility. In proof of what he advances, M. le Faure quotes certain backslidings on the part of the Staff during the German war, arising from the unwillingness of officers to do anything without orders. He declares, for example, that fourteen dispatches were sent to the Staff on the subject of blowing up the bridge of Corry-sur-Moselle, and no attention was paid to them, "when they might have saved France." Then the law on administration is in abeyance, and although the subject has been for several years under discussion, it has not yet been decided whether the commissariat are to act independently, or to be placed under the orders of commanding officers. A new recruiting law is demanded because it is clearly the intention of French Republicans to reduce the term of service in the active Army to less than three years, so that every able-bodied man in France may serve that period. It is worthy of remark that M. le Faure speaks of special schools for raising non-commissioned officers, and gives us to understand that all the advantages hitherto offered to induce corporals and serjeants to re-engage have broken down. M. le Faure is highly discontented with the regimental staffs and the effectives. He declares the French company inferior to that of the Germans, (1) because the captain is not mounted, (2) because the effectives are inferior, (3) because the Germans have an officer more. In France, he says that 44,000 men are told off for administrative duties, and only 4,000 in Germany. At the same time, the French cavalry is over-officered, and with eleven regiments less than Germany, costs a third more. In fact, the French Army altogether costs £6,000,000 a year more than that of Germany. On the whole, therefore, M. le Faure thinks the new War Minister has a wide field open to him for displaying his capacity as a reformer of abuses and an innovator; but reforms of such importance as those pointed out always require time and patience, especially when two antagonistic Houses of Parliament have to be consulted, and unfortunately, in France Ministers seldom hold office more than a twelvemonth, during which time they are generally engaged in undoing what has been accomplished by their predecessors, at least, to a great extent.

If evidence were wanting of the cruel hardships which the widows of officers are occasionally made to suffer under the present regulations as to compassionate allowances, no case could more fully exemplify the utter inadequacy of the provision now made than that of Mrs. Emmett, widow of the late Major-General Emmett, R.E. This poor lady—the widow, be it remembered, of a distinguished Peninsula officer—is in most distressed circumstances. General Emmett married late in life, after he had reached the age prescribed by the regulations, and he died some years ago, leaving his widow with one child, totally unprovided for. Since then the unfortunate lady has done her utmost to obtain from the War Office some small annuity, by which she might be enabled to provide herself and her child with the necessaries of life. All appeals, however, have been in vain, for the official mind is not to be moved, and the poor lady is driven at length to solicit alms from the benevolent, for although two grants have been made to her by the Treasury, and she is in receipt of a small pension from Lloyd's Fund, the money obtained from these sources has been quite inadequate, and there is nothing for it but for her to lay her case before the public, in the hope that some person in office who knew her late husband may be induced to interest himself in her behalf. Surely a Civil List pension would not be misapplied if conferred upon the widow of one who, in his day, rendered such valuable service to the State as the late distinguished general.

A subject which causes great uneasiness in the minds of French military men is the weakness of the French company, as compared with the German company. In France, the company on its peace establishment can never muster more than 80 men under the most favourable circumstances, and generally only muster from 30 to 40, while the German companies are always 149 strong, and in another year they will be augmented to 166 men. One of the causes of this inferiority is that, while the German regiment only counts 12 companies, the French regiment counts 18, and the consequence is these 18 companies are kept dangerously weak, and would be swamped with Reservists in case of war being declared. One can imagine the difficulty in which three officers, accustomed to command, say, 50 men on parade, would be placed by seeing their company suddenly augmented by 200 men belonging to the Reserve. And now-a-days no time is left for preparation.

A Board of Officers has lately been convened by the officer commanding the San Francisco Brigade, United States Army, for the purpose of examining an apparatus invented by Lieutenant C. A. L. Totten, 4th Artillery, United States Army, as a war game. Having made a critical examination of the merits and applicability of "Strategos" to the wants of the National Guard, the Board has made an elaborate report, which, through the courtesy of one of its members, we are enabled to publish in extenso:—

San Francisco, October 9, 1879.—Major S. W. Backus, A.A.G., Second Brigade, N.G.C., San Francisco.—Major: The undersigned, composing a Board convened by S.O. No. 33, Head-quarters Second Brigade, N.G.C., dated June 25, 1879, "to examine the apparatus invented by Lieutenant C. A. L. Totten, 4th Artillery, U.S.A., for demonstrating the movements of troops in battle, and report on its applicability to the wants of the National Guard in the study of tactics, as well as to consider all the merits claimed by the inventor," have the honour to report that they have made a full examination of the apparatus, and of the rules and tables for its use, which together constitute the series of games or studies to which the inventor gives the name of "Strategos," and which he offers as an American game of war.

"1. THE OUTFIT.—The outfit of 'Strategos,' as of every war-game, consists chiefly of pieces representing bodies of troops. Most of these pieces are of type-metal, and, on maps with a scale of 10 inches to the mile, would accurately represent the space covered by half-battalions, squadrons, batteries, skirmish lines, engineer companies, baggage-trains, field-works, &c. Practically, they may be used on maps with scales of from 8 in. to 12 in., or by considering them to represent double their strength, on maps with scales of from 4 in. to 6 in. Besides the metal pieces, there are a number of pieces made of paste-board, slated on one side; some of these are on the 10-in. scale, while others, intended to represent small bodies of troops, or single officers, sentries, or messengers, are of convenient size. On the slated side can be marked the insignia of the character sustained by the piece. The reverse side of each of the larger slated pieces has some topographical feature delineated upon it—a village, a marsh, a wood, a section of a hill, or of a river; and these pieces are so numerous that any desired combination of topographical features may be represented. They form an original and valuable addition to the metal pieces, which themselves are many times more numerous than those supplied in the English game. The outfit of 'Strategos' includes no maps, the inventor wisely believing that each student will prefer, and can at less cost obtain, some large-scale map of his own neighbourhood. Silicated cloth is supplied, upon which, with the aid of the pantograph (also furnished), any military map may be drawn upon the required scale. A silicated board, in sections, and ruled in inch squares, is furnished for the 'battle game;' the outfit also includes scales, dice, counters, coloured pencils, and other minor requisites, the whole outfit (except the silicated cloth) being packed in a box 26×22×6 in. in size.

"II. APPLICATIONS OF THE OUTFIT.—TACTICS, TOPOGRAPHY, AND HISTORY.—A comparison of the excellent "Automaton Company" and "Regiment" of Brewerton, or the more recent and costly toy of another inventor, with the 'Strategos' Outfit, shows that the capacity of the former and other similar apparatus is limited to minor tactics, while that of the latter is unlimited; affording illustrations of every movement and situation in war, from the formation of an incomplete set of fours to the most complicated operations of great armies. During the first studies of the recruit, the various pieces enable him or his instructor to exemplify, more promptly and no less clearly than by the apparatus already mentioned (which answers that purpose and no other), the positions and movements of officers and men in all the manœuvres of a squad, a company, a battery, a battalion, or any larger body. Advancing to the study of grand tactics and strategy, the same pieces are available, and the topographical pieces enable the student of either the theory or the history of war to reproduce the situations described in the books, and, with the aid of the silicated cloth and the pantograph, to follow closely the course of a battle, realising each successive stage of it in a way which with ordinary battle maps is always difficult and often impossible. For all these purposes the apparatus of 'Strategos' is, in the opinion of this Board, far superior to any other. By the facility and pleasure with which it can be used, National Guardsmen will be led on from minor tactics—which with most of them is now the beginning and the end of military science—to consider the real problems of war, and to see how vast and interesting is the field of study not covered by the Revised Upton.

"THE BATTLE GAME.—This is an ingenious compromise between a game and a study—between chess and actual war. Its rules are not much more complicated than those of chess, and the respective moves of infantry, cavalry, and artillery pieces differ somewhat as those of the bishop, the knight, and the rook. Yet it affords most valuable training in grand tactics, and its course resembles closely the real operations of a battle, only so much of reality being sacrificed as is necessary to give it interest and make it practicable as a game. For nearly all National Guardsmen it will be the highest application of the 'Strategos' Outfit.

"THE ADVANCED GAME.—Of the four different applications of the Outfit already mentioned, the first (tactical) has numerous prototypes, but goes far beyond them; the second (topographical), the third (historical), and the fourth (the battle game) are original with Lieutenant Totten. All have great value. It remains to speak of the fifth application, the only one which comes into comparison with the German "Kriegsspiel" and its English and other adaptions. This, in 'Strategos,' is called the 'Advanced Game.' Following as closely as possible all the conditions of actual war, and serving as the highest and most difficult form of military study, it requires more leisure and higher training than are often found among National Guard officers, and its use will probably be confined almost entirely to the Regular Army. We need only say, therefore, that the rules and tables for playing it constitute in themselves a text-book of the greatest value and interest, full of the tactical and statistical results of experience in war, and that the game appears to us superior to the German and English games in every point in which it differs from them.

"As a result of our examination of 'Strategos,' we cordially recommend it to all National Guardsmen, and we respectfully suggest that the purchase of a set for each head-quarters would be a legitimate and beneficial expenditure from funds of the State, should such be available.—Very respectfully, your obedient servants, DAVID WILDER, Lieutenant-Colonel, 1st Inf., N.G.C.; C. MASON KINNE, Major and J.A., 2nd Brig., N.G.C.; R. H. ORTON, Major 1st Cav., N.G.C."

The exaggerated reports respecting the loss of their boots by the men who paraded before the German Emperor at Strassburg last autumn, which gave rise to a good deal of merriment in the French Press, have now been reduced to their proper proportions. The General Commanding-in-Chief of the Army Corps in question (the 15th) was ordered to send in a report on the incident to the War Office, and from this it appears that it was perfectly true that some of the men of all the battalions parading lost their boots in the heavy, loamy soil, and that the number of foot-gear thus left behind was seven per battalion (1,000 strong). It is added that such a thing, of which so much capital was made, would occur again, under similar circumstances of soil and weather, the ground being so bad at the time that a great number of cavalry horses lost their shoes on that occasion. It is, therefore, believed that no change will be made in the foot-gear of the German infantrist, solely in consequence of what then happened. But the necessity of an improvement of the infantry boot has long been acknowledged, and there is no doubt that the change will soon be made. What the pattern will be is still a matter for speculation.

Corruption has developed to such an extent in the army of the Caucasus that the Grand Duke Michael has been compelled to issue a circular to the Generals commanding each military district, calling attention to the constant embezzlement of regimental funds by officers, and urging upon them to effect their utmost to root out the evil. According to reports current at Tiflis, upwards of 500,000 roubles belonging to various regiments were appropriated by commanding officers in 1879, while the sums embezzled from the company allowances reached nearly double that amount. Of course, the best way to deter the minor offenders would be to punish the higher ones, but beyond issuing this circular, the Grand Duke Michael has done nothing in this direction. As was divulged in a recent trial of the Obzor newspaper at Tiflis, the chief culprit of the frightful corruption that raged in the army of the Caucasus during the Armenian campaign was General Shulman, the head of the Caucasian Intendance. The Obzor and the Tiflis Vestnik published a long series of letters, exposing the corruption of which Shulman had been guilty. Yet, although no attempt was made to deny the charges, and they received confirmation in other newspapers, the General was retained in his position, and, no doubt, received in due course a copy of the circular issued the other day. It seems to be the practice in the Caucasus, and not only in the Caucasus but also elsewhere in Russia, to overlook all offenders above the rank of major, and make the minor officers pay the penalty for their sins. Hence the frequency of courts-martial upon lieutenants and captains, while majors and colonels escape scot-free.

Dr. Snegereff has collected from the recruiting returns of the Russian officials in Poland a number of statistics showing the uselessness of employing Jews as soldiers. The returns of last year state that 75 per cent. of the Lithuanian inhabitants of the Polish provinces proved to be fit for military service, 71 per cent. of the Poles, 66 per cent. of the Russians, and only 32 per cent. of the Jews. Of the Lithuanians liable for military service, 10 per cent. were released on the score of sickness; of the Russians, 16 per cent.; of the Poles, 15 per cent.; and of the Jews, 37 per cent. Six per cent. of the Lithuanians were rejected on the ground that they gave no promise of physical development, 9 per cent. of the Poles, 9 per cent. of the Russians, and 20 per cent. of the Jews. In the Warsaw district the recruiting-officers found that only 21 Jews out of 100 lads were fit to carry a musket, and of these 21 none have as yet displayed the proficiency necessary to enable them to face the enemy. Dr. Snegereff very justly points out that some races excel in the pursuits of peace, and that others shine most in the art of war. To compel the former, in the face of physical drawbacks, and against their taste, to join the ranks of the Army is as absurd as any regulation would be that would force the Cossacks or the Turcomans to abandon their out-door life and serve behind the counter. Russia, the doctor maintains, should let the Jews go their way in peace, and tax them double, to pay for substitutes among more war-like races.

It cannot fail to interest those who were personally acquainted with the late Brigadier-General E. A. B. Travers, C.B., Madras Staff Corps, for six years Assistant Military Secretary for India at the Horse Guards, who died of diphtheria on June 16 last, to know that the deceased officer had no fewer than eight brothers, all of whom entered her Majesty's Military Service, viz.:—

1. Captain Robert W. Travers, 24th Regiment; served in the Punjab campaign, 1848-9, including passage of the Chenab, battle of Sadalapore; killed in the battle of Chillianwallah. 2. Lieutenant Thomas M. Travers, 51st Bengal Native Infantry; died, from service in India, on passage home. 3. General James Travers, V.C., C.B.; entered the Bengal Army June 11, 1838; served throughout the Afghanistan war, 1840-2, in 2nd Grenadiers and Skinners' Horse (now 1st Bengal Cavalry); thanked in front of the line, and name brought to the special notice of the Indian Government by General (afterwards Sir William) Nott, for his services in the action of Secunderabad; served in the Sutlej campaign, 1846; commanded and brought the Nusseeree Ghoorka battalion out of the battle of Sobraon. Commanded the Cavalry Bhopal Contingent in attack and defeat of insurgents, 1846, and received the thanks of the Government of India for his services on that occasion; commanded field force against the rebel Shunker Sing, 1856, and received the thanks of the Indian Government and of the Agent Governor-General, Central India, for the "complete success which attended these operations. Commanded at Indore when the Mutiny broke out at that station, July 1, 1857; horse three times shot under him; name brought to the special notice of Government of India by Colonel (afterwards Sir Henry M.) Durand, for "the manner in which the attack was met and the soldierly withdrawal was effected in the face of superior numbers, when our position became no longer tenable in consequence of the disaffection of our own troops;" received the thanks of the Indian Government and the Victoria Cross for his services on this occasion. Has been wounded; five times mentioned in despatches; twice brought to the special notice of Government for services in contact with the enemy, and on three occasions received its acknowledgments for services in the field. Promoted to Major by Brevet for Afghanistan; received the C.B., and medals for Candahar, Ghuzni, and Cabul; also for Sobraon and Indian Mutiny. Held the appointments of Adjutant, Second in Command, and Commandant of the Bhopal Contingent, composed of Artillery, Cavalry, and Infantry; Political Agent, with command of Cavalry, Western Malwa; Commandant of Central India Horse (three regiments), and Political Assistant to Agent Governor-General, Central India; commanded Saugor District, and received the thanks of the late Lord Sandhurst, commander-in-chief, for the manner in which he had conducted the duties of this command; commanded Meerut Division and First Division, 1st Camp of Exercise at Delhi, and received the acknowledgments of Lord Napier of Magdala, commander-in-chief, for the manner in which he had exercised the duties connected with these commands. 4. Captain Eaton J. Travers, 32nd Bengal Native Infantry:—Siege of Mooltan; appointed to the 1st Punjab Infantry; engaged frequently with the Hill Tribes; received the thanks of the Governor-General. Killed at the siege of Delhi, 1857. 5. Henry F. Travers, assistant-commissary-general. 6. John N. Travers, E.B., Ordnance Department; retired. 7. Horace N. Travers, assistant-commissary-general; died in the West Indies. 8. Major Joseph O. Travers, 17th Regiment. Served in the Crimea, and received the Legion of Honour for conspicuous conduct in the attack on the Redan; aide-de-camp to Brigadier-General Macpherson in the Afghan war.

General Travers' father (Major-General Sir Robert Travers) was one of six brothers who all served in the profession of arms, viz.:—

1. Major-General Sir Robert Travers, C.B., K.C.M.G., K.C.F.M., &c.; services: campaign in Holland, 1799; Ferrol, 1800; commanded detachment of 95th in attack of Spanish lines and Buenos Ayres, 1807; commanded 95th Rifle (Brigade) Regiment in the battles of Rolica and Vimiera, 1808; served in the retreat to Corunna; commanded 10th Regiment in the various attacks on the East coast of Spain; in 1817 was appointed Resident of Cephalonia; resigned 1823, and was presented by the inhabitants with an address and a gold sword, value £500; was four times severely wounded, received pension for wounds, £300 a year; killed by a fall from his horse in 1834. 2. Commander John Travers, R.N., severely wounded in Lord Howe's action, June 1, 1794; died in the West Indies. 3. Major J. Conway Travers, K.H., Rifle Brigade; services: siege and capture of Copenhagen, 1807; action of Benovente, 1808; Corunna, 1809; storming of redoubt, San Francisco; siege and storm of Cuidad Rodrigo and Badajos, 1812; battle of Salamanca; capture of Madrid; New Orleans, 1815; severely wounded, received a pension of £200 a year for wounds; died 1841. 4. Rear-Admiral Sir Eaton S. Travers, K.H.; upwards of one hundred times engaged with the enemy; eight times mentioned in despatches for gallant conduct (see Byrne's Naval Biography); wounded; died 1858. 5. Major Joseph Oates Travers, Rifle Brigade. Services: Walcheren expedition, 1799; in the several actions under Sir R. Abercromby; twice severely wounded, received pension for wounds; many years Magistrate at Portsmouth; portrait placed in Town Hall; died 1865. 6. Captain Nicholas C. Travers, Rifle Brigade. Services: Buenos Ayres, 1807; campaign under Sir John Moore, 1808-9; Corunna; battle of Salamanca; capture of Madrid; siege of Burgos; battle of Vittoria; Pyrenees; Vera; New Orleans; twice severely wounded; died 1871.

Twenty-two sons of the above six brothers have served in the Army, viz.:—

9. Sir Robert Travers, nine sons already mentioned. 10. Captain J. Steward Travers, 11th Regiment; died 1859. 11. Major J. Conway Travers, Royal Marines; services: Baltic, 1854-5; China, 1857-8; as Adjutant and Aide-de-Camp to Brigadier-General Holloway, C.B.; Adjutant, Woolwich Division, 1859-61; Aide-de-Camp to Inspector-General of Royal Marines, 1862-6; Baltic and China medals. 12. Colonel John Travers, Royal Artillery; served throughout the Crimean War, medal and clasps; retired. 13. Major-General Joseph Oates Travers, C.B., Royal Marines, services: Spain during the Carlist War; coast of Syria, 1841 (medal); Baltic, 1854-55 (medal); Brigade-Major to Royal Marines in China, 1857-58; wounded in action with the "Braves," 1858; Assistant Quartermaster-General to the expedition; wounded at capture of the Taku Fort, 1860; twice mentioned in despatches; C.B. (medal and three clasps); Assistant-Adjutant-General to the Royal Marines at head-quarters; Inspector-General, 1867-9; died 1869. 14. Lieutenant Lyon Conway Travers, late Ceylon Rifles, served in the Punjab campaign; siege and capture of Mooltan; battle of Goojerat; medal; retired. 15. Colonel Frederic J. Travers, Royal Artillery, served as Military Secretary and Aide-de-Camp to Sir George Grey, when Governor of New Zealand and Cape of Good Hope; retired. 16. Lieutenant William Travers, Rifle Brigade, served during the Indian Mutiny; wounded at Cawnpore; died 1865. 17. Captain Joseph Oates Travers, 70th Regiment, killed by an accident in New Zealand. 18. Captain Robert Travers, 19th Regiment; died. 19. General Eaton Travers, Royal Artillery; retired. 20. Captain Frank Travers, 60th Rifles; retired. 21. Colonel James Travers, 3rd West India Regiment; died. 22. Lieutenant Joseph Travers, Indian Army; died.

In addition to the above, there are many other members of this family who have served and are serving their country in the profession of arms. Perhaps no instance can be quoted where one family has produced so many soldiers.

A correspondent, writing from the Cape, says:—"We here all think that Sir Evelyn Wood showed very great ingratitude in omitting all mention of the Hon. Mr. Sprigg in that otherwise very beautiful speech he made at Chelmsford the other day, and in which he was so lavish of praise of all his South African friends,—from Governor Sir Bartle Frere downwards. Did he actually forget the magnificent compliment of offering him the command of a weak corps of mounted rifles, three skeleton regiments of yeomanry, and a few scattered companies or squads of volunteers? Did he forget that the Hon. Mr. Sprigg also bore public testimony to the fact that he, Sir Evelyn Wood, is a gallant soldier? It is true that Sir Evelyn Wood, years ago, received the Victoria Cross from the hands of her Majesty the Queen. It is also true that his exploits in the Gaika war, in Cape Colony, and at Zlobane, Kambula Hill, Ulundi, and elsewhere in Zululand were not unknown to many people, including probably some of the members of the Cape Legislature, nearly all of whom can read. It is a fact that he had just been made a K.C.B., in recognition of his distinguished services out here; but the crowning honour was not conferred upon him until the Hon. Mr. Sprigg, Colonial Secretary of the Cape Colony, stood up, and gravely and solemnly assured the Colonial Parliament, and through it, of course, the whole world (and shall we say "high Heaven" also?), as justification of his patronage of Sir Evelyn Wood, that he, Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., &c., was a man of "undoubted personal courage!" This, surely, was all that was wanted. Sir Evelyn can now look every man in the world—even the Hon. Mr. Sprigg—full in the face (he is known to have extraordinary command of his risible faculties), and he can rest contented on his laurels now and for evermore! This world contains nothing more in the way of distinction for him, at all events, and as one of his sincerest admirers, I respectfully offer him my heartiest congratulations."

A military question which has been long unsettled in France is again occupying public attention, viz., the relative position between commanding officers and the Commissariat. Two years ago, an able report on the subject, written by M. de Freycinet, now Minister of Public Works, was laid before the Senate, who, after voting its conclusions sent the bill to the Chamber of Deputies. The Lower House named a Committee, but this Committee has not yet reported. There are two systems in presence of each other, and the question is whether the Commissariat is to be under the absolute authority of the commanding officer or to be independent. The Senate is in favour of the former, whilst the Chamber appear to favour the latter system. Several laws, dating from Louis XIV., have placed the Commissariat and all the other services under the direct orders of the commanding officer; and it is asked, how it will be possible in the field to allow the administration to act independently of the will of the commander-in-chief? One would have the Commissariat objecting to this or that operation! However, according to the evidence taken before the French Parliament, it seems that the Commissariat has slipped a good deal out of the hands of commanding officers. Intendent-General Friant, in his evidence, stated that he was with the Army of the East during the Franco-German war, and that he was not once able to act in concert with General Bourbaki; he was not allowed to be present at a single council of war. It was the same with other army corps. However, the Franco-German war was an exceptional case. The plans of the French were upset from the first, and it became difficult for generals, who were always being forced to retreat, to combine with their commissariat officers. The idea of making the commissariat independent because of the breakdown of 1870 appears to be absurd. If there had been an able and victorious general, the commissariat work would, no doubt, have been fairly done. How was it possible for Bazaine to work with his commissariat when he only received the command-in-chief when the compaign had been compromised, and when wishing to march on Verdun, he was obliged to fall back on Metz? It was the same with MacMahon, who wished to fall back from Châlons on Paris, but who was suddenly ordered to march to Sedan. Everything fell out of gear. However, as this serious matter has not been under the consideration of the French Parliament for eight years, there must be a great deal to be said on both sides.

The responsible officer who directly advises the Secretary of State for War in all matters connected with the supply to the Army and Navy, at home and abroad, of war matériel—cannon, shot, shell, rifles, powder, camp equipment, fuzes, harness accoutrements, torpedo stores, &c.,—and who is responsible for the maintaining of efficient and proper reserves, holds a position of very great importance; indeed, so important is it, that it was not considered too much to confer a special pension of £1,000 a year and Knighthood in the Order of the Bath on Sir James C. Caffin, when he retired from the office in 1863. Although the appointment of Director of Stores was then abolished, and the duties nominally incorporated with those of the Director of Artillery, it was found necessary to have an experienced Ordnance Store officer at the War Office to assist this official, and Commissary-General Tatum, C.B., who then held the appointment of Principal Superintendent of Stores at the Tower, was selected. It is to the valuable services, quietly but efficiently rendered by this officer, that we desire to draw attention. Mr. Tatum, having arrived at the prescribed age, has been compelled to retire upon pension, and we feel certain that we echo the wish of every officer of his late department when we express a hope that the next Bath gazette which appears may confer upon him the higher rank of the distinguished Order, of which he is already a Companion.

THE CLOTHING OF STAFF-SERJEANTS.

Sir,—May I, through the medium of your valuable paper, ask from one of your readers under what Warrant the "staff serjeants" of cavalry regiments are clothed, and can any of your readers inform me why the issue of what is termed "1st-class staff serjeant's clothing" is made to some 2nd-class staff serjeants, but not to others, this description of clothing being issued to trumpet-majors, fencing instructors, and farrier-majors, but not to men who are probably senior, by date of promotion, to the above, viz., paymaster-serjeants, orderly-room clerks, saddler-serjeants, and others? There would appear to be a deal of licence granted for the administering of the Warrant, for not only does the above occur, but the "band-serjeant" is also issued with "1st-class staff clothing," although no such a rank is authorised on the "establishment" of a cavalry corps; and, consequently, he belongs, as he must do, to the roll of "duty serjeants." Should none of your readers be able to explain the motive for the clothing being thus issued, I trust that the head-quarters authorities will rectify what I cannot but consider an error; the issue of two totally different descriptions of clothing, viz., "staff serjeant's" and "serjeant's" clothing, to one and the same rank and class being quite unaccountable enough, especially where, as in my own case, the better description of clothing is issued to one of the same rank, but much junior to myself. But the issue of such clothing to one who cannot be even termed a "staff serjeant," unless the "establishment" of cavalry is again altered, is quite inexplicable.—I am, &c.,

A Staff Serjeant of Cavalry.

SHORT SERVICE AND VOLUNTEERING.

Sir,—Dr. Russell has rendered good service to the public by what he has written regarding the conduct of our troops in South Africa, I, for one, fear that there is only too much truth in what he has stated so publicly; and if his statements are true, the question arises, Who is to blame? The answer is easy. They are to blame who, having destroyed our excellent regimental system, have given us in its stead a system of short service, coupled with endless volunteering from corps to corps. I, Sir, am old enough to remember the time when regiments were composed of zealous officers, intelligent and trustworthy non-commissioned officers, and well-drilled and (above all) well-disciplined men. And now what have our military theorists given us in their place? Thanks to their system of short service and ceaseless volunteering (not to the linked battalion alone, but to any other regiment which happens to be below its strength), a regiment either on home service, or when first sent on foreign service, is but little better than a semi-drilled and semi-disciplined mob. Anybody who doubts this has only to ask the opinion of either any commanding officer serving at home, or any impartial officer who saw the infantry regiments which were sent to Zululand immediately before their embarkation. If, therefore, the conduct of these regiments in South Africa has assimilated itself to that of a mob, it is only what might have been expected from them; and they are not nearly so much to blame as are the authorities at home, who sent them on active service in such a pitiable condition. Short service is bad enough, but this everlastingly calling for volunteers is a positive curse to the Service; and the result of the two combined is that officers no longer take the smallest interest in their men. The non-commissioned officers are too young and inexperienced to have the smallest influence or authority over their men, while the raw boys—called, by courtesy, "soldiers"—are both morally and physically totally unfitted to stand the strain of a campaign. In fact, Sir, our Army at the present moment is one gigantic sham.—I am, &c., Iconoclast.

THE DEFENCE OF SWITZERLAND.

Sir,—The Government and people of Switzerland, like the Belgians, are now discussing what means ought to be adopted to put their country in a proper state of defence. By the Treaty of Frankfort, France lost the frontier of the Rhine and the Moselle, and the two great fortresses of Metz and Strasbourg, besides other places of less importance. Since then, France has constructed two great lines of works from Belgium, on the north, to Switzerland, on the south, having behind them, as a central place, Paris, transformed into a formidable fortress, covering, with her detached forts, about 1,600 square kilomètres. The first line of 250 kilomètres from Belgium to Switzerland is defended by the fortresses of Mezieres, Verdun, Toul, Epinal, and Belfort, having between them places less strong, commanding all the roads and railways coming from Germany. Behind this first line is the second, formed by the fortresses of St. Quentin, Rheims, Langres, Besançon, and Dijon, connected, like the first line, by detached and ancient forts, transformed and repaired by modern military science. Strategical lines of railway have also been constructed. Germany has strengthened Strasbourg, Germersheim, Mayence, and Cologne. After these come Neuf Brisach, Rastadt, Coblentz-Ehrenbreitstein, and Wesel. These form the line of the Rhine, which, of itself, is an obstacle of immense value, covering the frontier of Lorraine; from the Vosges to Belgium is the great fortress of Metz, greatly strengthened, with its detached places occupying a line of 38 kilomètres, and capable of serving as a base for offensive operations against Paris. Metz is in communication with the fortresses of Diedenhofen, Saarlouis, Pfalzbourg, and Bitsch. The frontiers of France and Germany are thus defended by great lines of most formidable works, the extremities of which touch Belgium and Switzerland. These two small countries now feel the peril in which they stand. What is the worst for Switzerland is that she covers, by her neutrality, a part of the German frontier the least defended. When a place cannot be attacked in front, it is turned. It is now feared that owing to the difficulties of a front attack, caused by the great fortified lines just mentioned along the frontiers of France and Germany, these two great Powers may be tempted to violate Swiss or Belgian territory by a turning movement. A German army operating against France through Swiss territory would, after passing the Rhine, be forced to pass the line of the Jura, defended by Belfort and by a chain of fortifications defending the valley of the Doubs. Supposing Belfort taken or invested, the right flank of this German army would in this part of France be menaced by the fortresses of Epinal and Langres. Salins, Besançon, and Dijon command the passage of the valley of the Doubs to the valley of the Saone. It is believed France could renew the famous operations of 1800 by Moreau and Lecourbe against Austria, which ended in the battle of Ulm. It is believed that in 48 hours France could invade the valley of the Birse, and in 24 hours more be on the Aar with 200,000 men. What can the Swiss oppose to an invading force coming either from France or Germany against them? On the north, the Rhine, without any works of defence; on the north-east, the Jura, giving passage through its defiles to many roads and railway lines, for the protection of which there is nothing. A serious conviction now begins to prevail that it is absolutely necessary to construct at least 25 forts along the frontier from Constance to Geneva. For second line two or three intrenched camps as point d'appui for interior defence, and placed so as to be able to use all the roads, rivers, and railway lines. These would be occupied by the landwehr, and would also serve as depots for munitions, matériel, provisions, &c. Some works of less importance could connect them with the forts. Owing to financial difficulties, only 8 or 10 forts would be constructed at first, which would, it is estimated, cost from 10 to 12 million francs. It is thought an army of at least 160,000 men, with 550 pieces of artillery, could be raised, without counting the landsturm. By these means, the Swiss think they could defend themselves against the attacks of the enemy.—I am, &c.,

THE VETERINARY DEPARTMENT AND THE ZULU CAMPAIGN.

Sir,—I have read with feelings of deep sympathy the letters and articles on this subject in your columns, and I cannot let the matter pass without adding a few remarks. I am quite at a loss to understand why the Veterinary Department should be overlooked in the Zulu campaign, where perhaps of all departments its services were the most keenly felt. I cannot think that the insult is intentional, nor yet can I think it is an oversight, it must be a mistaken judgment, the injustice of which the authorities cannot fail to acknowledge and rectify. The importance of the post filled by Mr. Gudgin is clear to all who have taken the trouble to look into the matter, and certainly no doubt can be entertained of the ability and zeal with which he laboured for the interests of his Department and country. Such an indignity as he has met with cannot fail to have a most injurious and lasting effect on the whole Department. Those who have a proper feeling of self-respect, and desire for distinguishing themselves, cannot be expected to join this branch of the Service. Those who already belong to it will have no encouragement to exert themselves for the advancement of their profession and the good of the country, if they are to be debarred from sharing in the distinctions showered down on the other Departments. To offer a C.B.-ship to Mr. Gudgin is the very least that can be done in recognition of his services, and it would be decidedly judicious to offer a like reward to the principal veterinary surgeon for his long and valuable Indian service and as head of the Department. I feel convinced that this would be a step in the right direction, and would never be regretted.—I am, &c.,

An Officer in the Army, and another
Believer in Justice.

Sir,—In last Saturday's Army and Navy Gazette, you recommend a more extended study of botany to Army Veterinary-Surgeons; but in the same issue, I see from your editorial columns and sundry letters, that these gentlemen have still every reason to complain of their treatment after the Zulu war. In your columns I have been much gratified to find praise so universally bestowed on them, therefore all the more is it surprising that their valuable services are ignored by the Military Authorities. It appears that the Generals who went out in the large horse transports have spoken in the highest terms of the intelligent and successful exertions of the veterinary-surgeons during the long sea voyage, and I hear it is also recorded that the Generals on land have equally expressed their great satisfaction with the Veterinary Department. What, then, is the reason that no acknowledgment has been made? My military friends say that no reason of any kind has been given, and I am assured from all quarters that none can be produced. An answer will oblige every advocate of justice and fair-play. The military authorities are injudicious in neglecting the Veterinary Department of the Army. If they will inquire, they will find that very many thousands of pounds might have been saved, both in Afghanistan and Zululand, among the transport animals, if the advice of the veterinary surgeons had been listened to. A reform in this direction is urgently needed, and perhaps it will be most advantageous to the Service if the authorities will commence inquiries by taking the opinions of the Army Veterinary-Surgeons themselves on this subject.—I am, &c.,

A Civilian Veterinary-Surgeon.

Sir,—It is admitted on all hands, I believe, that it is desirable that officers should hunt, and it is the well-known wish of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief that commanding officers should encourage their officers to indulge in this sport. The reasons for this are so well known that I need not enter into them here. I have, therefore, to suggest that any infantry officer who keeps one or more horses bonâ fide for hunting should be allowed a soldier as groom, and I am convinced that this would enable a very large number of officers to hunt who otherwise could not do so, for pecuniary reasons, and this without detriment to the public service. Some colonels allow soldier-grooms, but a great many do not; so that in one regiment a man gets a soldier-groom for a mere trifle, and in another he has to pay perhaps £50 a year for a civilian, should he keep a horse.—I am, &c.,

Infantry Regimental Officer.

Sir,—Having recently read some correspondence, in more than one contemporary, relative to comparative losses of officers, stating those in the Crimea to amount to 90, against the more recent ones in South Africa and India, will you kindly allow me to inform you that, having gone over the obituary lists of officers in Hart's Annual for the years ending 1854 and 1855, I find the result to be:—Officers killed and died of wounds, 230; officers died from various causes in regiments forming part of Crimean army, 134; total, 364. To this list, if procurable, should be added the casualties of the Naval Brigade which served in the trenches during the whole siege, and formed under Capt. Peel, R.N., part of the leading storming party at the Redan, June 18, 1855.—I am, &c., A Field Officer.

The Army.

1st Dragoon Guards. Capt. Vetch, 2nd Lieut. Hearn, and Qrmr. O'Donnell sailed for the Cape on Saturday last in H.M.S. Orontes.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers). With reference to the various accounts which have been published concerning the accident to the Carabiniers at the Dorunda ford on the Cabul river, a correspondent, says the Civil and Military Gazette, informs us that this place is seven or eight miles higher up the stream than the ford where the 10th Hussars met with disaster. The Dorunda ford is an easy one; kahars carrying dandies and small ponies can across with ease. The accident to the Carabiniers occurred from the men of the rear troop diverging from the ford down the stream and getting among some large smooth boulders, over which the horses fell, the riders being swept over the rapid below the ford into deep water. The total number of men lost was five. Our correspondent adds that all the fords near Jellalabad are marked by large piles of stones placed on each bank and on each side of the ford at intervals in the bed of the river. But it must be quite clear that this proper precaution was not taken at the Dorunda ford, or the men would not have diverged from the proper track. We find the following in the Pioneer of the 17th ult.:—"Jellalabad, Jan. 14.—A heliogram received about 1.30 p.m. informed us that the enemy were collecting in a fort opposite Ali Boghan, intending eventually to cross the river. General Bright accordingly ordered out two guns R.H.A. and a squadron of the Carabiniers, Col. Fryer, of the Carabiniers, in command. This force, rapidly marching out, found that several bodies of the enemy, with standards and mounted leaders, about 3,000 strong, were in the act of crossing the Cabul river, some of them being on an island in the centre. The guns opened fire with deadly effect, and the enemy were unable to face the terrific fire poured on them; they then turned and retreated, and were shelled till out of range. Moghul Khan was in command of the enemy, and his nephew was killed by one of our shells. Col. Fryer's force returned in the evening to Jellalabad. The enemy were taken completely by surprise when the guns opened fire on them from the positions selected by Col. Fraser. One hour elapsed between the receipt of the order and the guns coming into action, seven and a half miles from Jellalabad."

3rd Hussars. Lieut. Fuller is acting as adjutant on probation.

4th Hussars. Lieut. Pearson is named for the troop vacant by the retirement of Brevet Major Kington. An old officer of the regiment—one of the oldest surviving, indeed,—Major H. S. Northcote, son of the late Sir Stafford Northcote, Bart., died at St. Mary Church, Torquay, on the 19th inst., at the advanced age of 86.

9th Lancers. Lieut.-Col. Cleland may be expected in England shortly. Capt. Chisholme has been granted leave from Cabul to England, on medical certificate. Lieut. and Adjt. M'Innis left Cabul on the 23rd ult. for India, to equip and take up drafts for his regiment from Sealkote. 2nd Lieut. Little obtains his lieutenancy, vice Lieut. Lascelles, retired.

12th Lancers. Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Russell has been ordered to join the Scots Greys at Dundalk for temporary duty, pending his being re-gazetted to his regiment from the Supernumerary List.

13th Hussars. We (Lahore paper) hear by telegram that Loodhiana fever has broken out in the 13th Hussars at Lucknow.

16th Lancers. Capt. C. G. Hammond died at 27 Rutland Gate, W., on the 19th inst. of typhoid fever, in his 27th year. He entered the Army, Dec. 30, 1871, and became capt., Jan. 23, 1878. By Capt. Hammond's death, Lieut. and Adjt. Babington will most probably obtain his troop.

17th Lancers. Capt. Cooke has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs.

20th Hussars. The command, it is reported, will be given by selection, and the name of Col. Baker Russell, C.B., 13th Hussars, is generally mentioned in connection with the appointment. Col. Russell's appointment, however, could only be made in direct violation of the contract entered into with the officers of the regiments on their transfer to the Imperial Army in 1862, and it is not likely, therefore, that the report will be confirmed. We have referred to the subject elsewhere. 2nd Lieuts. Richmond and Sir John Burke are about to be promoted to lieutenancies.

Scots Guards. A most creditable performance was given by the dramatic club of the 2nd Batn., in the day-room, Chelsea Barracks, on the 19th and 20th inst. The performance commenced on the 19th with the original farce, "The Area Belle," and on Friday evening with "Domestic Economy," and was followed each evening by the comedy of "Checkmate." In "The Area Belle" (by Messrs. William Brough and Andrew Halliday), the Pitcher of Serjt.-Major W. Gordon and the Tosser of Colour-Serjt. F. A. Stephens, O.R.C., were excellent throughout. In the comedy, Colour-Serjt. A. Mitchell, Serjt.-Major W. Gordon, and Colour-Serjt. F. A. Stephens, O.R.C., distinguished themselves. "Domestic Economy" was principally noticeable for the excellent acting of Serjt.-Major W. Gordon and Colour-Serjt. F. A. Stephens, O.R.C.

21st Fusiliers. The garrison of Pretoria (says the Transvaal Argus) is getting appreciably weaker every day. Early on the morning of Dec. 22 five companies of the 21st Fusiliers marched into town, viâ Arcadia, from Secocoeni's country, under the command of Major Hazelrigg. The men were in appearance utterly unlike any other troops seen before, as the clothing and equipments worn then were those which they had worn in England ten months before, and during that space of time they had passed through all the vicissitudes of the Zulu campaign. Afterwards they went on to Sekukuni's, and gallantly did their full share of work there. Both officers and men were accordingly, to use an expression of a non-commissioned officer, "in a deplorable state of rags," and when they marched in had by no means the appearance of holiday soldiers. Lieut.-Col. Gildea, and 2nd Lieuts. D'Aeth, Dalrymple-Hay, and Despard, 2nd Batn., sailed for the Cape on Saturday last in H.M.S. Orontes. Capt. Whitton, whose five years as adjutant of the 1st A.B. Forfar R.V. expired on Oct. 19 last, is about to be relieved by Capt. Gordon, 68th Foot.

24th Regiment. The 2nd Batn. was entertained by the citizens of Durban previous to its embarkation in the steamer Ontario for passage to Gibraltar, when the following address was presented:—"To the Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers, and Men of the 2nd Batn. of her Majesty's 24th Regt.—As the time has now arrived when you must take your departure from this colony, we, the Mayor and Town Council, as representing the burgesses of Durban, Natal, cannot allow you to leave the land whose frontier you have kept inviolate, without delaying your footsteps for a moment upon the shore, while we place upon enduring record this expression of our admiration of your deeds, and of our lasting gratitude to you for the heroic services performed by you in the defence of this colony, when menaced by an invasion of overwhelming numbers of Zulus, on the night of the 22nd January, 1879. It is not yet a year since, in the shadows of the evening, a company of your regiment saw approaching, from the slopes of the Buffalo River, the darkest cloud of invasion that has ever lowered over the wide frontier of British dominion in South Africa. The storm which then gathered around you held in it all the fierce power caught from a recent victory gained over your brethren, who had fallen fighting at a vast disadvantage on the sad and fatal field of Isandhlwana. Reckless of loss, confident in its numbers and strength, that wild wave of savage invasion burst upon your hastily improvised defences, and surged against the scanty defenders as the sun went down; all through the night the savage but dauntless foe renewed again and again his attempts to break your line—a line which was weak in all save courage, loyalty, and duty. No need for us to repeat now the story of Rorke's Drift. As the daylight faded away above the heights of Helpmakaar, it left you, simple and untried soldiers, holders of an unknown post. When daylight broke again over the Zulu hills, Rorke's Drift had become a name of pride to those who speak the English tongue over the earth, and all of that little garrison had become heroes. Out of the gloom of a great disaster the star of your victory shone resplendent, and Natal, saved by your heroism, dried the tears of her anguish in the glory of your victory. Take, then, officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of the 2-24th Regiment, the thanks which we burgesses of Durban and colonists of Natal heartily offer you. Wherever your future fortunes and the destinies of the Empire you serve may call you, be assured you will carry with you the honour, the admiration, and the gratitude of those who now bid you farewell.—H. W. Currie, Mayor, Durban, Port Natal, Jan. 18, 1880." Col. Dunbar read the following reply:—"To the Mayor, Town Councillors, and Burgesses of Durban.—Gentlemen,—We, the officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of the 2-24th Regiment, beg to assure you that we shall ever remember, with mingled feelings of gratitude and pride, the great honour you have so kindly conferred on our battalion, on its departure from your land; and we will cherish, as one of the brightest pages in our regimental records, the most complimentary address you have been so good as to present us with on this our last day in fair Natal. Some 18 months ago, we landed at your port and marched into town, band playing, colours flying. Alas! the fortune of war has decreed that we re-embark to-day without them. But the 2-24th trust that whenever this sad tale is told, Natalians will add, 'It was not until five officers and 173 men—every 2nd-Battalion man present—had died in attempting to save our colours, the Zulus got possession of them.' Had the system of laagering and forming square, to resist assegais and the rush of overwhelming masses, been introduced into the Army before the terrible 22nd January—now almost a year ago—our poor old G Company (we shall always believe) would have been as successful at Isandhlwana as were our comrades of B Company at Rorke's Drift. So say the Zulus, too. We all join heartily in wishing peace and prosperity to Natal; but should, in future years, our late foes give trouble, we depart hoping the Mayor will again 'wire to the Queen,' soliciting her Majesty to send back the 24th, to lend your splendid Volunteers the helping hand of brotherhood once again. Till then, good-bye.—Always yours faithfully, W. Dunbar, Lieut.-Col., for self and 2-24th." Altogether, seventy-four Rorke's Drift heroes received copies of the address, and twelve others have proceeded to England to be attached to the depôt at Brecon, South Wales. After the reading of the address, the men were regaled in a spacious marquee which had been erected, and the officers partook of refreshments at a table in the same tent. Mr. John Hunt proposed the toast of "Col. Dunbar and the defenders of Rorke's Drift," coupling with it the name of Major Bromhead, who, the Advertiser says, stood near his colonel "in all the modest view of a vestal virgin in glory." He responded as follows:—"I thank you very much for the way in which you have received the toast which has been proposed by Mr. Hunt. The parchment which you have given us we shall always keep with the greatest pleasure. I thank you on behalf of my men and of those who were present at Rorke's Drift, most of whom are here now. I hope you will excuse my saying any more." Subsequently the Ven. Archdeacon Lloyd, on behalf of the ladies, presented to the regiment a handsome wreath of flowers, which was speedily fixed on the top of the pole on which once flew its colours. The following modest little composition accompanied the address:—"To Col. Dunbar, the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the gallant 2-24th Regt. Presented by the ladies of Durban, in grateful recognition of their services in Natal.

> "The wreath we offer you will quickly fade,
> But the remembrance of your noble deeds
> Lives in our hearts, undying, ever-fresh,
> Watered by dews of warmest gratitude."

Colonel Dunbar, in thanking them, said there were other regiments of the British Army in Zululand besides the 2-24th, and the finest body of volunteers he had ever seen. He had seen them in the field himself, and he knew what they were. The Natal Carabiniers had been with them, and they were a splendid lot of men. Although the 2-24th was very proud of the honour that had that day been done them, they did not like to monopolise all the honour. He was no speaker, and he should call upon Major Bromhead to thank the ladies. Major Bromhead briefly returned thanks to the ladies for the beautiful garland they had presented to the regiment. The men shortly afterwards marched to the Point, and embarked on board the ss. Ontario. A correspondent, writing from Standerton on Jan. 4, says:—"Oh, by-the-by, Lieut.-Col. Carrington is raising the left wing of the Cape Mounted Rifles to muster 800 strong; terms of service, five years; £10 bonus, to find own horse (remount dépôt to be kept for selection, &c.), to be found in food for man and horse, also in fit-out (not a bad 'spec' for the numerous people without work roaming about your city). There are three classes of troopers, first, second, and third; pay, 6s., 5s., and 4s. 6d. per diem, respectively."

29th Regiment. Capt. Spratt, who was attached to the transport service as special officer in South Africa, and who acted as aide-de-camp to Col. Baker Russell at the storming of Sekukuni's Mountain, has arrived in England, after very active, useful, and varied work with the troops in the field.

35th Regiment. The Malta correspondent of the Morning Post writes:—"Great regret is felt in this place for the sudden death of Lieut.-Col. Blyth, on Monday morning last, whilst preparing to attend his duties. Apoplexy was the cause of death. He leaves a wife and family. His remains were interred in the Ta Braxia Cemetary with all the military honours due to his rank."

38th Regiment. Capt. Crofton has been holding the appointment of Staff officer at Durban, Natal, since August last, having relieved Capt. Kell. Major Sir Norman Pringle, Capt. Alexander, and Lieuts. Hume and Allen are on detachment at Castlebar, Capt. Kell and 2nd Lieut. Hamilton at Oughterard, and Capt. Price and Lieut. Sandham at Ballinrobe. Lieut. de Vere Smith is to get the company vacant by Capt. Morrisey's retirement, and Lieut. Bent succeeds him in the musketry-instructorship.

40th Regiment, which has been stationed for some time at Dum-Dum and Barrackpore, with a detachment at one time in Fort William, when the wing of the 54th was sent off to Burmah, left for Ranikhet on the 29th ult. We are told that "Calcutta society, in which is included both Barrackpore and Dum-Dum, is sorry to lose the regiment, for the officers have made themselves deservedly popular, the men have been steady and well-behaved, and the excellent band of the regiment has often contributed to ts amusement."

47th Regiment. Capt. Biscoe is spoken of as likely to be appointed adjutant of the 3rd Royal Lancashire Volunteers.

ROYAL MARINES.

All the Royal Marines who actually landed with the Naval brigades from the Shah, Active, and Tenedos during the Zulu war, are entitled to the grant of £3 13s.

Mr. Henry Robins, marine artist, residing in Commercial Road, Landport, who was for many years connected with the Royal Marine Artillery, in which corps he attained the rank of provost-sergeant, invented a machine-gun as far back as 1858, and submitted a model, with carriage, scale 1 in. to the foot, to the War Office, who sent it before the Ordnance Select Committee in 1859; but it was returned, with a statement "that it was of no use," or words to that effect. Mr. Robins, being in London in 1861, went to the Patent Office, in Trafalgar Square, and had an interview with Mr. Prince with respect to his "compound breech-loading rifle," the name given to it by the Ordnance Select Committee. That gentleman informed him that a foreign officer was in London in search of something new, and as the English Government had rejected it, it might turn out to his advantage to show it to him. This was agreed to, and Mr. Prince paid Mr. Robins's expenses to Portsmouth to bring up the model, which was shown to the foreign gentleman in Trafalgar Square, who made every inquiry of the inventor. It will be seen that Mr. Robins had been allowed to drop into the official Lethe of unpatronised genius, and never from that day to this has he received the slightest recognition. Mr. Robins's model shows the barrels fixed in parallel form, while in the Nordenfeldt gun for use on shore the arrangements for limbering, &c., are precisely similar to those of the model referred to.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have notified the Secretary of State for India that they have no objection to officers of the Royal Marines volunteering for the Indian Staff Corps, under Horse Guards' General Order, No. 2, of Jan. last. Officers, R.M.A., will be required to perform one year's, and officers, R.M.L.I., two years' regimental duty, as the latter do not, like the former, get the benefit of one year's training at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich.

51st Light Infantry. The Times' correspondent at Candahar telegraphs on the 21st inst.:—"The 51st Regt., escorting the 13th Baty. 9th Brig. R.A., and the heavy battery of 40-pounders, will move on Cabul when the road of the Lataband Pass has been sufficiently improved for them by Col. Blair, who is now, for that purpose, at Seibaba with two companies of Sappers."

52nd Light Infantry. The deaths of two late officers are announced, Capt. M. V. K. Bowie having died at Brighton on the 20th inst., and Mr. H. P. Smith at Sheen Mount, East Sheen, on the 23rd.

53rd Regiment are to leave Aldershot about the end of March for Manchester.

87th Fusiliers. Lieut. Martin is named for the company vacant by the retirement of Capt. Vardon upon half-pay.

88th Regiment. Capt. Brind is under orders to take charge of the draft about to be sent to the service companies in India. Lieut. Moore is under orders to return home from India, to join the depôt.

89th Regiment. The Standard says that "Owing to the unsettled state of affairs in Burmah, it has been thought expedient to maintain the British garrison at its present strength for another year, and the withdrawal of the 89th Regiment has been postponed. This step has been taken as a precautionary measure in the interests of British residents."

90th Light Infantry. Capt. Maude has been granted leave from India to England for fifteen mouths, on urgent private affairs.

91st Highlanders. Lieut. and Adjt. St. Clair and 2nd Lieut. M'Intyre sailed for the Cape on Saturday last in H.M.S. Orontes.

Commissariat and Transport Department. We have received numerous letters pointing out the serious loss the Service is about to sustain by the compulsory retirement of Comy. C. B. Knapp. Comy. Knapp is recognised throughout the Cork District as one of the ablest and most zealous officers who ever served in the command, and has been many times favourably reported upon by the General officers under whom he has been employed; yet, notwithstanding his high qualifications, he is about to be shelved in the very prime of life, having received an intimation that he is not one of those selected to be retained on the reorganisation of the department.

Ordnance Store Department. Deputy-Comy. W. H. Chambers gave up command of the Companies, Army Service Corps, on Feb. 23. He was gazetted out on the 25th. Assist.-Comy. C. D. Durnford has returned from Gibraltar, and proceeded to Guernsey for the purpose of relieving Comy. H. Blakeney, who goes to Bermuda, vice Assist.-Comy.-Gen. J. T. THE VOLUNTEERS.

49th Middlesex. A large company assembled at the Guildhall on Saturday evening last to witness the presentation of prizes by the Princess Mary. There were present among others, the Duke of Teck, hon. col. of the regiment, Major-Gen. Higginson, C.B., Col. Sir E. Du Cane, K.C.B., Cols. Burnaby and Blundell, Grenadier Guards, Col. Moncrieff, Scots Guards, the Lord Mayor, the Lady Mayoress, Mr. Sheriff Woolloton, and Mr. Sheriff Bayley. Lieut.-Col. Du Plat Taylor, after thanking the Princess and Prince for attending, gave a short history of the regiment, which is the youngest of the metropolitan corps. It originated in the "Fenian scare," when an order came that every one in the Post Office Service was to be drilled. On that order 1,600 men were marched to the Guildhall fully drilled and equal to service. That body was disbanded when the "scare" passed, but leave was obtained to form a corps of 800 men, and 753 is the present strength, of whom 739 are efficients. The corps during the year had a camp of instruction, and at Aldershot was associated with the London Irish. Col. Taylor also mentioned that some of the men in his corps had drilled and trained in "army signalling"—a fact upon which Gen. Higginson remarked that he hoped to have the men by his side at the Easter Brighton Review. The Princess Mary, who was received with warm cheers, then presented the prizes. Gen. Higginson, in the course of his speech, expressed his pleasure at seeing Serjt.-Major Rule, who, the General said, could not only teach the Volunteers how to fight, but could tell them how British soldiers could die, for the serjeant-major had gallantly fought on many a field. Prince Teck also addressed the company, and expressed his pleasure at having been able to take part in the manœuvres at Aldershot with the corps. Thanks were given to the Lord Mayor for the use of the hall and for presiding, and cheers for the Princess brought the proceedings to a close.

7th Surrey Rifles. We regret to hear that Col Beresford, M.P., who was recently ordered to Egypt for the benefit of his health, is suffering from an attack of paralysis in his left arm. The hon. gentleman is still in Egypt, where he will probably remain for some time to come.

The Indian Army.

4th Bengal Cavalry, attached to the Reserve Column, Cabul Field Force, left Peshawur on the 22nd ult., for Dakka.

15th Bengal Cavalry. The detachment at Vitakri arrived at Dera Ghazi Khan on the 21st ult., from the abandoned station. Major R. Atkins has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate.

27th Bengal N.I. Lieut. G. A. Williams, wing-officer, has been granted leave to England, for one year, on medical certificate.

28th Bengal N.I. Major G. S. Hills is en route to England from Cabul, invalided.

44th Bengal N.I. The Lahore paper says very truly :—"The retirement of Col. J. M. Nuttall, C.B., who commanded the regiment the other day in the daring assault and capture of the Naga stronghold of Konoma, is so distinct a loss to the Service, that it raises the question whether Government, in encouraging the retirement of the officers it can spare, cannot, at the same time, find means to retain those whom, like Col. Nuttall, it cannot afford to lose. We see no sign of any effort to do this, however, in the apathy with which the signal services of Col. Nuttall have been received. Not one word of notice, much less of thanks, has been tendered to the Naga field-force, not a despatch has been published, and one of the best and bravest of its servants is allowed to leave the Army without a word of recognition, while his juniors and inferiors are beplastered with fulsome praises, beribboned and beknighted by dozens, for affording proofs of incapacity and weakness."

Corps of Guides. When we heard from Jellalabad, Capt. F. D. Battye had arrived there from Cabul, with a convoy of invalids, en route to England.

5th Goorkhas. A correspondent of the Bombay Gazette writes :—"Major John Cook, V.C., well deserved the praise bestowed on him by Gen. Roberts in his recent order; and those who knew him will endorse the General's opinion that had he lived, he would have achieved the highest honours in the Service. I had the pleasure of being at school with him, and well remember what a fine, powerful young fellow he was,—a perfect young giant in strength, and as good-natured as he was strong. But I don't think there is much room for regret in his case. Like the great Nicholson, he has brought a brilliant and honourable career to a glorious close; and in his short but noble life he has splendidly achieved the two great objects of a soldier's ambition,—the V.C. and a soldier's death. 'Dulce et decorum est.'"

The Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her intention to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross upon the under-mentioned non-commissioned officer and men of her Majesty's Army, whose claims have been submitted for her Majesty's approval, for the gallant conduct displayed by them during the recent operations in South Africa, as recorded against their names :—

Colour-Serjt. Anthony Booth, 80th Foot., for his gallant conduct on March 12, 1879, during the Zulu attack on the Intombi River, in having, when considerably outnumbered by the enemy, rallied a few men on the south bank of the river, and covered the retreat of fifty soldiers and others for a distance of three miles. The officer commanding 80th Regt. reports that, had it not been for the coolness displayed by this non-commissioned officer, not one man would have escaped.

Ptes. Flawn and Fitzpatrick, 94th Foot, in recognition of their gallant conduct during the attack on Sekukuni's Town on Nov. 28 last, in carrying out of action Lieut. Dewar, 1st Dragoon Guards, when badly wounded. At the time when he received his wound, Lieut. Dewar had with him only Ptes. Flawn and Fitzpatrick, and six of the Native Contingent, and being incapable of moving without assistance, the natives proceeded to carry him down the hill, when about thirty of the enemy appeared in pursuit about forty yards in the rear, whereupon the men of the Native Contingent deserted Lieut. Dewar, who must have been killed but for the devoted gallantry of Ptes. Flawn and Fitzpatrick, who carried him alternately, one covering the retreat and firing on the enemy.

INDIA.

A regiment of cavalry is to be despatched from Madras to Bombay, to take the place of those sent to the front.

A calculation of the Bombay troops lately ordered either to go on service or to hold themselves in readiness to proceed to Southern Afghanistan, should they be required, shows the total to be 15,000 men and 83 guns.

Capt. E. H. H. Collen, Bengal S.C., of the Indian Secretariat, is to be attached to the Transport Department in Afghanistan during the forthcoming operations.

The Bombay Gazette thinks "it is quite time that the Indian armies were amalgamated, else jealousy may lead the superior authorities at Calcutta to do something of which they may themselves be ashamed. The persistency with which the Generals in command in Afghanistan have refused to receive any Bombay officer, or to co-operate with them when ordered, contrary to their wishes, is well known. It has been reserved, however, for the Calcutta authorities to perform the shabbiest trick we have yet heard of. A week or two ago the Bombay Commissariat was asked whether they had any warm clothing to spare, and replied that, if the Bombay troops were to be ordered on active service, nothing could be spared. The clothing was at once ordered by telegraph to be sent to the Khyber, and five days after came the order to despatch the Bombay troops to Candahar."

Obituary.

Lieut.-Gen. T. E. Lacy died at 18 Sussex Place, W., on the 22nd inst., aged 77 years. The deceased officer was for many years Commandant of the Staff College, and was widely known and greatly respected. He entered the Army May 8, 1825; became major-gen., March 6, 1868; lieut.-gen., Oct. 1, 1877.

The Times states that "the hired transport Ontario, which arrived at Portsmouth on Saturday from the Cape, brought a present for her Majesty from Sir Garnet Wolseley, consisting of a couple of Free-State mules and a couple of North American mules, the latter of very large size; and also a present from General Clifford for her Majesty, consisting of two Zulu cows (in calf) and two Zulu track oxen. Although the voyage was a rough one, the animals stood it very well, and are in capital condition. The oxen are called after Cetywayo and his brother."

PORTABLE BOOT-TREE.

A want long felt has just been supplied by this most important invention. All sportsmen and military men know the great advantage of having both their long and short boots treed up every day, especially after they have been wet, but there is often great inconvenience in carrying about the boot-trees.

An officer in the 5th Lancers has lately hit upon the idea that an India-rubber tree, which, with ease, can be carried in the pocket, can, when put inside the boot, be inflated, filling out the boot tightly, and so making it an impossibility to shrink.

For officers on active service, autumn manœuvres, or whenever it is impossible to carry wooden trees, this invention will be invaluable.

This invention is patented for Great Britain and other countries.

Orders should be sent as early as possible, accompanied by an old boot as a pattern, to

Extract from the Civil Service Gazette of December 13, 1879:—"All classes of society will learn with the greatest satisfaction of an undoubted remedy for Neuralgia, Gout, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Nervous and Sick Headaches, Gravel, and other most painful disorders, which has been discovered. It is known as RUSSELL'S TIC-SANO, is of a vegetable nature, and is consequently of a completely harmless kind, and much to be preferred to the thousand and one remedies and so-called specifics which have already made their appearance amongst us. It has also a wonderful effect upon the digestive organs, and for aged people, and those of delicate constitution, its use will prove most beneficial."

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1880.

ALTHOUGH much was said of efforts being made to keep down the Navy Estimates to the lowest possible figure, it is now made plain, by the issue of those for 1880-81, that however much the First Lord of the Admiralty might desire to economise, he has not allowed that desire to lead him to the sacrifice of efficiency even in the smallest degree. Owing to the heavy expenditure during the Eastern crisis, resulting in a large reserve of stores, the Estimates for the present financial year were able to show a reduction on the former year of as much as a million and a half, but this year's reduction is less than a hundred thousand pounds, the total amount required for 1880-81 being £10,492,935, as compared with £10,586,894 required for the current year. Taking the Votes as they come, we find by Vote 1 that the total number to be borne in the Fleet has not been altered, and a reduction in the number of officers, boys, and the Coastguard is made up by an addition to the number of petty officers and seamen. The Marines, too, remain at exactly the same strength, and no reduction in the expenses of the divisions is allowed for, from which it would appear that the Admiralty does not anticipate any immediate alteration in the constitution of that corps. Vote 2 shows an increase for the purchase of provisions, the large war purchases having, in a measure, become exhausted. On the Admiralty Office, Vote 3, there is a saving of nearly £6,000, most of which has been effected by the reorganisation of the Secretary's Department; but of course, the handsome retiring allowances of those who have been removed are not shown under this head, and are partially lost sight of. From a falling-off in the amount required under Vote 4, for retainers and drill pay for the Royal Naval Reserve, it would appear that this force is growing weaker rather than stronger, which, if so, is much to be regretted. Under Vote 5, we find the usual paltry allowance of £300 made for "rewards, experiments, and other expenses for scientific purposes." Vote 6 brings us to the question of shipbuilding in the Royal yards, with which we naturally take Vote 10, showing what is to be done by contract. The result of the late activity in the purchase of ships is still to be observed under this head, for in both these votes there is a saving even over the present year's expenditure, and a smaller sum is provided for wages in the Royal yards. Still the programme is not a poor one, and the saving is mainly attributable to a temporary lull in the work of repairs and fitting ships with new machinery and boilers, so much having been expended in work of that nature when it was feared that the services of every ship we possessed might be called for. At the Royal yards it is intended to complete the Inflexible, Orion, Superb, Conquest, Mercury, Doterel, Kingfisher, Algerine, Rambler, Ranger, Linnet, Swift, Bullfrog, Redwing, Cockchafer, Banterer, Espoir, Grappler, Wasp, Wrangler, Niger, Bouncer, and Insolent; to advance the Polyphemus and Constance to nine-tenths; the Agamemnon, Ajax, Canada, and a new Kingfisher to about three-fourths; and other vessels under construction to various degrees. It is also proposed to lay down three new ironclads, one at Chatham, another at Pembroke, and the third at Portsmouth; but as their design is not even yet completed, the expenditure on their account will be but trifling. The total number of tons to be built at the Royal yards during 1880-81 is 11,636 tons, distributed over twelve ironclads, four corvettes, one despatch-vessel, seven sloops, fifteen gun-vessels, and two other vessels. In private yards, there will be laid down a vessel of the Comus type, two steam cruisers of 5,000 horse-power, one despatch-vessel of 2,000 horse-power, three new Espoirs, a paddle-steamer of 400 horse-power, for surveying service, and fifty-three new torpedo and picket-boats, and three torpedo lighters, the total tonnage of the contract work being 4,310 tons. No provision has been made for the purchase of torpedoes, from which it may be presumed that we have a supply sufficient for the requirements of the Fleet. Of the other Votes, there is little to notice, unless it be the saving that has been effected in the clerical departments of the hospitals by the appointment of retired naval paymasters to do the duties of storekeeper and cashier, at very reduced salaries. Of new works, £10,000 is appropriated both to Portsmouth and Devonport, for the beginning of the seamen's barracks. £8,000 is also allowed to Keyham for quarters for engineer students, and the new dock at Keyham has £42,000 provided for it. For miscellaneous services, Vote 14, a sum of £700 has been taken for award to the officers and crew of the Vulture for services against piratical dhows. As might be expected in these days of reorganisation, the civil pensions Vote shows a decided increase, the demand for pensions for salaried officials having increased by £13,784, while more than £10,000 is required to be disbursed as gratuities to clerks and others on retirement under the Act of 1878. The total expenditure on civil pensions for 1880-81 is estimated to amount to £322,428, this vote showing an increase of more than £21,000, as compared with a a saving of less than £6,000 for salaries at the Admiralty, so that but for the reorganisation at the Admiralty, the Estimates might have shown a greater reduction than they do.

H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief will hold a levée at one o'clock on Friday next, the 5th prox., at the Horse Guards, Whitehall, the number being limited to 150. Applications to attend should be addressed to the Military Secretary.

Last Saturday, we published certain statements as to possible changes in the higher Staff appointments. Some came from India, through Reuter's telegraphic agency, others were founded on what was said by the man in the street, who may be met also in most of the Clubs, and is certainly in all the Service Clubs. It was stated that Sir G. P. Colley was going to succeed Sir G. Wolseley in South Africa, and that Colonel Brackenbury was going to India, as private secretary to Lord Lytton; so far Reuter. Then came the man in the club, who said that Sir C. Ellice was going to succeed Sir P. Haines in the Indian command, that Sir D. Lysons would go to Aldershot, and that Sir G. Wolseley would succeed him at the Horse Guards till Sir C. Ellice went to India, on which Sir Garnet Wolseley would become Adjutant-General of the Forces. On Monday there appeared a communiqué in the papers, to the effect that the statements we in common with other papers published had no authority. Well, that may be; but the statements may be true, for all that. As it stands, however, it would seem that the authorities at the Horse Guards wish it to be understood that Sir D. Lysons is not going to Aldershot, that Sir C. Ellice is not going to India, and that Sir G. Wolseley is not to hold office in Pall Mall. It will be interesting to see what occurs, after all, in what is called the long-run.

We understand that Colonel the Right Hon. Sir James Fergusson, Bart., Royal Ayr and Wigtown Militia, late captain, Grenadier Guards, has been appointed Governor of Bombay, in succession to Sir R. Temple. Sir James served with the Brigade of Guards in the Crimea, and was wounded at Inkerman. He was appointed Under-Secretary for India in 1866; of the Home Department, 1877; was Governor of Western Australia from 1868 to 1873, and afterwards Governor of New Zealand.

We regret to learn from Cabul that the condition of Lieutenant-Colonel Cleland, 9th Lancers, is such that he will be obliged to return at once to England, and it is almost feared that the serious nature of the wounds he received in the action before Cabul will necessitate his ultimate retirement from the Service. The colonel has already undergone a most painful operation, and has lost the use of his left arm. Added to this, he has a bullet lodged in his body, the actual position of which had not yet been ascertained when our advices left. The conduct of this officer is referred to in glowing language, and it is said that no honours which he may receive would be too good for him, after the most admirable spirit in which he carried out one of the maddest orders ever issued to troops in action, and the fortitude he showed after the engagement, and has since displayed whilst under treatment for his wounds.

General Sir John Bisset, K.C.M.G., C.B., who has been for some time back looking after his affairs in Natal, has returned to England.

We have reason to believe that Lieutenant and Adjutant M'Innis and Lieutenant Trower, 9th Lancers, will be recommended to her Majesty for the Victoria Cross, in recognition of their conspicuous bravery in action before Cabul. All accounts from General Roberts's head-quarters testify to the intrepidity displayed by these young officers, who set an example of soldierly devotion of which the officers and men of the regiment are justly proud, admirable though the behaviour was of all ranks, on the occasion of what has been not inaptly termed "a second Balaclava charge."

Lieutenant-Colonel C. E. Webber, R.E., who went out with Sir Garnet Wolseley as special-service officer on the Staff, and who was detached to various important posts as line of communications and base officer, has just arrived from the Cape, and will resume his post in the Telegraph Department of the General Post Office.

It is expected that General Lord Mark Kerr, C.B., Colonel of the 54th Regiment, will be transferred to the Colonelcy of the 13th Light Infantry, which has become vacant by the death of General Spencer Stanhope. His lordship's attachment to the regiment, the 1st Battalion of which he for so many years commanded, is well known, and his appearance once more at its head will occasion very general satisfaction in the corps. The vacancy in the 54th will, doubtless, be filled by Lieutenant-General J. R. Stuart, C.B., who stands next on the Unattached List to Sir Richard Kelly, gazetted recently to the 109th.

The report which is in circulation in the Service clubs as to the selection of Major and Brevet Colonel Baker Russell, C.B., 13th Hussars, for the command of the 20th Hussars, would seem to be premature, for Major Chenevix-Trench, who is now employed as a professor at the Staff College, has signified his full intention of returning to regimental duty if promoted, and has refused the offer of a renewal of his Staff appointment on promotion, after the precedent established lately in the case of Lieutenant-Colonel Richards, 55th Regiment. Under these circumstances, the War Office could not inflict upon the officers of the regiment such a serious injustice as to introduce an outsider, when it has been laid down as an established rule that the field officers of the new Line regiments, whatever their service, cannot be promoted to other regiments by selection. The loss to Major Trench, were Colonel Russell given the appointment, would be considerable, for it would rob him of his chances of the higher rate of pension, and it would, besides, be a direct violation of the contract entered into with the officers of the 19th, 20th, and 21st on their transfer to the Imperial Service on the amalgamation.

The members of the Select Committee on Machine Guns having determined to discuss the relative merits of solid-drawn metallic and Boxer metallic wrapped cartridge-cases, as applied to machine guns, no further experiments were made at Shoeburyness during the past week. It is understood, however, that the existing programme will be completed with the Martini-Henry service ammunition in its present form, whatever decision the Select Committee may arrive at as to the cartridge best adapted to machine guns.

Captain E. M. Roe, 23rd Fusiliers, who was lately nominated by H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief to the post of Secretary and Adjutant of the Royal Military Asylum, has, we hear, declined the appointment, as he has been appointed by the Home Secretary to be one of her Majesty's Inspectors of Factories, and will consequently leave the Army.

On one occasion there was great excitement because of an announcement in one of the military papers that General Bounce was going out to command a large garrison. The statement was copied into a daily paper, where it caught the eye of an illustrious personage, and as the name had not gone up, inquiry was made how the appointment could have got abroad, and suspicion fell on high officials that they had been "blabbing." But, in fact, the news came out in this wise. The editor's servant had been sent to a bootmaker's for his master's boots, and had noticed a new boot-kit in the shop with the inscription:—"Major-General Bounce, C.B., St. Paul's Island." "Yes," said the bootmaker, "the General's going out there as Governor!" The valet came home and told his master, who stuck it into his newspaper, and there was a row in Pall Mall. But do what they will, "the authorities" cannot keep appointments secret until the name has been approved of, and there appears to be no way of shrouding these transactions in complete mystery, unless the Horse Guards adopts the plan of seizing any unsuspecting officer whom they may select for preferment, gagging him, and sending him off to his command, nolens volens, by the night mail. It is custom to write now to an officer, and ask whether the place would be agreeable, &c., and no harm is done generally if he refuses. If he accepts, it does not seem that there can be much damage done by the fact being known, as the Royal approval has, so far as we are aware, not been refused, recently at least, to names sent up from the War Office.

There may be nothing in the paper artillery which Germany and Russia are directing against each other, but there may be live shell and gunpowder in their ordnance, and it is certainly rather alarming to lovers of peace to find Germany using a tone of menace towards her neighbour at the very moment she is about to add to her prodigious army. What is the probable casus belli,—what the pretexts for war? Vain inquiry. Any reason can be made valid by armies in the conquering field.

Major George Johnston has applied to be allowed to retire under the Order in Council of January 15, 1878. The retirement of this officer will promote Captain James Woodward Scott, now serving as instructor of musketry at the depôt, and who thus creates a vacancy for a Staff appointment.

The following moves of regiments are in contemplation, and will probably be carried out towards the end of the ensuing month, viz.:—2nd Battalion 11th Foot, Manchester to Preston; 1st Battalion 16th Foot, Athlone to Belfast; 53rd Foot, Aldershot to Manchester; 82nd Foot, Dublin to Aldershot; 104th Foot, Belfast to Dublin; and 106th Foot, Preston to Athlone.

Colonel H. C. Wilkinson, lately commanding the 16th Lancers, has been selected to succeed Colonel R. Preston, C.B., as Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief in India.

As the time will soon arrive when the medal will be distributed for the Zulu war, we cannot help thinking that it would be a gracious and consoling act if the decoration was granted to the nearest relatives (say, wife, father, or mother) of those officers and men who lost their lives in action; for be it remembered many will receive the medal who never heard a shot fired, and who did not cross the borders of Natal. How much more, therefore, must the families of the dead deserve this, the only evidence they can hope for, of gallantry of those who fell in action with the enemy, or from disease contracted on service.

Captain J. Matheson, Royal Engineers, has been appointed instructor of fortification at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, vice Captain J. Gore Booth, Royal Engineers.

Achilles, Capt. A. C. Heneage. A smart young seaman of this ship, named James Soley, has been killed by falling from aloft. He fell from the foreyard, and was picked up dead.

Alexandra, Capt. FitzRoy, flagship of Admiral Sir Geoffrey Hornby, was to be docked at Malta on Feb. 20. There were at Malta on Feb. 20, in company with the flag, the Thunderer, Condor, Cruiser, Cygnet, Cockatrice, Falcon, Fawn, Helicon, Rupert, and Antelope.

Atalanta, Capt. F. Stirling. The Hampshire Telegraph says:—"The Atalanta, which was at St. Kitts on Jan. 22, has deemed it advisable to make the homeward voyage to England sooner than was intended, as further stay in the West Indies is considered inadvisable, owing to the appearance of fever on board the ship. There is no cause for alarm, nothing approaching an epidemic having occurred, but as the ship's company is composed of more than the usual number of young hands, it has been decided, as a matter of precaution, to make for a colder latitude. The fever cases which have appeared are, more than likely, attributable to some want of care in diet and indiscretions on shore, as the ship is healthy enough."

Bellerophon, Capt. D'Arcy Irvine, late flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir E. Inglefield on the North America and West Indies station, was on Tuesday paid out of commission, and passed into the 4th Division of the Steam Reserve at Portsmouth, and has been taken round to Devonport. The Admiralty have been a little more generous to the crew of the Bellerophon than to the Mallard in extension of the ordinary paying-off leave. The Mallard's crew received the addition of five days' leave for having served eleven months beyond the usual three years. The Bellerophon's crew receive the same number of days for having been five months over three years. One day for each month is not excessive, and their Lordships would not have been exceeding the limits of good-nature had they pleased to give the Mallards eleven extra days instead of only five.—Hampshire Telegraph.

Hart, Com. Evans, arrived at Hong Kong on Dec. 31 from Shanghai, and would be ready to leave for England to pay off at the end of January.

Hecla, Capt. Morgan Singer. With reference to the recent collision of torpedo-boats at Spithead during an experimental night attack on the Hecla, the Admiralty have intimated to Admiral A. P. Ryder that they acquit the lieutenant and sub-lieutenant of the boats of any neglect or carelessness, but hope that as more experience is gained of torpedo warfare, such accidents may be avoided.

Nelson arrived in Sheerness Harbour on Saturday morning, after undergoing a course of trials with her machinery. She will be taken to Chatham, where she is to be brought forward for commission.

Newcastle, Capt. Kelly, arrived at Madeira on the 24th inst.

Northampton, Capt. J. A. Fisher, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir J. M'Clintock. The Nordenfeldt accident on board the Northampton was not, says the correspondent of the Hampshire Telegraph, "attended with any immediate fatal results, except to the gun. The defect to which I alluded in a former letter, in loading, caused the premature discharge of a cartridge, which, in turn, exploded the whole magazine, blowing the gun overboard, and, as might be anticipated, seriously injuring those working the gun. To overcome this serious defect may be quite possible, but until it is overcome, it would be well that practice with the Nordenfeldt should be suspended. When first their Lordships gave a large order for this new type of gun, I suggested that that it would have been better to have stuck to the Gatling for the time—at least, until the committee on machine guns had given a report which would aid their Lordships to select the very best. But, for some cause, £50,000 was spent in Nordenfeldt guns, right away, even while an outstanding contract for Gatlings remained to be completed. Now, I hear that the Admiralty is having that contract completed by Sir William Armstrong."

Orontes, Capt. Kinahan, left Portsmouth on Saturday for South Africa with 20 officers of various corps and the wives and families of the men of the regiments now at the Cape—viz., 58th, 2-21st, 94th, and the 60th Rifles. The Orontes returns to England with the 80th Regt.

A new club, named "The Salisbury," has been formed at 10 St. James's Square, formerly the residence of the Duke of Marlborough, and on the committee are the following names, well known in the Services, namely, Com. Cameron, C.B., Major-Gen. Coote Hutchinson, Admiral Turnour, C.B., and Lieut.-Gens. Worgan and Wray. Though named "The Salisbury," the club is non-political, and one of its special features is that it is proposed to extend to members the privilege of introducing, as visitors, ladies and gentlemen of recognised position in society, either to luncheon or dinner. For this purpose—and indeed, for all the requirements of a club—the house is admirably adapted, and its situation is everything that can be desired. One excellent rule has been established, and that is, that no candidate will be eligible for ballot until he shall have reached the age of 25 years.

Rear-Admiral Waddilove having declined to accept the offer made to him of the superintendence of the Devonport and Keyham Dockyards, the appointment was offered to, and accepted by Rear-Admiral Curme. Capt. Curme attained flag rank only at the commencement of the present year, having for two years held the office of superintendent of the Steam Reserve, residing meanwhile at St. Michael's Terrace, Stoke. Rear-Admiral Curme is marvellously fortunate in being thus selected from the very bottom of the list of rear-admirals to fill a post which is regarded as one of the prizes of the Service. To follow two such able and popular officers as Rear-Admiral Willes and Rear-Admiral Hope is an arduous undertaking, but we feel sure that if Rear-Admiral Curme adopts the same vigilant and conscientious, yet conciliatory policy, he will be cordially seconded by the officers of both dockyards, and secure the approval of the Admiralty.—Western Morning News.

The following memorandum has been issued by the Commander-in-Chief at Devonport:—"I regret to have to call the attention of the captains and officers commanding her Majesty's ships under my command to a disgraceful occurrence in Stonehouse on the night of the 5th inst., when assaults were committed on the police, and prisoners in their custody rescued. This matter has already formed the subject of magisterial investigation, when certain men belonging to ships in port were convicted of participation in the outrage, and sentenced to long terms of imprisonment with hard labour; and there is sufficient evidence to show that other men of her Majesty's ships were more or less connected with it, although the inquiry which has subsequently been held has not resulted in establishing the case against them with sufficient clearness to justify their punishment. In expressing my sincere displeasure at this unseemly occurrence, I trust I may not again have occasion to call attention to conduct which brings discredit on the Service in general and disgrace to the individuals concerned in it."

COASTGUARD SERVICES.

The Duke of Edinburgh has recommended for the Albert Medal of the First Class, George Oatley, gunner's mate and gunnery instructor at Peterhead Battery, who, during a gale, and with a very heavy sea breaking on the rocks, swam off to the Swedish schooner Augusta, which had gone ashore, at 1.30 p.m., on February 16, 1880, off Boddam, four miles from Peterhead, by which feat, accomplished at very great personal risk of life, the lives of five persons were saved, under the following circumstances:—Two rockets had been fired, the lines falling over the ship, but the crew, in spite of every endeavour by signs, &c., to make them understand what to do, would not haul on the rocket line. It was evident it was no use firing any more rockets, the crew being utterly ignorant of the working of the apparatus. Their boats had been washed away previous to striking, but no boat would have been of the slightest avail under the circumstances. George Oatley, stripping off his clothes in the bitter cold, with a tremendous surf breaking on the rocks, rushed into the water and succeeded in swimming to the vessel, which was then about 250 yards off. He was hauled on board and immediately set to work to show the crew what to do. The rocket line was picked up and the whip hauled off, the block made fast, and the hawser hauled in and secured, and in a short time the crew, five in number, safely landed, Oatley being the last to leave the vessel. There is no doubt whatever that had it not been for this perilous performance on the part of Oatley, the crew must have perished, they being much exhausted and numbed by exposure and hard work, and their boats gone.

THE DREADNOUGHT.

The annual court of this hospital was held on Wednesday at Willis's Rooms. Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty, presided. In an appeal which has been issued for increased support to the institution, it was stated that since its foundation in 1821, upwards of 200,000 sick seamen had been relieved, of whom 30,000 were foreign. Unfortunately, the hospital does not receive the amount of support necessary to maintain its efficiency, and an effort is now being made to increase the annual subscriptions from £3,000 to £5,000. Mr. H. Burdett, the secretary, having read the financial statement, the Chairman, in moving its adoption, said that the seamen of this country had a peculiar claim upon those who lived at home at ease, as well as upon those who derived profit from their labours, and indeed, it was difficult to say who did not profit by them. They were largely dependent upon the seaman's skill, energy, and endurance for the supply of the food which was necessary to the existence of the people of this country, and for the maintenance of the character, position, and influence of England throughout the world. The commerce and trade of our country would disappear if we had not seamen who were capable of enduring the hardships which were attached to a life at sea, and who were possessed of the enterprise, the energy, and the resolve which had fortunately been the characteristic of the British seaman throughout the history of this country. The life of the seaman involved exposure, dangers, and risks which persons in a similar position in life on shore were not exposed to. The workman on shore ceased to work in bad weather; but it was in the storm and the tempest that the seaman was more particularly exposed, and the risks to life and health which he had to encounter far exceeded those to which people on shore were subject. The seaman had, therefore, a claim upon society to support the Seamen's Hospital, which so well performed the duty it had undertaken. Every invalided seaman was qualified to apply for admission, and he invariably gained admittance, the only condition being that of sickness and want. Once taken in as a patient, he was not only skilfully treated, but carefully nursed, and properly fed. When he was convalescent, he was not turned out weak and exhausted, to find his living as he could in a refuge where he might, but he was kept in the hospital till he could find employment, and till he was strong enough to undertake it. He therefore claimed for the institution that it was of peculiar advantage to poor seamen who required its comforts, and that the provision it thus made was, in the highest sense, truly charitable. He had been very much struck and gratified with the evidence afforded by the report, that the seamen were not only desirous of providing, as far as they could, for their own necessities in times of sickness and need, but for their fellows, and that desire was made abundantly evident by the fact that of the £12,000 a year required to maintain the establishment, no less than £1,200 were subscribed by the seamen themselves, or one-tenth of the whole cost. He was undo the impression that in no other hospital in London did the poor who used them contribute so much towards the expenses, and the circumstance he had mentioned was all the more striking, inasmuch as the system of inviting seamen to subscribe towards its funds came into operation only three years ago. It was further gratifying that the duty thus recognised by the English sailor was also being acknowledged by the seamen of foreign countries, it having been proposed in Sweden that the Swedish masters should make provisions for repaying the charity for the advantages it conferred upon their countrymen by contributing towards its maintenance one shilling per hundred tons on each voyage to the port of Sweden. After referring to the practical sympathy which was extended to the patients by the ladies of Greenwich, the right hon. gentlemen concluded by further urging the claims of the institution to extended support. Sir Henry Holland, in moving the adoption of the report, deeply regretted that the income of the hospital had fallen off, and expressed his earnest hope that the deficit would soon be more than overtaken. Baron Henry de Worms, in seconding the motion, said it was always pleasing to advocate a good cause, and no better cause existed in the world than that of charity. The report was then agreed to. Mr. H. Burdett, the secretary, announced that among the subscriptions towards the funds which had been sent in response to the appeal recently made were £25 from the King of Sweden and Norway, £21 from the First Lord of the Admiralty, and £5 from the Swedish Ambassador. Donations had also been sent by the Baroness Burdett Coutts and many others, the total amount received reaching £500. The committee of management were re-appointed, with the addition of Baron Henry de Worms, and the usual complimentary votes terminated the proceedings.

THE RUSSIAN PACIFIC FLEET.

Orders have been received at Cronstadt to prepare a number of torpedo boats for despatch to the Pacific. It is stated that the departure of the Moscow, National cruiser, from Odessa in the spring, will be taken advantage of to send three to Vladivostock, and that six or seven more will be shortly afterwards conveyed thither by other steamers of the Moscow Cruiser Fleet.

A Central News despatch says:—"The telegram which has been published regarding the movements of the Russian Volunteer Fleet are evidently not complete as to details. It is said that the Moscow is to leave Odessa for Vladivostock, Nagasaki, and Hankow. The date of the departure of this vessel evidently points that the mission is to be one of pure commerce—that of carrying a cargo. From Vladivostock, which lies at the extreme north of the island of Japan, the treaty port of Nagasaki is the nearest point to China. The Moscow, for coaling purposes, will therefore touch at this port and cross to Woosung, at the mouth of the Shanghai river, and where the Yangtsze joins the sea. Hankow is the furthest port up this river which is navigable for large vessels, the recently-opened port of Tchang having rapids and the river between it and Hankow. This last is the biggest emporium of the tea-producing districts of China, and from it large quantities of tea go overland, viâ Siberia, to Russia. Latterly, however, a large portion of this has gone by steamer to Odessa. If the Moscow is a large or unwieldy vessel, it is probable that she may not ascend to Hankow, but have her cargo brought to her by the river boats at Woosung. Again, the Russia is said to be going from Vladivostock to Foochow, which is the chief tea depôt of mid-China, Canton holding that post in the south. Here the vessel will be at an anchorage about 13 miles below the foreign settlement at Foochow proper. There are a few Russian steamers sent out each season to carry tea to Odessa, but the major portion goes in British ships, and much is trans-shipped at either Suez or Port Said. It may be remarked that the best and most expensive of teas grown in China find their way to Russia. The bales and destinations of these two Russian cruisers distinctly point to this.

From another source we learn that, a month hence a regular steam navigation line between Odessa and Vladivostock will be opened by the authorities of the so-called Russian volunteer fleet. Ostensibly the vessels will carry corn and exiles to Vladivostock, and on the return journey take tea to the Euxine; in reality, they are chiefly destined to convey to the Far East the military material required for the construction of the new privateer port in St. Olga Bay. A small steamer, just purchased at Renfrew, is on the point of leaving Scotland for Odessa, whence it will be despatched to the Pacific, to ply between Vladivostock, St. Olga, and Nicholaiefsk.

Further Government assistance is about to be given in the distribution of relief among the distressed inhabitants of the islands off the Galway coast. The gunboat Orwell has been ordered to join H.M.S. Goshawk in this duty, and orders have also been given for the Coastguard steamer Hawk, now at Sheerness, to be held in readiness for relief-service on the Irish coast.—Standard.

At a meeting of the Italian Geographical Society at Rome on Feb. 22, at which all the members of the Swedish exploring expedition were present, held for the purpose of conferring the gold medal of the Society upon Professor Nordenskjöld, Prince Teano, the president, and Signor Cristoforo Negri, delivered speeches in honour of the expedition. Lieut. Palander, of the Swedish Royal Navy, who commanded the now celebrated Vega, the exploring vessel in which Professor Nordenskjöld made the north-east passage, will contribute an account of the voyage to the March number of Blackwood.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in packets labelled—"JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London."

ROYAL MARINE ARTILLERY.

SIR,—On reading the article in your impression of Feb. 14 upon the proposed reorganisation of the Royal Marine Artillery, I can fully endorse the remarks of the writer upon the physique and bearing of the men of that efficient corps. When a Lieutenant on the active list of the Royal Artillery, it is within my recollection of a number of the men volunteering from the Royal Marine Artillery, at the time of a reduction taking place in that force, to serve in the Royal Artillery; and subsequently on obtaining my company, two of my sergeants, who proved most admirable non-commissioned officers, were taken from that number, one becoming the company sergeant, and afterwards receiving a commission in the Gold Coast Artillery Corps. It would be manifestly unjust to the Service to alter the designation of the corps from Artillery to Infantry, and to lose the services of such skilled gunners, from their high training both at sea and on land. The most simple method would be to transfer the corps bodily to the Royal Artillery as Garrison Brigades, keeping them on separate lists for promotion, their present uniform being almost identical, and the education of the officers of the same standard. When quartered with my company in the garrison of Portsmouth, at the time Lord Fitzclarence was General in command of the South-Western District, I knew personally that his lordship had the highest appreciation of the merits of the Royal Marine Artillery, and I believe they have maintained the same high opinion from each General in successive command.—I am, &c.,

SIR,—I hope you will allow me to make a few remarks in reference to one or two paragraphs in a letter contained in your issue of the 21st inst., by a writer whose nom de plume is "Unbiassed." I would not trespass on your time or take up space in your valuable paper, if I did not feel myself called on to do so by a sense of duty towards a set of officers whose scientific education I superintended at the Naval College at Portsmouth for more than 30 years. The paragraph to which I specially wish to refer is this:—"The observations drawing a comparison as to the education qualifications existing between the Royal Marine Artillery and Royal Marine Light Infantry are hardly borne out by facts as regards three-fourths of the officers now serving, as up to only a recent date the examination for both branches was identical?" I cannot imagine a more misleading statement than this, because, if the writer means to say that the final examination of both classes of officers was identical, his statement is not borne out by facts. When candidates entered the Service by what was called "direct-commission" examination, or after having been taught for a certain time on board the Excellent as Marine cadets, the passing examination was the same for all, and a selection was made from among the successful candidates of such as were likely to succeed in a scientific course of study. These selected candidates were sent to the Naval College, to commence a course of higher scientific instruction. They were, in fact, candidates for the Marine Artillery. The education of the others, on the contrary, was supposed to have finished, and they were sent as Light Infantry officers to the various Divisions. The course at the College for the selected candidates lasted a year, and at the end of that time they were sent to the Excellent, where they went through a course of practical gunnery. In this latter course, they were required to get a first-class certificate. If they were finally successful, they became Royal Marine Artillery officers. The course was, I consider, a very severe test, and several failed. These latter also joined the Light Infantry Division. "Unbiassed" is, therefore, entirely wrong in his statement that, as regards three-fourths of the officers now serving, the examination in both cases was identical. I hope the above statement, by filling up what "Unbiassed" seems to have omitted, will show clearly the great difference between the actual scientific education of the two branches of the Service. Although I have friends in both branches of the Service, I cannot help a bias towards those who worked with such energy under my own immediate instruction. And I also cannot help saying that, however *un*biassed a man may wish to appear, he should show his want of bias by expressing the whole facts of the case, if he considers it his duty to make any statement.—I am, &c.,

SIR,—Your correspondent "Unbiassed" appears to ignore the fact that, although the examination for commissions in the Royal Marine Artillery and Royal Marine Light Infantry might at one time have been identical, yet those candidates recommended for the Royal Marine Artillery were attached on probation only, and had to undergo a long course of study at the Royal Naval College, there to pass periodical examinations, when, if satisfactory progress had not been made or the final test mastered, they had to revert to the Royal Marine Light Infantry. Perhaps "Unbiassed" will kindly say if, in June, 1866, to which date he refers, the candidate who passed third, and who was appointed to the Royal Marine Artillery (whilst Nos. 1 and 2 received Royal Marine Light Infantry commissions), had to pass any further qualifying examination, or complete an extended course of study,—which Nos. 1 and 2 had not to do.—I am, &c.,

THE CONDUCT OF THE BRITISH TROOPS AT THE CAPE.

Copy of Sir Garnet Wolseley's Report, in answer to the Inquiries as to the Conduct of the Troops in South Africa:—

(General Sir Garnet Wolseley to the Secretary of State for War.)

Army Head-quarters, Pretoria, Transvaal, South Africa, Jan. 2, 1880.—Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that by the mail which arrived yesterday from England, I received a copy of the "Daily Telegraph" of Nov. 21, containing an article on "The British Army in the Transvaal," in which general and specific charges are made against her Majesty's troops of housebreaking, burglary, assault and robbery, murder, &c., &c. I have no hesitation in asserting that the statements contained in the article in question grossly exaggerate any acts of disorder which may have been committed by a few individuals among a large body of soldiers brought into townships for the first time after a long sojourn in a wild country, where liquor could not be obtained. But in order to be able to inform you exactly what truth and what falsehood there is in the statements of the special correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph," I have desired that the landdrosts and magistrates of the several districts in the Transvaal and Natal, in which her Majesty's troops have been quartered, should report specifically on the various assertions referred to. I enclose copies of the instructions, and as soon as the replies are received they shall be forwarded to you.—I have, &c. (signed), G. Wolseley, General.—The Right Honourable, the Secretary of State for War, War Office, London.

(Lieut.-Col. H. Brackenbury to the Colonial Secretary, Pretoria.)

Army Head-quarters, Pretoria, Transvaal, South Africa, Jan. 1, 1880.—Sir,—I am desired by his Excellency Sir Garnet Wolseley, commanding the forces in South Africa, to forward to you an article which appeared in the London "Daily Telegraph" of Nov. 21, 1879, and to request the co-operation of the Government of the Transvaal in ascertaining whether there are any, and if so, what grounds for the statements made in that article as to the conduct of the troops in the Transvaal. I am more especially to request your attention to the sentences marked in blue on the margin of the article, and I am to invite you to enable the General Commanding to ascertain the truth or falsehood of the specific allegations contained in those sentences by asking for the following information from the landdrosts of all those districts in which her Majesty's troops have been quartered, viz., Utrecht, Wakkerström, Standerton, Heidelberg, Pretoria, Middelburg, Leydenburg.

1. What number of cases of housebreaking, burglary, assault, and robbery has occurred in the districts during its occupation by her Majesty's troops? How many of these cases have been traced to soldiers of her Majesty's Army, and how many soldiers have been convicted of any of these offences? Names of men, dates of offence, and conviction to be given.

2. Have any soldiers been committed for trial for murder in the district? If so, names of men and date of offence, and committal for trial to be given.

3. Have any soldiers been at work in the districts in their uniform in convict gangs? If so, the number of men, and the dates when they were so at work.

4. What number of houses is there in the township, and how many of them, if any, have been broken into by soldiers?

5. Have any women fled from the district to the large towns because of the conduct of soldiers in the district? If so, state the numbers and names, and social condition of those women, and the dates when they fled. I am also to request that in addition to these general questions, you will specially ask the landdrost of Heidelberg whether it is true that her Majesty's soldiers there "cleared out all the poultry yards, broke into all the canteens and most of the stores, ransacked the houses of the inhabitants, and stole even the church clock, so that there was nothing more left in Heidelburg to take or destroy." I am further to request that you will furnish me with any reports which may have been sent in by any landdrosts (since July 1 last) from towns in which her Majesty's troops have been quartered, setting forth the outrages to which the inhabitants have been subjected. I am to request that you will kindly instruct the landdrosts to forward the answers to these questions without delay, as the General Commanding desires to lay before the military authorities at home an exact statement, corroborated by official reports, of the extent to which the assertions contained in the article in question are true or false.—I have, &c. (signed), H. Brackenbury, Lieut.-Col., Military Secretary, Acting Chief of Staff.—The Honourable the Colonial Secretary, Pretoria.

(No. 129—M.S.) Army Head-quarters, Pretoria, Transvaal, South Africa, Jan. 16, 1880.—Sir,—With reference to my Despatch, No. 121—M.S., of the 2nd inst., on the subject of an article in the "Daily Telegraph" on "The British Army in the Transvaal," I have now the honour to forward reports from the landdrosts of all the towns and districts in the Transvaal where her Majesty's troops were quartered between July 1 and Oct. 10. I directed the landdrosts to confine their reports to the period comprised within those dates, because, as the letter of the special correspondent, "Daily Telegraph," bears date Pretoria, October 10, anything occurring after that date can have no relation to his accusations against the troops, and because it was not until considerably later than July 1 that any troops from Zululand were moved into the Transvaal. On the 3rd inst. I telegraphed to the Adjutant-General of the Forces as follows:—"Statements in 'Daily Telegraph' of Nov. 21 about conduct of British troops in Transvaal contains such gross exaggerations and transparent untruths, that it is evident the special correspondent has been the victim of a hoax. Full inquiry is being made, and official reports will be sent when received. I hope you will make this statement public." I am now in a position to deal with the statements of the special correspondent, in so far as relates to the entire Transvaal territory, to which the article more especially refers.

1. The special correspondent says:—"I complain . . . . of housebreaking, burglary, assault, and robbery, of a condition of things which fills the minds of dwellers in stations up-country with alarm and indignation, and the gaols, and scenes of convict labour, with men wearing the uniform of the Queen." The total number of cases of these crimes committed by soldiers of her Majesty's Army in the entire Transvaal up to the date of the article was:—Housebreaking or burglary, 1; assault, 3; disturbance, 1; theft, 2. The total number of soldiers working in or out of the gaols in uniform as civil prisoners was, at Heidelburg, 2, for a few days, till other clothes could be supplied; none at any other station.

2. The special correspondent says:—"I know, as a matter of fact, that the landdrosts and local magistrates have sent in reports from nearly every town in which troops have been quartered recently, setting forth the outrages to which the residents have been subjected. On Oct. 10, two reports only had been received from any of the landdrosts in the Transvaal. One of these related to a case of assault in December, 1878, when some soldiers had resented their troop horses being impounded by a Boer, who refused to release them; and the other stated that several robberies had taken place at Heidelburg, of which soldiers were suspected. The subsequent report of the landdrost of Heidelburg, herewith enclosed, shows to what extent these suspicions were true. And one report of alleged damage done by troops on the march to some deserted buildings was made direct to the Administrator.

3. The special correspondent says:—"It is not that soldiers are now awaiting trial for murder, or that they may be seen at work in their uniform in convict gangs, exposing the whole race and the Army to the degradation which should fall on them alone, but that, &c." No soldier has ever been accused of murder in the Transvaal. One soldier was committed for trial for murder in Natal, and was acquitted at the trial. It has been shown above what was the number of soldiers who have worked in uniform as prisoners for civil offences, and none of these ever worked with convicts, the only convict prison being Pretoria.

4. The special correspondent says:—"There is not a house in Heidelburg close at hand which has not been broken into, with two or three exceptions, and other stations are nearly as bad." There are 40 houses in Heidelburg, of which three—viz., two canteens or liquor shops, and one store—were broken into. None of these cases were traced to soldiers. One house was broken into by a soldier in Leydenburg. At no other town was any house broken into.

5. The special correspondent says:—"Women are flying to the large towns, where there are some guarantees of safety in the shape of police, as though they were hunted out by the Zulus or Swazis." Every landdrost denies that any women in the district under his charge fled, at any time, on account of the conduct of the soldiers.

6. The special correspondent says that, "Since Sir Evelyn Wood's time Utrecht has suffered somewhat, although the public-houses have been put out of bounds." Only one soldier was convicted of any civil offence at Utrecht, and that was an assault upon a native, for which a fine of 2s. 6d. was inflicted. No house has been broken into, and the landdrost of Utrecht gives a complete denial to all the statements in the "Daily Telegraph," as regards that town and district.

7. The special correspondent says:—"The story is well known; it is, in fact, repeated in wearisome iteration every week. As an inhabitant of Heidelberg said the other night, 'It must soon end, for they have cleared out all the poultry yards, broken into all the canteens, and most of the stores, ransacked our houses, and stolen even the church-clock; so there is nothing more to take or destroy.'" The landdrost of Heidelberg says:—"Poultry yards were cleared out, but not traced to soldiers; the presumption is that the boys and natives attached to the commissariat did most of it. Canteens were broken into, but not reported; also one of the stores, not reported nor traced. The church clock was stolen, but not traced." I need scarcely point out the absurdity of supposing that a soldier on the march would steal a church clock, which he could not possibly either conceal or dispose of in such a place as Heidelburg.

Having now dealt with the specific allegations as to the conduct of the troops, and shown that they contain "gross exaggerations and transparent untruths," as stated in my telegram of 3rd instant to the Adjutant-General, it is, perhaps, scarcely necessary for me to take any notice of the accusation against the military authorities, of "treating in an easy way" serious evils which are proved by the official records never to have existed. But the letter of the special correspondent points more especially to Heidelberg as a scene of gross disorder and crime, and says: "If the commandants at the various stations would only adopt well-known means of coercion and prevention, there would be far less military crime than there is at present." I, therefore, quote, as the best denial of this wholesale charge, the voluntary statement of the landdrost of Heidelberg.

"Considering the large number of men stationed here at several times, the conduct of the troops has been very good, and I have to thank the several commanding officers here during the time mentioned for assistance given by them at all times whenever required." Her Majesty's soldiers in the Transvaal are neither better nor worse than their comrades in other quarters of the globe. Freshly released from a long campaign in a savage country, where for many months no drop of liquor, other than the rare ration of rum served out on occasions of special fatigue, had ever passed their lips, some of them were doubtless tempted to drink more than was good for them. It is to me matter of satisfaction that so little crime resulted from this great temptation. The enclosed official reports of the landdrosts bear the best testimony to the behaviour of the troops, and I trust that at least the same publicity may be given to this Despatch that has been given to the article in the "Daily Telegraph."

That article has been copied into many newspapers, British and Colonial, and has been made political capital of by the enemies of the English Government in this country. At the date when it purports to have been written, the special correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph" was the guest of His Excellency the Administrator of the Transvaal. The officials of the Transvaal Government were always close at hand, and the special correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph" could at any moment have referred to them, or to myself, or to the officers of my staff, for information as to the truth of any reports which might reach his ears. I cannot but deeply regret that so grave a slander upon the officers and men of her Majesty's Army should have been penned and published by one who has lived much amongst soldiers, without his having referred to any one competent authority to enable him to prove or disprove the truth of the information. It seems to me inconceivable that he should have thus acted, unless, as I stated in my telegram to the Adjutant-General, he was the victim of a hoax, or allowed his imagination to be worked upon by some one who had the deliberate design of circulating false reports against the honour of Her Majesty's Army.—I am, &c. (signed), G. J. Wolseley, General.

(Questions addressed to Landdrosts having reference to an article which appeared in the "Daily Telegraph.")

1. What number of cases of housebreaking, burglary, assault, and robbery has occurred in your district during its occupation by her Majesty's troops; how many of these cases have been traced to soldiers of her Majesty's Army, and how many soldiers have been convicted of any of these offences? Names of men, dates of offence, and of conviction, to be given.

2. Have any soldiers been committed for trial for murder in your district? If so, names of men, and dates of offence, and committal for trial, to be given?

3. Have any soldiers been at work in the district in their uniform in convict gangs; if so, the number of the men and the dates when they were so at work?

4. What number of houses is there in the township, and how many of them, if any, have been broken into by soldiers?

5. Have any women fled from your district to the large towns, because of the conduct of the soldiers in the district; if so, state the number, and names, and social condition of these women, and the dates when they fled?

Colonial Secretariat, Transvaal, Jan. 16, 1880.—Sir,—With reference to Mr. Osborn's letter of the 8th inst., in which he promised to forward you any reports which had been received from landdrosts or others, complaining of the conduct of her Majesty's troops, I have now the honour to forward the only correspondence in the office having reference on the subject.—I have, &c. (signed), H. C. Shepstone, Colonial Secretary. The Chief of the Staff.

(Enclosures.)

Copy of Telegram from Landdrost, Heidelberg, to Lagden, Private Secretary, Administrator, Pretoria.—Inform Administrator that several robberies have occurred here; soldiers suspected. Commanding officer here has placed serjeant's guard in town to assist my police; gaol building very much required.

(His Excellency Sir Garnet Wolseley.)

When I was at Middleburg, a Mr. S. A. Ortel complained to me that the men of the column which lately passed his farm (Eland'sfontein, about 15 miles from Middleburg, on the Derby road), took the doors, windows, and part of the roofing of his house for firewood. As he has asked for compensation, I should feel obliged if your Excellency would kindly cause inquiry to be made as the statement.—(Signed), W. Owenhangon, Nov. 7, 1879.

(Captain Stewart, Staff Officer, Transvaal Field Force.)

I have made inquiries. Commandant Ferreira positively declares that no damage was done by his men; that on their way to Zululand there was only one door, and no windows whatever in the building, and that a sentry was placed upon the houses to prevent any possible damage, and the same precaution was taken on the way back from Zululand.—(Signed) Fred. Carrington, Major, 24th Regiment, commanding Mounted Troops, Towakain's Hill, Nov. 18, 1879.

(No. 119.) To Officer Commanding 94th Regiment, Camp Paguani, Nov. 18, 1879.—Memorandum.—Please report upon this.—(By order) (signed), H. Stewart, Captain, Staff Officer.

(No. 355.) The Superintending Officer Transvaal Field Force.—I have made inquiries. The charge referred to was not done by men of the 94th Regiment. Had it been I would have known of it.—(Signed), J. Murray, Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col., commanding 94th Regiment. Port Albert Edward, Nov. 21, 1879.

To Chief of Staff.—Returned. No information obtainable.—(Signed) B. C. Russell, Lieut.-Col., commanding Mounted Field Force. Nov. 26, 1872.

Forwarded for your Excellency's information.—(Signed), G. Wolseley, Gen., Army Head-quarters, Sekukuni's Town, Nov. 30, 1879.

The Colonial Secretary. Please address a letter to the Landdrost informing him of the substance of the foregoing.—(Signed), W. O. L., Dec. 6, 1879. Done, vide L. B., 615 I.—79.—(Signed), D.S., Dec. 8, 1879.

(No. 615 I.—79.) Colonial Secretariat, Dec. 8, 1879. Sir,—With reference to a complaint lodged by a Mr. S. A. Ortel with his Excellency the Administrator on the occasion of his recent stay at Middleburg, to the effect that the column which had then lately passed his farm, Elandsfontein, situated about 15 miles from Middleburg, on the Derby road, had taken the doors, windows, and part of the roofing of his house for firewood. I am now directed to inform you that after full inquiry into the matter it does not appear that the damage in question was caused by the men of Ferreira's Corps when passing Elandsfontein on their way to Zululand, or back; neither does it appear that the injury complained of was brought about by the men of the 94th regiment or by any other section of the column. I am, therefore, to state that unless Mr. Ortel is in a position to produce sufficient proof to substantiate his claim and to identify the persons who caused the damage as alleged, it will scarcely be possible for the Government to take any further steps in the matter. You will be good enough to communicate with Mr. Ortel in terms of this letter.—I have, &c., (Signed) M. Osborn, Colonial Secretary.—Acting Landdrost, Middleburg.

(Circular—No. 20, C. B.—79.)—To Landdrosts and Field Cornets:—Colonial Secretariat, Transvaal, Sept 1, 1879,—It having been brought to the notice of the Administrator of the Government that Volunteers and soldiers have on various occasions committed irregularities on the line of march which have not been duly reported to the Government, I am directed to request that you will, without delay, report, for his Excellency's information, any instances of the kind which may have come to your notice, in order that the offenders may be detected. You will also call upon all field-cornets and justices of the peace in your district to furnish you, for the information of the Government, with full particulars of any case of this nature that may have come to their knowledge, and forward their reports to me, together with any remarks that you may see fit to make thereon.—(Signed) F. C. Shepstone, Acting Colonial Secretary.

Note.—The cases reported have only had reference to Volunteers.—H. C. S., Jan. 16, 1880.

No. 1 (Copy—R. 2849—79), Heidelberg, Dec. 3, 1878.—Honourable Sir,—I have the honour to enclose a complaint of Daniel Johs. Van der Heever. As the soldiers were on route to Pretoria I sent the original. By this post I sent the "Gemobokstroven" in the case of F. von Grassow.—I have, &c. (signed), C. v. Nabal, Public Prosecutor.—To the Honourable the Attorney-General, Pretoria. (A true copy.) (Signed) C. v. Nabal.

No. 2. (Copy—R. 3849—79.) (Translation.)—Appeared before me, Dirk Cornelis Nabal, Public Prosecutor and Justice of the Peace for the district of Heidelberg, Transvaal, on this Nov. 30, 1878, Daniel Johannes Van der Heever, who deposeth on oath: I am a farmer, living in the district of Heidelberg, on the farm Eendrayt, close to the main transport road to Pretoria. This morning I found two horses in my lands; I turned them out of my crops into my kraal with the purpose of sending them to the pound. About eight o'clock a.m. a redcoat (soldier) came to fetch the horses. He asked why I had put the horses in the kraal. He caught the horses and brought them to the door of the kraal. I would not open before he had paid damages, when he threatened to beat me. I said, if you want to hit me do so, but I do not give the horses without payment. He then went away and returned with another. The second one who came asked me, why have you stolen my horses. I said I have not stolen them, but they were in my lands. I would show him where they had damaged my crops. The last arrived told the first one, go and take out the horses. I said I do not deliver them, or you must first pay me, otherwise I send them to the pound. I demanded 5s. The last arrived took out a knife and cut the reins. I caught hold of the poles of the kraal door to prevent them from opening the door. In the meantime my wife came from the house to see what had become of the affair. The man with the knife threatened to hit me with the knife, when my wife seeing this gave him a blow with a broom-stick. He aimed a blow at my wife, but did not hit her. During this time the soldier who was in the kraal crept out again and gave me a blow from behind on the side of the head on the right side. He caused this wound (the wound is below the right eye, about ⅜ inch long and 1-16 inch deep). There was a stick lying on the kraal when he hit me. I jumped towards the stick in order to beat him. When I had the stick in my hand he retired, and the other, as far as I could understand, told him to go and fetch more redcoats. He left then, and the other remained. I then opened the door myself and told him to take the horses, and that I had the intention to complain about the case. He took the horses and led them round until the others came, about 12 or 14 soldiers, I guess. Four or five of them commenced to beat me, when I gave way and went towards my house, after which they all left with the horses.—(Signed) D. J. V. d. Heever.—(Before me) (signed) C. v. Nabal, Public Prosecutor.

No. 4.—(Translation.) (R. 2849—79.)—Office of the Public Prosecutor, Heidelberg, Dec. 13, 1878.—Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter, No. 65, of Dec. 5. Van der Heever does, of course, not know the names of the parties who committed the assault, but says he would recognise the person who hit him, when he sees him. It is very much to be deplored that such irregularities are committed by soldiers, particularly as they do not promote good-feeling. This Van der Heever is a son-in-law of J. P. Mare, one of the chief men of the Doornfonteim Committee, and however insignificant the case may be, the matter is represented by such a man in a way likely to stir up the hate against British rule. He himself went, after what had happened, to the camp armed with a gun, and wished to see the commandant. But the officer did not show up, and he had to go back without gaining his object. J. P. Mare says that his intention was to acquaint the officer with the assault, and to ask him to request him to recommend to his people not to repeat such acts again. The officer will very likely not be quite ignorant of what happened; and should he be charged to institute an inquiry and to reprimand the guilty or punish him according to military discipline, it would certainly give satisfaction to the parties.—I have, &c. (signed) D. C. Nabal, Public Prosecutor.—To the Hon. the Attorney-General, Pretoria.—(A true copy.) (Signed) D. C. Nabal.

(R. 3032—79.) Landdrost's Office, Heidelberg, Sept. 28, 1879.—Honourable Sir,—Referring to Memorandum on your Minute, Aug. 18, 1879, and my reply thereon, No. 386—79, dated Aug. 21, 1879, Re Van der Heever, I have the honour now to report that Mr. Van der Heever called at my office this day, and I fully explained to him how desirous his Excellency the Administrator is that his complaint should have every possible attention. He, however, states that it would be too difficult now, after such a length of time, to recognise the parties he accuses; and that he feels still rather annoyed that his case was not taken further notice of at the time by the Attorney-General.—I have, &c. (signed), Carl Weekermann, Landdrost. The Honourable the Colonial Secretary, Pretoria.

(No. 386—79).—(The Colonial Secretary.)

In reply to the Memorandum on Minute, dated Aug. 18, 1879, received Aug. 21, 1879, I have the honour to state that I have never failed, at any time, to report cases of public interest, either direct to his Excellency or to the Honourable the Colonial Secretary, as soon as any came to my knowledge. That the reasons for not reporting the Van der Heever case were:—(1) That I considered the case too frivolous to lay before you, and (2) That the matter having been duly reported to the Attorney-General, I had no right to interfere nor disagree with his final decision, sent in his letter to the Public Prosecutor, No. 65, dated December 5, 1878. I have known the said Van der Heever for some years, and am afraid he was very insolent. I told him at the time that he should have quietly gone to the officer in command of the detachment, who would, no doubt, have seen things righted; instead of laying his complaint many hours after the occurrence, and when the soldiers had already left the district. Hearing the one-sided complaint of Van der Heever only, it would be very unfair of me to form a judgment; but knowing the anti-English feeling of the complainant, and him further goaded on by his father-in-law, Mr. J. P. Maré, who is so well known for his hatred of British rule, I cannot but come to the conclusion that the whole affair is very much exaggerated, and has been eagerly grasped by the writers of the paragraph in the "Volstem," of the 4th inst., as a grievance. I have sent out the messenger of the court with a letter to Van der Heever, of which the following is a translation:—

(No. 382—79.)—Landdrost's Office, Heidelberg, Aug. 21, 1879.—Sir,—I have the honour to bring under your notice that your complaint against some soldiers whom you accuse of having committed an assault on your person on Nov. 30, 1878, has been laid before his Excellency the Administrator of the Transvaal. It will be requisite for you to appear before me to give a definite description of the soldiers who have assaulted you. His Excellency requests me further to inform you that if it is at all possible that said men can be identified, they will certainly be punished if and when found guilty. Any costs you may incur to Pretoria and back will be paid by Government, as it is the wish of Government and of his Excellency personally that such irregularities of the troops shall be severely punished.—I have, &c. (signed), Carl Weekerman, Landdrost. D. Van der Heever, Esq., Heidelberg.

I trust that Mr. Van der Heever will, in fairness, lay the above letter before his compatriots, the writers of the paragraph in "Volstem." The messenger of the court has just returned from Mr. Van der Heever, and he has promised to come in shortly and see me about the matter, although he declines going to Pretoria; I shall then report further.—(Signed), Carl Weekermann, Landdrost. Aug. 21, 1879.

Landdrost's Office, Middleburg, Jan. 12, 1880.—Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge your Circular Minute, No. 38-80 C.B., relative to contraventions of the law by her Majesty's troops (not volunteers) between the date of July 1 and Oct. 10, 1879. I beg to state, to the best of my belief, none of her Majesty's troops were stationed in this district during the period named in the circular, and no cases of crime have been officially reported to me as having been committed by her Majesty's troops during the time specified. I will, however, proceed to answer your queries seriatim. 1. Housebreaking, nil; burglary, nil; assault and robbery, 1; assaults, common, 4. No cases have been traced to her Majesty's Army, and no convictions have taken place. 2. No soldiers have been charged with murder in this district. 3. No soldiers have been at work in convict gangs in this district. 4. There are 54 houses in this township: none have been broken into by soldiers. 5. No cases have occurred of women flying for refuge to the towns in consequence of the misconduct of the soldiery. In replying to the questions as above, I may state that I have adhered to the interval between the dates given. I may, however, state that during the whole time that her Majesty's troops have been stationed in Middleburg, only one case of theft has been brought before me in my capacity as Landdrost as being committed by a soldier. The prisoner was found guilty and served his term of imprisonment. The charge of assault and breaking windows in Mr. Cook's hotel against three soldiers of the 21st Regiment, broke down in consequence of the contradictory nature of the evidence and failure of proof as regards identity. No other specific charge has been brought against her Majesty's troops since they have been stationed here of a serious nature. In many cases, where a little roughness and abusive language has been indulged in, I have much ground for the belief that some provocation has been first given by civilians.—I am, &c. (signed), John Scoble, Landdrost. The Honourable the Colonial Secretary, Pretoria.—(True copy.) H. Brackenbury, Lieutenant-Colonel, Military Secretary.

(From July 1, 1879, to Oct. 10, 1879.) No. 1.—Cases of theft, six; of which three by natives, two by volunteers, one by soldier. Name of soldier, Henry Woolcot, private, of 80th Regt.; convicted Sept. 23, 1879. Cases of housebreaking and theft, one. One by a soldier; name, Herbert Clayton, private, 80th Regt. Crime, housebreaking and theft. Convicted, Oct. 9, 1879. No. 2.—No. No. 3.—I do not remember any. No. 4.—About 50 houses. One broken into. No. 5.—Not that I know of.—(Signed), Geo. Ross, Landdrost, Landdrost's Office, Lydenburg, Jan. 12, 1880. (True copy.) H. Brackenbury, Lieut.-Col. Military Secretary.

(No. 19-80.)—Landdrost's Office, Heidelburg, Jan. 6, 1880.—Honourable Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your Circular, No. 38-80 C.B., Jan. 5, 1880, requesting information on behaviour of her Majesty's troops here from July 1 to Oct. 10, 1879, and herewith annex answers to the several queries. 1. On Aug. 5, 1879, Private Massey, 58th Regiment, was found guilty of theft; sentence, three months' imprisonment, with hard labour. On Oct. 6, 1879, Private John Power, 4th Regiment, fined 5s. for disturbance. On Oct. 7, 1879, Private J. Smith, 4th Regiment, three months' imprisonment, with hard labour, for theft. 2. The above-named prisoners were at work in their uniform for a few days in the beginning of sentence until other clothing could be supplied. 4. We have forty houses here, of which three were broken into. 5. No women whatever have fled into town because of the conduct of the soldiers. 6. Poultry yards were cleared out, but not traced to soldiers; the presumption is that the boys and natives attached to the commissariat did most of it. Canteens were broken into, but not reported, also one of the stores not reported nor traced. The church clock was stolen, but not traced.

On the whole, the reports have been greatly exaggerated, and mischief was promptly stopped with the assistance of the officers commanding giving large pickets, and having a military police station stationed in the immediate vicinity of the Landdrost's office, who are so stationed still, and whose services are at my command night and day. Considering the large number of men stationed here at several times, the conduct of the troops has been very good; and I have to thank the several commanding officers here during the time mentioned for assistance given by them at all times whenever required.—I have, &c. (signed), Carl Neckermann, Landdrost. The Honourable Colonial Secretary, Pretoria. (True copy.) H. Brackenbury, Lieut.-Colonel, Military Secretary.

MILITARY EQUIPMENT.

The Aldershot correspondent of the Western Morning News writes:—Major-Gen. Sir F. W. J. FitzWygram, Bart., commanding the cavalry brigade, and Major-Gens. Pakenham, Payton, and Cameron, commanding infantry brigades, and the commanding officers and adjutants of each cavalry and infantry regiment in the division, attended at Gen. Sir Thomas Steele's office, at the head-quarter seat, South Camp, for the purpose of giving their opinions and offering suggestions on various points connected with the dress and equipment of cavalry and infantry officers. In regard to the crimson silk sash worn by infantry officers, and for which it was proposed to substitute a cross-belt, the General stated that her Majesty was entirely averse to any change being made. The proposed new forage-cap was then considered, the various patterns which were recently sent round to each infantry regiment in the division to obtain the opinions of officers on them having been entirely disapproved of. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, who was present as colonel of the 1st Batn. Rifle Brigade, suggested that the new cap should be of a similar pattern to that worn by the infantry officers of the Austrian Army. His Royal Highness produced one of these caps, which was handed round for inspection. It is somewhat like the Glengarry at present worn by the men, with the addition of two side flaps that can be tied under the chin, but when it is not necessary to use them, they can be fastened in front of the cap by means of a couple of buttons, on which the badge of each regiment could be placed. This cap was thought a great deal better than many recently proposed patterns. Major-Gen. Cameron held that the cap with the turndown peak, like that worn by the Guards in fatigue dress, was the best. The Duke of Connaught and many of the cavalry officers gave as their opinion that the round cap worn by cavalry and rifle regiments was useless for service, and looked slovenly when it became crushed. A proposition was made that each officer should provide himself with two caps, one for dress purposes, &c., the other for parade and field service, as it seemed somewhat difficult to combine elegance and utility in the one cap. The next point discussed was the desirability of all officers carrying field-glasses, and it was unanimously said that such an article would be of the utmost use to both cavalry and infantry officers. Some discussion arose as to the way in which they were to be carried. Major-Gen. Sir F. W. J. FitzWygram and Col. Garnett, 11th Hussars, thought that the glass would be best carried on the person. Major Bourne, 5th Dragoon Guards, and Major Campbell, 7th Dragoon Guards, thought that the saddle would be the best place for it. The manner in which infantry officers should wear the glass was also discussed. Col. Lucas, 109th Regt., suggested that it should be worn on the belt, in a manner somewhat similar to the way in which the water-bottle of the new valise equipment was proposed to be worn. Mr. Steward, the well-known London optician, was in attendance with over a dozen patterns of field-glasses. "No. 7" was the one selected for infantry officers. Its price in aluminium will be about £5. The one chosen for cavalry officers was larger, heavier, and very expensive.

THE ROYAL MARINES.

SIR,—However closely the doors of committee-rooms are guarded, there are still chinks and crannies, mental or material, through which faint whispers of the matters discussed in secret conclave are conveyed to the outer world. It has been so, from "great congresses" down to more humble committees, such as that now sitting on the Royal Marines; and there can scarcely be much surprise if, among those interested in the future welfare of that old and hitherto highly estimable corps, there is great excitement at the rumour of certain propositions and opinions said to have been submitted or expressed by some of the Committee. It would seem that the first vital consideration with regard to any ulterior action would be to decide whether the corps of Royal Marines is still to be deemed a necessary adjunct to the naval force of this country, or otherwise; and then, secondly, how best either to abolish it altogether, or else how to maintain its present efficiency, or by what means, if any, to improve that efficiency. But if the rumours that—faintly, it is true—vibrate on the ears of the eager expectants outside the council-chamber are true, the worst foes of the corps are to be found amongst its own representatives. Is it possible that any superior officer of the corps can deem it desirable, or even expedient, that in view of possible contingencies, the officers of the Royal Marines should be so reduced in numbers as to render it necessary, in case of landing for active service (when serving on board ship) to officer the rank and file on such occasions by subordinate officers of the Royal Navy? That Naval officers have become "great soldiers" may possibly be true, but if they are so good, why retain the services of the Royal Marines? The fact is, the officers of the Royal Navy would willingly retain the services of some 10,000 or so of the finest serviceable men under the Crown, but with a selfish jealousy would ignore (if possible) the services and claims to consideration of the officers to whom the high efficiency of those men is due. Comrades though they have been in many an hour of danger, there exists a strong feeling of jealousy on the part of the sailor in regard to the "sodger." In no case is the feeling so displayed as in the circumstances attending the position of an officer of the Royal Marines when embarked. The jealousy between Jack and Joe has been proverbial, and now seems to be culminating in the assumption by Jack of all Joe's military duties, and the relegation of all the menial work of the ship to the "sodger," whether blue or red. Joe is no longer required on board ship, except as a "hairy housemaid," to polish brass-work, &c., and do the general cleaning "'tween decks." Still, the personnel of the rank and file is too valuable a factor in the crew of a ship-of-war to be easily dispensed with; but as regards the officer,—ah! that is totally different. Get rid of him, if possible. Keep a few of them on shore, to reorganise and rediscipline the men demoralised by service afloat. Such appears to be the reasoning of the Naval officer; but that any officer of the corps capable of judging should advocate such a step seems too monstrous for belief. It surely cannot be true. The corps is already under-officered, and the rank and file frittered away in small detachments on board small ships, where their duties are anything but military, or conducive to discipline. The truth is, that in consequence of the thorough (?) military education of the Naval officer of the day, and the very good soldiering qualifications displayed by Jack, the necessity for maintaining a special body of men, such as the Royal Marines, has apparently ceased to exist. If such is the opinion of the Naval authorities, let them boldly announce it, and proceed at once to abolish in a liberal spirit a corps which has gained for itself so much renown, as well as helped to add so many a laurel-leaf to the Naval crown. Far far better abolition than permit mismanagement and petty jealousy (gradually, it may be, but surely) to produce the gangrene of mistrust, loss of prestige, and consequent lowering of the character of the corps. Events have but too frequently shown that the jealousy between the Naval officer and the Marine officer in regard to military duties,—the especial duties of the latter,—can tolerate no assumption by the soldier of any executive authority. (The Services will quite understand the allusion.) The one officer is ever, in all positions afloat, the senior; the other the subordinate, even when the age, service, and experience of the subordinate ought, and would in other circumstances, to justify him in taking the lead. It is undeniable that the corps of Royal Marines owes its efficiency, firstly, to the "special regulations" under which it was originally created, and which made it a special Service; and secondly, to the exertions and esprit de corps of its own officers, who under manifold adverse conditions have struggled to maintain its high reputation. The early history of the Marine Corps in connection with the Navy, as also their behaviour at a critical period, which eventually gained for them the distinctive appellation of Royal, events, circumstances, and exigencies which we will hope have for ever passed away did, nevertheless, engender feelings of dislike on the part of Jack against the faithful Joe. In that generation Joe was a distinct, though an integral portion of the Navy. "Mais nous avons changé tout cela." A new generation of officers has arisen "who knew not Joseph," and for the last thirty years the most persistent efforts have been made to assimilate him as entirely as possible to the seaman. Except as regards pay or any material advantage, these efforts have been partially successful with the rank and file; but when an officer of the corps has been present, the result has often been unpleasant "friction," and in such cases, Right most generally goes to the wall when opposed by Might. Whether the officer so placed maintains (perhaps to his own personal comfort) a discreet silence or blindness, or is defeated in his endeavours to preserve his status, the result is the same—loss of dignity in the eyes of his men. He is nobody, and where this is the case, the discipline of the corps must suffer. This antagonism (to give it no worse name) on the part of the Naval towards the Marine officer, and the constant endeavour to reduce him to zero, can only be explained as the perhaps natural outgrowth of memories connected with the past, when Joe was a power rather than a non-entity on board ship. But that any superior officer of the corps, who has had any experience of "life afloat," can be found ready and willing to increase the disadvantages under which the Royal Marine already labours, by withdrawing him still more from the influence and supervision of his own officer, is inconceivable, unless under the supposition that, in these days of mercantile speculations, it is hoped that such unworthy sycophancy will be compensated at some future time by the expected mess of pottage.—I am, &c.,

COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF LINE CAPTAINS.

SIR,—As the time is approaching when compulsory retirement, laid down in the Royal Warrant of 1878, comes into force, I venture to write you on the subject, hoping I may be able to convince you of the injustice it will do, and the ruin it will bring on the senior Captains of the Army. At the head of the captains' list, in nearly every regiment, you will find two, three, or more captains of 18 years' service, who, although they have purchased, some all, and many most of their steps, get, deducting the percentage of their invested money, less pay, in spite of their long service, than their more fortunate comrades who have entered since the abolition of Purchase, and attained the rank of captain in six or seven years. Yet the Purchase captains will soon find themselves debarred from further promotion (solely on account of bad luck), and liable to be compulsorily retired and professionally ruined. Is it fair or just to treat in this manner a number of old officers, who entered the Service when no such rules were in force, and who, had such rules been foreseen, would certainly never have invested their money in purchasing steps? Is it fair, under these circumstances, to compulsorily retire officers able, willing, and anxious to serve on, and who, if allowed to do so, would many be shortly promoted, and sacrific them for the benefit of non-purchase officers of one-half and in many instances, one-quarter their service? I come now to the inadequate scale of pensions laid down in the Royal Warrant. A purchase captain of 25 years' service compulsorily retired gets a maximum pension of £259 per annum. He has probably paid £2,400 for his commissions; this money he therefore sinks. Deduct the interest of this sum at 5 per cent. (£120), and the result is that after 25 years' service, when near the top of the list, he is compulsorily retired on £139 per annum. A captain who entered after the abolition of Purchase receives, after 20 years' service, £200 per annum. Surely if compulsory retirement is carried out, and a captain is retired solely on account of bad luck, a pension sufficient enough to enable him to live should be given; and no one, I fancy, will assert that a man accustomed to live as a gentleman can keep up his position on £259 per annum. The question, then, is what can be done to keep up a flow of promotion under the non-Purchase system without making, as at present, the Purchase officers the scapegoats. There appears but one just and fair way. Offer to captains of a certain service a liberal voluntary retiring pension, but limit the retirements, say, to one captain per regiment per annum, giving the choice to the senior captains. This, with the step given every five years by the retirement of the lieutenant-colonel, should give a fair flow of promotion; and would it not be much better to have one captain retiring of his own free will, say, even on £300 per annum, than probably, in most regiments, an average of two captains compulsorily retired on from £200 to £259 per annum, and many old officers reduced to absolute want. Parliament will soon meet again, and I trust that you will aid, with the powerful advocacy of your columns, the cause of the officers who entered the Service under the Purchase system, and lay before the present authorities at the War Office and the public the injustice and ruin compulsory retirement will carry with it.—I am, &c.,

Reviews.

Records of the 90th Regiment. By A. Delavoye. (Richardson and Co.)—With very praiseworthy diligence, Capt. Delavoye has traced the history of the 90th Regiment (Perthshire Light Infantry) from its formation down to the present day. The volume now published presents an interesting record of the services of a gallant regiment which was first formed so far back as the year 1760, under the title of the 90th Regiment of Light Infantry. It served, with considerable credit, in the West Indies two years later, and was disbanded on its return home in 1763. It appears that many years after in 1779, when Spain joined France in the war which was being carried on by the latter country against England, a 90th Regiment was again raised, and remained embodied, under the command of Col. Loftus Tottenham, until peace was concluded at Versailles in 1783. The compiler takes up the thread of his narrative at the year 1794, shortly after war had been declared by the French Convention. New levies were then urgently demanded, and the "Perthshire Volunteers" being one of the first reported as complete, became the 90th Foot, and obtained leave to be enrolled as a light infantry battalion. The progress and services of this regiment are minutely followed up to the period when the victory of Ulundi brought the Zulu war to a close. Since the arrival of the regiment in South Africa, its casualties amounted to 70 killed and wounded, including 5 officers. On Oct. 20 it was ordered to proceed to India, and landed there on Nov. 10, under the command of Major Rogers, V.C. Capt. Delavoye has performed his task with sufficient zeal and ability to secure the approval of his military critics; while, at the same time, the volume which he has published contains a considerable amount of matter that will prove interesting to the non-military reader.

Life of Lord Lynedoch. By Alex. M. Delavoye. (Richardson and Co.)—The compiler of this ponderous volume has evidently spared neither time nor trouble in laying before the public a highly interesting memoir of the most important features in the life of Mr. Thomas Graham (afterwards Lord Lynedoch), of Balgowan, Perthshire, by whom the 90th Regiment had been raised, in the year 1794. The valuable manuscript which has been placed at Capt. Delavoye's disposal is so abundant, as to enable him not only to prepare the memoir already mentioned, but at the same time to compile an historical record of the 90th Regiment of Light Infantry, in which he lately held a commission. The volume, which contains more than 800 pages, comprised solely of despatches and correspondence, is so well provided with "index," "chronological table of reference," "appendix" and "pedigree," that the reader will find no difficulty in ascertaining any particulars in reference to Lord Lynedoch with which he may wish to acquaint himself.

In future, vacancies for engine-room artificers and stokers caused by their being pensioned or invalided are to be filled by fresh entries from the shore as they occur. This will keep up the supply, as applications are constantly being made.

Another week is announced of the performances of the Carl Rosa Company at Her Majesty's Theatre, and a provincial tour will then be undertaken, commencing at Manchester, in March. No novelties will be produced before the close of the season.

Mr. Edgar Bruce has commenced his management of the Prince of Wales's Theatre with the cleverly-constructed three-act drama of "Forget-me-Not," written by Messrs. Herman Merivale and F. C. Groves and produced at the Lyceum during an interesting season last August. The transfer of the play to this stage has been accompanied by the reappearance of Miss Geneviève Ward in the character so prominently displaying her histrionic talents, and thus the audience enjoy a reproduction of the drama under the most favourable circumstances. The cast is indeed now much stronger than it was originally. The grace and refinement of Miss Kate Pattison communicate a special charm to her embodiment of Alice Verney, Mr. John Clayton gives increased effect to the witty combats of Sir Horace Welby with the subtle Marquise Stephanie; and Mr. Flockton's representation of the revengeful Corsican is highly characteristic. A lively prelude is now furnished by Mr. Sydney Grundy's comedietta of "A Little Change," originally played for Mr. Buckstone's benefit at the Haymarket, in July, 1872, when Mr. and Mrs. Kendal and Mr. Arnott and Miss Caroline Hill represented the characters now briskly sustained by Mr. Edgar Bruce, Mrs. Bernard Beere, Mr. Edwin Bayley, and Miss Ada Gordon. The Prince of Wales's well deserves support, for the management has succeeded in obtaining a really good company and a couple of excellent pieces, and no one visiting the little house in Tottenham Street can complain that Mr. Bruce has allowed the reputation of the theatre in any way to deteriorate now that it has passed into his hands.

The prolonged success of "The Merchant of Venice," at the Lyceum, has induced other managers to venture on Shakespearian revivals. Mrs. Bateman at New Sadler's Wells presents "Macbeth" for ten nights, with Miss Bateman as Lady Macbeth, and Mr. H. Talbot, who played the part at Drury Lane a dozen years ago, as Macbeth. Mr. Walter Bentley, a young actor of much vigour and capacity, is a highly effective Macduff. At a special morning performance on Saturday, Mr. L. Martin Eiffe, a German tragedian from the Dune Theatre, Meinengen, will make his first appearance on the English stage as Macbeth. In this revival the witch scenes from Middleton's play are restored, and the music ascribed to Locke, retained. "Othello," for six nights only, is announced to be played in March, and "Hamlet" will then follow.

A very careful rendering of Shakespeare's delightful comedy of As You Like It has been given at the Imperial "Afternoon Theatre." Miss Litton gracefully plays Rosalind, Mr. Hermann Vezin is an excellent Jaques, Mr. Lionel Brough an amusing Touchstone, Mr. William Farren an effective Adam, and the general cast is most efficient. New scenery has been painted for the occasion by Mr. Perkins, and the incidental music of Arne, Bishop, and Charles Horne is well rendered by competent vocalists. The entire representation is most creditable to the management.

Mr. John Clayton having gone to the Prince of Wales's, Mr. Charles Kelly now plays Joseph Surface at the Vaudeville. "The Green Bushes," brought out at the Adelphi nearly forty years ago, has been played for the first time at the Park, and with this week a successful season at Hengler's Grand Cirque in Argyll Street is brought to a close.

At the St. James's, Mr. Tom Taylor's popular drama of "Still Waters Run Deep" will be revived on Saturday, March 13, with Mrs. Kendal as Mrs. Sternhold, Mr. Kendal John Mildmay, Mr. W. Terriss Captain Hawksley, and Mr. John Hare Mr. Potter.

The death is announced, at the age of sixty-nine, of Mr. John Knowles, so many years lessee and proprietor of the Theatre Royal, Manchester, and one of the most notable provincial managers of his time.

We (Standard) hear that the report of Lord Airey's Committee upon Army Reorganisation will not be in the hands of Col. Stanley sufficiently early to allow of his foreshadowing the changes likely to be introduced when he makes his explanatory statement on the Army Estimates.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S

CHLORODYNE.

THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE,

Which is admitted by the Profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered.

CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhœa, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery.

CHLORODYNE effectually cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Hysteria, Palpitation, and Spasms.

From Lord FRANCIS CONYNGHAM, Mount Charles, Dec. 11, 1868.

Lord Francis Conyngham, who this time last year bought some of Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne from Mr. Davenport, and has found it a most wonderful medicine, will be glad to have half-a-dozen bottles sent at once to the above address.

⁂ Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manilla, to the effect that Cholera has been raging fearfully, and that the ONLY remedy of any service was CHLORODYNE.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

CAUTION.—BEWARE of PIRACY and IMITATIONS.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE; that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, was deliberately untrue, which, he regretted to say, had been sworn to.—See Times, July 13th, 1864.

Sold in Bottles at 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d. None is genuine without the words, "Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming Medical Testimony accompanies each bottle.

DR. DE JONGH'S

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.

The PUREST. The MOST PALATABLE. The MOST DIGESTIBLE. The MOST EFFICACIOUS.

Incontestably proved by Thirty Years' Medical Experience to be

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' 'Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

THE ARUNDEL & CALEDONIAN HOTELS.

The ARUNDEL is near the New Law Courts, in the Strand, being next door to the Temple Station.

These two old-established Family Hotels, from their especially advantageous position, both overlooking the Thames Embankment, combine light, air, and perfect quiet, although in the centre of London. They are now under one management, and are conducted on the principle of a fixed charge of SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE PER DAY, which includes a good Bedroom, Breakfast of hot and cold meats, Luncheon, Dinner of six courses, and Tea and Coffee in the evening; also the use of large, well-appointed Sitting-rooms, including an ELEGANTLY-APPOINTED DRAWING-ROOM.

These Hotels, containing upwards of 200 Rooms, have been for many years largely patronised by Members of Parliament, the Clergy, and by Military and Naval Officers and their Families, by reason of their central, but retired localities, affording all the comforts and luxuries of high-class Hotels.

IT is essential that promotion in the Army should be accelerated to such an extent that officers shall not, in their various ranks, exercise functions for which from age they are morally and physically unfit. But this is not the only reason for keeping up a reasonable flow of promotion. To the mass of officers the Army is not a remunerative profession. If, therefore, we wish to attract able men into it, we must appeal chiefly to ambition. To render this appeal effectual, the active, zealous, capable man must be convinced that he has a good chance of rising early to a position of interesting power and responsibility. At present, this chance is a small one, and it would be to the benefit of the public service that it should be increased. So slow as a rule has promotion been in the British Army, that it has come to be accepted as an article of faith by the Horse Guards that youth is a positive disqualification, and the necessity of experience has been unduly dwelt upon. It seems to be forgotten that some of the best officers who served under the Duke of Wellington in the Peninsula were young men, and that Napoleon's grand army was full of Generals who would not be thought by us old enough to hold the rank of major. Military zeal is apt to be quenched by too long a stay in the lower grades, and the officer who has passed an undue proportion of his service in the performance of subaltern's and captain's duties, becomes so habituated to leading-strings, that when a Colonel or General he misses their guidance and shrinks from incurring necessary responsibility. Age and experience which has been profitable are not necessarily identical terms. One man's mind matures more rapidly than another, and one man has as much mental and moral ballast at thirty as another has at forty-five. Besides, one man has from accidental circumstances more opportunities of qualifying himself for high command than another of twice his service. For example, a captain of ten years' service, who in that rank went through the whole of the Crimean or Indian Mutiny campaigns, was ipso facto more capable of fulfilling the functions of major than one of twenty years' service, who had passed all his time in English and Irish out-stations, with, perhaps, a year or two in a West Indian island. Again, an adjutant is several years ahead in experience of those of his contemporaries who have never been anything but company officers. It is a truism that there are old "duffers" and capable young officers, yet it seems to be assumed by the authorities that age is a merit and youth a demerit. The result of this assumption is the system of compulsory retirement, under which the Army is now groaning, and which is daily losing us the services of excellent officers. The answer, no doubt, to this statement will be,—"That is all very well. It is easy enough to condemn the system, but what do you propose to substitute for it?" There are several ways of obtaining the desired flow of promotion. One is the offering large bonuses to tempt officers to retire at an early age. Another, is to render retirement compulsory at a certain age. A third is the present composite system, which combines the two foregoing systems, and adds compulsory retirement if an officer has not attained a certain rank after a certain number of years' service. A fourth method is promotion by selection. The first system worked by no means well in the old East India Company's Army, though on account of the bonus system which was combined with it many officers retired before they became physically unfit for work. The pure age retirement scheme gives but slow promotion in the Army Medical Department. As to the third system, now applicable to the whole of the combatant branch of the Army, the slightest examination will show that it is both a cruel injustice and an injury to the public service. If an officer has been unlucky in promotion in his early days, he is actually punished for it, as if it were a proof of want of capacity, and in the prime of life, and with valuable experience, is turned out of the Army, simply because vacancies are wanted. Good men and bad are alike shunted just at the time when there is an equal combination of military experience, mental balance and energy, and physical vigour. By mere accident, some bad men are retained, while some good men are placed on the shelf. There is this further absurdity, namely, that service under twenty years of age is not allowed to reckon towards pension,—i.e., in favour of an officer; while on the other hand, it is counted against him for compulsory retirement. How devoid of common-sense this regulation is will become at once apparent to any one who reflects that often the years most pregnant in military experience and instruction are often those under twenty years of age. For example, there are several cases of officers who, joining in the Crimea at the age of sixteen, had gone through the Indian military campaign before they attained the age of twenty. Surely this is a reductio ad absurdum! Surely those four years were more profitable, represented more real soldiering, than five times the number of years spent subsequently in garrison! Yet these four years are not allowed to count in an officer's favour! The present Secretary of State for War is fully sensible of the absurdity of this regulation, and has been pressing upon the Treasury the necessity of its being rescinded. He succeeded some time ago in obtaining a concession in favour of service being reckoned from eighteen years of age, but very properly was not satisfied with less than the total abolition of the clause in the Warrant. The Treasury then proceeded to make actuarial calculations, with what result we know not, though it was expected that the new Warrant would have been published on the 19th inst. The delay of the par excellence slow and obstructive department of the Government has caused much stoppage of promotion, and considerable hardship and inconvenience. This, however, is probably a trifling matter to the narrow-minded, red-tape-worshipping officials of the Treasury, who are invariably the greatest obstacles to Army reforms, and the chief cause of military inefficiency. This question of boy-service is, however, but a detail, an important one, it is true—still, only a detail; and the main point is whether the present system of obtaining a reasonable flow of promotion is conducive to the public interests. We unhesitatingly reply that it is not. Some of the reasons which have induced us to arrive at this conclusion, we have already given. We will add two others. In the first place, it is a breach of faith; in the second place, an officer knows for two or three years before his professional execution takes place, that, barring accidents, it is inevitable. Under these circumstances, is it reasonable to expect that he will feel much zeal or exhibit any great devotion to the Service? We now come to the important question,—"If the present system is objectionable, what other can be substituted for it?" That answer we propose to give in detail on a future occasion, but to-day must content ourselves with saying that the only remedy, in our opinion, is a more liberal adoption of promotion by selection.

On the appointment of the Royal Commission to inquire into the defence and protection of our Colonial possessions and commerce, we remarked that much valuable information could doubtless be afforded by Captain Colomb, R.M.A., knowing, as we did, that few could be found who had given such special attention to the necessity of providing safe coaling, repairing, and refitting stations in our Colonies, for the requirements of our Fleet and Mercantile Marine in time of war. That we were correct in our estimate of Captain Colomb's knowledge on these points, is borne out by the issue of a work by Stanford, of Charing Cross, bearing the name of Captain Colomb, and the title, "The Defence of Great and Greater Britain." This volume has been the work of years, and though from its size it does not contain every detail that will have to be considered, yet it gives such a mass of information on the present position of our Colonies as regards their state of defence, the capabilities of our Navy in protecting commerce, the Naval and Military raw resources and developed resources in the Colonies, and Imperial and Colonial responsibilities in war, that it cannot fail to be of great service to the Commission in pursuing their labours, and will further be a guide by which the results of their labours can be judged by the public, when the report is laid before Parliament. As we have said, Captain Colomb has for years been devoting much time and ability to the question of the defence of our Colonies, and it is in great measure due to his persistent efforts to bring the question into notice by reading papers before the Royal United Service Institution and Colonial Institute, that the matter has taken the prominent position it now has. So great hitherto has been the confidence of England in her Fleet, that the Royal Commission of 1859 simply left the question of our extended commerce and our food supply to the protection of the Fleet, and the Select Committee of 1861 also came to the conclusion that the protection of our Colonies must depend for defence mainly on Naval supremacy. Thus the more important questions have been shelved; but at last, we are really looking into the details, and considering such matters as coal-supply and repairing stations for our ships, which cannot keep the sea as they did in the days of old. Steam and armour-plating has given a wonderful impetus to foreign Navies of late, and the growth of the German Navy, the carefully prepared plan of re-organisation of the French Navy, which is quietly turning out a fleet that will give her a high place among maritime Powers a few years hence, and the energy shown by Italy in the construction of the most powerful class of vessel, together with the formation of a Russian volunteer fleet, specially intended to harass commerce and worry the Colonies, is a proof that it is time we looked around, and were not content to rest undisturbed in the full belief that our Naval supremacy placed us far and away beyond the combined efforts of possible enemies. The wants of the Pacific Squadron were plainly spoken of when we saw a chance of meeting an enemy in those seas, and the China station is not one whit better provided with coaling stations, for a late Commander-in-Chief on that station has declared that, with an imminent prospect of war, he felt very doubtful whether he should ever get a pound of coal without taking it forcibly from a neutral. So much for coaling-stations; and in the matter of docking accommodation, our ships are equally badly provided. There is now in dock at Malta the flagship of the East Indies command, which had to be sent to the Mediterranean from Bombay, for the purpose of being repaired. At the Cape there is no dockyard worth the name, and we have recently seen a patched-up ship returning home a cripple, under sail, to make good her repairs at Devonport. The Pacific station is not much better, and more than one ship has had to leave that station because the needed repairs could not be undertaken there. Thus, then, are our distant stations unprovided in these days of armour-plating and steam-power, and we have not awakened a moment too soon to the necessity for placing coal supplies and docking accommodation on a safer footing. We have been content to go on in days of steam as we did in the time of sail-power, and although we have built ships of enormous fighting-power and of great cost, we have forgotten the necessity, or shirked the duty, of providing fortified depôts to which these ships could repair in time of need. And as regards the protection of commerce, Captain Colomb points out that we have water-roads 13,000 miles in length, commanded by points of British territory, but there is not a place of refuge where helpless merchant ships in war can find even temporary safety or security along their whole length. That these matters require to be thoroughly looked into none will deny, and Captain Colomb deserves the heartiest thanks for having put before the country a clear statement of what is required for the better protection of the Empire and British commerce.

It is announced that the Queen and Princess Beatrice will leave Portsmouth in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, accompanied by the Admiralty yacht Enchantress, the Trinity yacht Galatea, and the Royal yacht Alberta, on the 22nd inst. for the Continent. Her Majesty will land at Cherbourg, and proceed to Germany. The special object of her Majesty is stated to be to visit the tomb of the late Princess Alice, and to deposit on it a wreath of immortelles. The Queen will be the guest of the Crown Prince of Prussia, and during her residence abroad—which will last ten weeks—will principally reside at Darmstadt.

On the arrival in England of the remains of the Nordenfeldt gun which caused the accident on board the Northampton, the Admiralty has, we hear, directed it to be sent to Whitehall for the personal inspection of the Board, the members of which not unnaturally take a great interest in this dangerous weapon.

The French Government have awarded a gold medal and diploma to William Gould, commissioned boatman of Coastguard at Penzance, in recognition of the gallant services rendered by him at the wreck of the French brig Ponthieu in May last.

Rear-Admiral Hamilton, C.B., Director of Naval Ordnance, will, it is not unlikely, shortly hoist his flag, in which case Rear-Admiral Herbert will be appointed to the Admiralty as Director of Ordnance, for which post his experience in the Excellent for the past three years naturally renders him well fitted.

Rear-Admiral Hoskins, C.B., will, we hear, shortly be given a seat on the Royal Commission on the defence of our Colonies and the protection of our commerce, and his knowledge of the requirements of the Australian station is likely to be of service to the Commission.

Captain Henry D. Grant, C.B., has been selected to act as chairman of a Committee to be appointed to revise the troop-ship regulations now in force. The Committee will be composed of Naval and Military officers.

According to the new German Navy List, that navy now numbers 103 vessels of all descriptions, carrying 430 guns. It includes, of line-of-battle ships, eight ironclad frigates (the Grosser Kurfürst is still in the list), five ironclad corvettes (one building); 11 spar-decked corvettes, nine flush-decked corvettes (four building), two gunboats (Albatross class), seven first-class gunboats; of coast defence vessels, one ironclad, 11 armoured gunboats (three building), six torpedo-boats, four second-class gunboats, seven despatch-vessels, two transport ships, ten training-ships; of vessels for harbour service, ten steamers, three barrack-ships, three pilot-boats, and four fire-ships. In the scheme for the foundation of a Fleet in 1873, it was provided that by 1882 the following ships should form part of the German Navy:—23 ironclad ships, &c., viz.,—eight frigates, six corvettes, seven monitors, two floating batteries; also 20 larger and smaller corvettes, including training-ships, six despatch-vessels, station tenders, &c., 18 gunboats (including survey vessels), two gunnery-ships, three sailing brigs, and 28 torpedo-boats, of all sizes. It will be seen that the number of armoured frigates, of corvettes (including training-ships), as well as of gunnery-ships and sailing brigs, required by the plan of 1873, is already in existence. On the other hand, the present effective strength falls short by two ironclad corvettes, six other armoured vessels (monitors), two ironclad batteries (the construction of which has been entirely abandoned), and 22 torpedo-boats; while the number of despatch-vessels and gunboats originally provided is exceeded by one and three respectively. It thus appears that the plan of 1873 has undergone considerable change in the course of years.

The Easter vacation of the cadets on board the Britannia will be from Wednesday, March 24, to Thursday, April 8.

From Lisbon, where the Channel Squadron will stay ten days, the ships go to Gibraltar, and thence to Madeira.

The recent burial of a Naval officer of high rank in an Admiralty burial-ground reminds us that the cemetery in question, although used as such for many years, has never been consecrated. To Nonconformists, whose relatives may be buried there, the fact of its being unconsecrated would be of no consequence; but to the minds of most Churchmen it would offer an objection. A further objection to its use is the knowledge that it can the more easily be disposed of and put to other purposes, as was an unconsecrated Naval burial-ground in the early part of the present century, on the site of which a handsome row of houses is now built. It may be instanced that portions of intermural consecrated grounds have often been built over; but this has only been in cases where the ground has not been used within living memory, and there can be no doubt but that consecration is, at least in a great measure, a preventive to God's Acre being put to other purposes than the reception of the bodies of deceased Christians.

Admiral Arthur Farquhar, who recently hauled down his flag at Devonport on retirement on account of age, is about to make a four months' trip in the "Far West," and starts immediately for the States. This looks like fitness for active service.

The damage suffered by the Dragon in her recent grounding is very considerable, so much so that it was thought better to send her to Mauritius than to attempt her repair by artificer divers at Zanzibar. Some twenty-five feet of false keel and a portion of her fore-foot have been carried away, and a quantity of copper stripped off. Her rudder was also damaged, though experiment proved that her steering capabilities, even with her broken rudder, were not greatly impaired. No inquiry has yet been held into the circumstances attending the accident.

The Spanish Minister of Marine proposes to fix the strength of the Navy of Spain for 1880-81 at thirteen frigates, seven steam-vessels, nine gunboats, seven cruisers, and nine transport and other vessels. The fleet will be manned by 5,000 sailors and 4,000 marine infantry.

An interesting paper on the adaptability of ocean steamers to war purposes was read yesterday at the Royal United Service Institution, by Mr. Donald Currie, C.B., which we hope to notice next week.

The following officers' deaths have been reported to the Admiralty since January 20:—Rear-Admiral Charles W. Hope, Surgeon George Gibson, Paymaster Henry N. Scaife, Naval Cadet A. B. Sclater-Booth. Since the same date, the following officers' names have been removed from the Navy List:—Chaplain Rev. R. H. Treffry, M.A. (resigned), Sub-Lieutenant Eyre M. Shaw (resigned), Acting Sub-Lieutenant Bowes R. Daly (resigned), Engineer Edward W. Marsh (dismissed Service by court-martial), Boatswains George Todd and John Beckingham (pensioned).

The Duilio, having completed the preliminary trials of her engines, will shortly commence more detailed trials in the presence of a representative of the Armstrong firm and a number of foreign officers. Mr. Barnaby, C.B., has left for Spezia, to represent the Admiralty. Garibaldi has expressed his great satisfaction at the success of this formidable vessel. Whom is he aiming at now?

Rear-Admiral Stirling was at Callao on January 22, and was to leave in the Triumph on January 24 for Esquimault, calling at La Payta, Galapagos Islands, and would visit Acapulco about March 3, remaining till March 7, and possibly visit La Paz about March 12. The Admiral is expected to arrive at Vancouver Island about April 25. The Pelican will join the Commander-in-Chief at Galapagos, taking the mails from England due at Payta on January 18.

Prior to 1845, the Marines, equally with the first and other Royal regiments, wore the red band, but in that year it was replaced by the black oakleaf, the idea being that a general change was about to be made. The red band was, however, retained by all other Royal regiments, the Royal Marines being alone without it. An opportunity now presents itself of rectifying this error.

The Admiralty is beginning to find out that the screw propellers in use on many vessels leave much to be desired in the way of efficiency, and Messrs. Thornycroft have been instructed to fit a new screw on an improved pattern to the Lightning. In the case of the Northampton, the tinkering to which the propellers have been subjected, to make them come up to Admiralty views on screw propulsion, has resulted in an actual loss of efficiency. In order to give additional clearance between the propellers and the run of the ship, the diameter of the blades was reduced by six inches at the leading edge to one inch at the following edge, thus giving a mean reduction of 14 in. The draft of the ship at her last trial before leaving England was as nearly as possible the same as before—viz., 24 ft. 9½ in. forward, and 25 ft. 3 in. aft. There was no wind, no sea, and as a result, very little draft in the furnaces, with a corresponding difficulty in keeping the cylinders (of which there are six) supplied with a full head of steam. The mean pressure in the boilers was 57·68 lb.; the average vacuum in all the condensers exceeded 26 in., that in the forward starboard condenser being 26·68 in.; the mean pressure in the starboard cylinders was 26·549 lb., and in the port cylinders 26·449 lb.; and the indicated horse-power of the starboard engine 3,005·19, and of the port engine 3,057·46 horses. The total power developed during the four official runs was thus 6,062·65, which, being in excess of the contract power, was so far satisfactory. But the most extraordinary circumstance is that while the horse-power developed was about 500 more than before the modification of the screws, a mean speed of only 13·173 knots was realised, or substantially the same as before. There is, consequently, considerable waste of engine-power. It is true that the ship carried about five degrees of starboard helm, by means of which her way was retarded and the useful power of the engines handicapped; but at a former trial the ship carried as many as 10 degrees of weather-helm, so that the balance, so far as the performance of the ship is concerned, was still more noticeably in favour of the previous trial. The necessity of the starboard helm is attributed to the extra revolutions made by the port engines, but the starboard engine was reported as making 86·63 revolutions, while the port engine made 85·41 per minute. It appears evident that further modifications will be required in the propellers, to secure better speed results.

Captain the Hon. Edmund Fremantle, C.B., C.M.G., has again distinguished himself in saving life at sea, and the bronze medal he now wears will probably be replaced by the award of a silver one. Some particulars of the last exploit of this gallant officer will be found under the name of the Invincible, which he commands.

Charles Edmund Grissell is again a prisoner in Newgate, and his conduct has called for severe remarks from Members of Parliament. Some curiosity is felt as to whether their Lordships will take any steps to exercise the control they possess over "this person."

The death is reported of Mr. Richard Rowband, B.A., late Naval Instructor of the Bellerophon, which was so recently paid off.

The officers and crew of the London, at Zanzibar, are not a little exercised in mind at the prospect of having to remain on the station for three years instead of two, as has been the case with former crews. It was understood when the present relief crew was sent out, that they would be relieved after two years at Zanzibar, and as the place is not a lively one, it is not surprising that they looked forward to the completion of the two years as the end of their stay at Zanzibar. Originally, the commission of the stationary ship at Zanzibar was only for 18 months, but the present ship's company has been over two years absent from England. The climate is bad, and this is the third hot and rainy season the present officers and crew have had. Zanzibar is a most monotonous place, with no society, shooting, fishing, or pleasure of any sort, and there is not even a billiard-table in the place. The officers and men are constantly away in boats cruising, some approaching eight months out of twelve in open boats. The exceptionally good conduct of the ship's company was recognised last January, when a letter expressing the Commander-in-Chief's admiration of their exemplary conduct was read to them on the quarter-deck. They feel that had they been a lot of blackguards always undergoing punishment, they would have been relieved. No leave is given, except to those in the special class; consequently, there are very many men who have never been on shore, except on duty, since leaving England, and a larger number have only been once. A large number of men are now sick, and the number is increasing, and additional work is thrown on the men on account of so many ratings being vacant or temporarily filled by Seedie boys. Can the Admiralty have forgotten that the last two ships' companies were relieved after two years' service?

Mr. Frederick Wilkinson, clerk, who lately came home in the Bellerophon from the North America station, has been found medically unfit for further service, and will consequently be discharged from the Navy. His seniority as clerk was September, 1877.

Captain Hopkins, who was appointed to the command of the Téméraire on January 26, has been given the command of the Excellent, gunnery ship, on the promotion of Rear-Admiral Herbert to flag rank, a selection which will be accepted as satisfactory. A successor to the command of the Téméraire has been found in Captain the Hon. Walter Carpenter.

Queenstown appears to go begging, and no flag officer who has been asked has shown any great anxiety to take that command while there may be a chance of getting a better one. The statement that Rear-Admiral Lethbridge has been selected is, at least, premature, as far as we can ascertain.

Captain Richard Bradshaw, C.B., is to have the title of "Inspector of Boys' Training Ships" affixed to his name in the Navy List.

The cause of the retirement of Navigating Lieutenant Stoate, late of the Dasher, was, we regret to hear, unfitness for further service, owing to a severe injury received by him while serving on board the Brisk in New Zealand, for which he was granted a pension for wounds. He is thus, while yet comparatively young, incapacitated from further service, and we hope their Lordships may see fit to increase his pension for wounds so as to supplement the usual retired pay which falls to the lot of one of the seniority of Navigating Lieutenant Stoate.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., arrived at Gibraltar on Thursday in the Inconstant, and was to leave yesterday for Malta, to transfer his flag to the Alexandra.

Commodore Wilson was at Hobart Town in the Wolverene on January 19, and was to make a visit to Melbourne at the end of January, returning thence to Hobart Town.

Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, C.B., was at Bombay on February 14, awaiting the return of his flagship from Malta.

Vice-Admiral Robert Coote, C.B., was at Singapore, with his flag flying in the Vigilant, on February 3.

Vice-Admiral Sir F. L. McClintock arrived at Trinidad in the Northampton on February 7, having left Barbadoes, with Tourmaline in company, on February 5. The Admiral was to leave on February 13 for Grenada, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, and Antigua.

We regret to hear that an outbreak of measles has occurred on board the Impregnable and Implacable, training-ships. Stringent measures are being taken to prevent the disease spreading to other ships.

A memorial to the officers and men of the Active who fell in action or died from sickness during the Kaffir and Zulu operations was unveiled at Victoria Park, Portsmouth, on Thursday. The monument consists of an obelisk of polished grey granite, on a pedestal of the same stone, and is surmounted by a scroll of immortelles. Two sides of the slab at the foot of the obelisk record the names of those who were killed in the late war; on the third side is the motto of the ship ("Agilis et parata"); and on the fourth the following inscription:—"This monument is erected by the officers and ship's company of her Majesty's ship Active, late flagship on the West Coast of Africa and Cape of Good Hope station, to perpetuate the memory of those of their shipmates who perished while gallantly doing their duty with the Naval Brigade of that ship, during the Kaffir war of 1877-78 and the Zulu war of 1879."

We hear that the Select Committee on Machine Guns have reported against the use of the Boxer cartridge for machine guns, recommending that it should be superseded by the solid-drawn cartridge.

The new War Minister, having ordered certain accounts to be examined, one of the chief clerks at the War Office, Paris, blew out his brains. This act of desperation will not, however, replenish the State coffers. The deceased was highly popular in his department, and a large number of persons attended his funeral.

General Farre has appeared before the Parliamentary Committee, charged to examine the expediency of reducing service in the active Army to three years. The General is strongly opposed to this reduction. He said that in Germany the period of service is three years in the infantry, and four years in the cavalry and artillery; but that it would be impossible to introduce this system into Republican France, where liberty, fraternity, and equality flourish. He might have added that all the big men are taken for the cavalry and artillery, and that it would be very hard to make a man serve four years, instead of three, because he is a few inches taller than his neighbour. The new War Minister does not consider that good soldiers can be formed in three years; and he naturally asked,—With short service, where are we to get our non-commissioned officers?

The Avenir Militaire, in noticing the recently-ordered augmentation of the German Army, observes that the increase to be made will be equivalent to an army corps, adding that Germany is superior to France in infantry, cavalry, and the manner in which her forts are armed and garrisoned. In field artillery, however, the Avenir considers France more than a match for her great rival. We find in another journal a military writer complaining that a fourth of the French infantry is not disponible; that the system of fourth battalions, with effectives as weak as they are at present, is mischievous to the Service, and that there are not men enough for the officers. The captains used to be judged after the condition in which their companies were found on inspection; but now, there is such a scarcity of men, that one captain drills three companies. While in peace there are too many officers and too few men, in war there are too many men for the staff.

A French infantry colonel has hit upon a novel expedient for heating water without an extra cost to the Government, and all his men are soaped and douched once a month, and wash their feet more often. The system for affording the cavalry a similar luxury is accomplished by covering over jars of water with stable manure, and in this way a plentiful supply of hot-water is always ready. The cold-water system is, no doubt, more healthy, but one must be to the manner born. There are no fire-places in French barracks, which are very miserable dwellings—so miserable, in fact, that they prevent many a non-commissioned officer, who might otherwise re-engage, from remaining in the Service.

General Vinoy has been removed from his post of Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honour. The General's crime is that he is suspected of being a Bonapartist. He is a man of the highest honour, a gallant soldier, and loyal friend. Perhaps there is need of a more elastic chief. The Chancellorship has been bestowed upon General Faidherbe, who distinguished himself during the Franco-German war, in command of the Army of the North. For several years past General Faidherbe has been an invalid.

Lieutenant-Colonel F. Lyons, R.A., succeeded Colonel G. H. J. A. Fraser, R.A., on the 1st inst., as Superintendent of the Royal Laboratory, Royal Arsenal, Woolwich.

Colonel H. T. Arbuthnot, R.A., took over, on Monday last, the duties of Superintendent of the Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield, vice Colonel F. Close, R.A., whose period of service in the appointment has expired.

Surgeon-Major Hector is well entitled to the honourable mention which was made of his bearer company by the Secretary of State for War, in the House of Commons, but it must not be inferred, as it might be from the words which were quoted, that they moved along close in rear of a fighting line, picking up wounded men who would otherwise have been brought to the rear by their comrades. In fact, whilst the troops were in line there were scarcely any casualties from the enemy's fire, and the men were not exposed to any but the most insignificant fusillade. The Lancet seems to be ignorant that every regiment in India has its dooly-bearers, and right gallantly do the dooly-wallahs march after the combatants, often under a hail of bullets. The appreciation of service and the rewards of the medical officers recently must be gratifying to the department.

"How is it intended to compensate Major Bushman, 9th Lancers, for the very serious injustice he has suffered in having been made supernumerary in his regiment, at a moment when he was actually on passage to India, to take up his command at Cabul?" This is a question which is being asked by every cavalry officer at the present moment, and it is one to which it seems difficult for even the Horse Guards to furnish any satisfactory answer. Major Bushman left Secocoeni's Mountain on December 1, en route to Afghanistan, and reached Cabul on the 29th ult., to assume command of his regiment. He was seconded on December 22, so that he had actually been three weeks on his way when the notice appeared in the Gazette of Major Abadie's promotion to fill his place.

As Yorkshire contains nine regiments of Militia, with between 200 and 300 officers, it has been proposed that they should all join in having a united annual dinner in London, during the season. The scheme has already met with the support of five of the present commanding officers, and nearly seventy officers have sent in their names to the hon. secs., Major Cadman and Captain G. A. Raikes, at the Royal United Service Institution, London.

The appointment of Colonel of Royal Horse Artillery at Bangalore is about to become vacant, by the promotion of Colonel G. G. Pearse. The name of his successor is awaited with some anxiety, as it is reported a selection will be made from the newly-established roster, owing to the disinclination of some officers of the Royal Regiment to serve in hot climates.

The Bombay Army has marked its sympathy with the Empress by contributing, as a whole, towards the Prince Imperial Memorial Fund. The British cavalry in Bombay, the fifteen batteries Royal Artillery, the Royal Engineers, the eight regiments British infantry, the 7th Regiment Native Cavalry, and the 27th Regiment Bombay Infantry, have forwarded their subscription, in very small sums. The Commander-in-Chief, the Personal and Head-quarters Staff, the Divisional Brigade and Station Staff, the Military Staff of the Governor, and the Departmental Staff, whether under the Governor or the Commander-in-Chief, have all contributed. The Bengal and Madras lists have not yet been received.

Sir W. Palliser's experiments on Wednesday at Erith were unquestionably successful in proving the power of resistance of guns adapted on his principle, but we are not satisfied with the "bulging out" or the safety of "the safety-valve," as thoroughly as the clever and indefatigable inventor is, and we shall wait a little longer before we offer an opinion. Sir W. Palliser has always had a claim to a hearing on the ground of past work, and he has now strengthened it very considerably.

There is not a member of the present Government, nor, we believe, a single member of the Conservative party, who did not resist the changes in our military system, which landed us in this debateable land where the short-service army is quartered. They held up their hands and lifted up their voices, cried aloud and spared not. And now they will not see that any of the evils they deprecated, foretold, and deplored have come to pass, and are apparently wroth with those who say that they were wise and right in their generation, which is, to say the least of it, remarkable.

The French papers are apparently ignorant of the fact that during the last two years large additions have been made, very quietly, it is true, to the French heavy artillery. It thus happens that France now disposes, in case of war, of a total of 231 batteries of heavy artillery (position, foot, naval, territorial, and veteran), served by 58,450 men. The fortress artillery of the eastern neighbour of Germany has been still more considerably increased. Russia disposes now, in the matter of heavy artillery, of fifty battalions of four companies each, of a peace strength of 100 and on a war footing of 300 men; total, 60,000 men. Austria has, in time of war, a siege artillery of 17,300 men, formed into 72 companies. Italy possesses 83 companies, of a war strength of 16,600 men. Who can blame Germany if, surrounded by such formidable battering power, she is looking to her guns?

The Natal Mercury of January 27th contains the announcement from Pretoria that "Dr. Russell's statements are untrue," and that an official reply was in the course of construction. In the same paper appears the following from their correspondent at Utrecht (Transvaal):—"The detachment of the —th Regiment, stationed here, are making themselves rather notorious. Some time ago, they broke into the Commissariat Stores whilst under the charge of sentries, and during the holiday and absence of Mr. McDonell broke into his dwelling-house, and took property worth £50; and last week two of them took the military water-cart, pitched off the water-casks, and went to the farmhouse of Mr. Gert Muller, and loaded up the cart full of furniture. They were luckily caught in the act on the premises. One has deserted, and the other got six months' imprisonment. Robberies are of daily occurrence, nothing is too hot or too heavy. From a Government waggon to a lap-dog, nothing comes amiss." We omit the number of the regiment. Perhaps the statement is untrue. We should like to know if the Adjutant-General had heard anything of the matter referred to?

There are more "finishing touches" to the Airey report. The members of the Commission sat, we believe, on Thursday, and possibly signed it, but of this we are not informed. It is stated that a good deal of what would be found in the short-hand writer's notes of the evidence may be looked for in vain in the printed matter, but of that we are not able yet to speak with confidence.

A commission has been appointed by Sir Garnet Wolseley, consisting of Captain J. Alleyne, Royal Artillery, president; G. M. Rudolph, Landdrost of Utrecht; and Lieutenant R. P. Littledale, Royal Engineers, to finally settle and beacon off the boundary between the Swazi country and the Transvaal. Captain Alleyne was lately employed on the Zulu Boundary Commission.

Sir J. Ferguson has appointed Lieutenant-Colonel H. Stacey, Scots Guards, his military secretary. The applications for the aides-de-camp and other posts at the disposal of the new Governor of Bombay have been since very numerous; but we believe none of the appointments are now vacant.

Colonel the Hon. G. Villiers, who was lately Boundary Commissioner in Zululand, is appointed Military Attaché at St. Petersburg.

Colonel St. Hill, having resigned the appointment of private secretary to the Governor of Tasmania, will now be able to devote the whole of his time to the local forces of that colony under his command, and which have attained so high a state of efficiency under his supervision. Complimentary addresses, almost universally signed, have been presented to him, urging him to continue in the command.

When Colonel Stanley said the other night that Dr. Russell had made statements "without due evidence," he made himself a judge in a case of which he had not heard the evidence. Officers who think that their services in the South African campaign may be discredited, which it would be most unjust to do, by the details which have been published of certain acts of indiscipline on the part of some of these young soldiers, may have told Colonel Stanley that they regretted the statements; but from letters from many officers, and from conversations with many others, we form the opinion that there is not any solid foundation for the judgment with which Colonel Stanley has associated his high authority.

An offensive paragraph in the Statesman attributes to the Private Secretary of the Viceroy a course of proceeding of which that officer is incapable. It imputes to him the exercise of undue pressure on Sir F. Haines to induce him to retire, and speaks of him as "representing the Wolseley clique." Surely that is most unbecoming and discreditable language to use in reference to the honourable man and distinguished officer, on the part of a respectable journal?

On his advancement to the rank of Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets, Dr. Watt Reid, who has been borne in the President to conduct the duties of the Medical Department of the Navy, has been confirmed in his office as Director-General. Sir Alexander Armstrong, who has thus far been retained in the Navy List as Director-General, will now be removed from the Active List altogether.

Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets Ahmuty Irwin, C.B., who has now been promoted, entered the Navy January 4, 1851. He served with the Naval Brigade in the Crimea, where he was severely wounded. His name was mentioned in the Gazette as being continually under fire when attending the wounded at the capture of Ningpo from the rebels in 1862, and was again mentioned for his services at Cape Coast Castle. He was nominated a C.B. March 31, 1874, and promoted to deputy inspector-general on the same day.

The Committee of the Anson Memorial Fund, with the sanction of His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief and the Secretary of State for War, have instituted an annual prize at the Royal Military College at Sandhurst, for the most deserving cadet, to be called "The Anson Memorial Sword." They have invested in Consols a sum of money in the names of the Earl of Lichfield and Lord Elcho, the interest of which sum will provide the cost of the sword for all time to come. The committee have also arranged, by the kind permission of the Dean and Chapter, for the erection in Lichfield Cathedral of a memorial brass, with the following inscription, "This memorial is erected in memory of Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. A. H. Anson, V.C., third son of the first Earl of Lichfield, who died on the 17th day of November, 1877, greatly regretted. He is buried at Cannes, France. He served with great distinction in the Crimea, India, and China, and he sat in Parliament for some time as representative for the borough of Bewdley. An intrepid soldier, and an enlightened politician, he was highly esteemed by the Army. He was respected in the Senate. In perpetual record of his worth, his comrades and his friends have instituted the 'Anson Memorial Sword,' which, by permission of the Sovereign, will be annually awarded to the most deserving cadet at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst." It would be no consolation to the gallant soldier, if he were alive, to find some of his predictions verified.

The outlook over military matters is not of a satisfactory character, because that which is dim and indistinct cannot be accepted as assuring. There is a young War Minister who is a soldier at the head of the War Office, and there is a Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief who is a good deal of a soldier at the Horse Guards; and between these two there is a gulf which is not great nor fixed—not so deep as a well or as wide as a church door—but it will serve. Colonel Stanley is the military telephone of the House of Commons. The Duke of Cambridge is the telephone of the Queen to the Army. Can any one who knows the facts doubt that the War Minister disapproves of many things which he was obliged to carry out, and that the Duke of Cambridge, loyal to his duty, would do many things he cannot do, and would leave undone many things he is called on to do, were he able? The changes which are imminent in the personnel of the higher offices are very considerable indeed, and it is to the effect of them on the Service that we alluded when we spoke of the outlook. It is plain that if some of the people spoken of come in, others must go out. The house will not hold the gunpowder and the lucifer matches. Who is to come in? Who is to go? And what will be the result?

Brevet Major H. Spalding, 104th Fusiliers, has resigned his appointment as Deputy Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at the Cape of Good Hope, which he has held since December, 1876.

The half-yearly changes of quarters of the Brigade of Guards were carried out on Wednesday as follows, viz.:—Grenadier Guards, 1st Battalion, from Wellington to Chelsea Barracks; 2nd Battalion, from Windsor to Wellington Barracks; 3rd Battalion, from Chelsea and St. George's Barracks to Windsor. Coldstream Guards, 1st Battalion, from Shorncliffe to Chelsea and St. George's Barracks; 2nd Battalion, from the Tower of London to Wellington Barracks. Scots Guards, 1st Battalion, from Wellington Barracks to Shorncliffe; 2nd Battalion from Chelsea Barracks to the Tower.

How ruinous future wars will be may be judged from the remarks made by another French writer on the cost of an Infantry division, which he roughly sets down at £2,000 a day. France has forty divisions, without counting her Cavalry divisions and Rifle battalions, and consequently on a war-footing they would cost £80,000 per diem, or £2,400,000 a month. But in the event of the Territorial Army being called out, and of eighteen new army corps being formed, the above expenditure would be doubled. Nor would these figures really represent the sacrifices to which the country would be exposed. When war breaks out, the incidental expenses are enormous; immense prices have to be paid for articles and for services immediately required. There is great waste. Trade and commerce come to a stand-still, numerous branches of industry are ruined, public securities fall, and altogether the picture of modern war, with its frightful material losses, is depicted in colours so gloomy that one almost longs to go back to the days of limited armies, when compulsory service was not the fashion.

The Army.

1st King's Dragoon Guards. We regret to learn by a Reuter's telegram that Lieut.-Col. Marter had arrived in Maritzburg ill from fever. The papers report the conviction of a private named McKenna, at Pretoria, for robbery.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers). The following extract is taken from the Pioneer of Jan. 24:—"On the morning of Jan. 5, a reconnoitring party, consisting of 75 sabres of the Carabiniers and 75 of the 3rd Bengal Cavalry, under command of Major Cracroft, 3rd Bengal Cavalry, left camp, and crossing the Cabul river at the ford near the Jellalabad Fort, proceeded up the left bank towards the Lugman Valley. The party was also accompanied by Major Boyes, A.A.G.; Capt. Hon. C. Dutton, A.Q.M.G.; Capt. Warburton, political officer; Surg.-Major McNultey, and Sirdar Abdul Khalik Khan of Besud, brother of the present Governor of Jellalabad. The Daranta Gorge was reached about 12.30 p.m., and after the Lugman Valley had been examined through glasses, the horses' heads were turned towards the Daranta ford. On arrival there, about 1 p.m., a short halt was made. The ford which Sirdar Abdul Khalik Khan stated was the one in general use by the inhabitants of that part of the country, appeared to be very easy. Natives were at the time to be seen wading across it. Two branches of the river had to be crossed. The first ford (the one where the accident occurred) led in a slanting direction down to an island in the middle of the river. It was a perfectly straight ford, by which I mean that it was a direct line from the starting-point to the point to be gained on the island. No curve or angle of any sort in it, as often happens, especially in the fords of the Cabul river. Some sixty or seventy yards below the starting-point, which was some little distance higher up the river than the island, was a rapid, which extended across the river, and with the ford formed an angle of some 45 degrees. The line of large stones and boulders over which the water rushed, and which formed the rapid, was quite apparent. Below this, again, the river deepened considerably, there being some ten or twelve feet of water. After a short delay, the party prepared to cross. Capt. Elliott, 3rd Bengal Cavalry, was the first to go over, then some five minutes after, Major Cracroft, preceded by the nephew of Abdul Khalik Khan, and followed by the Carabiniers in single file. The water was up to about the horses' knees at starting, a little farther on reached their girths. Capt. Porter, commanding the party of the Carabiniers, crossed at the head of his men, the first troop reaching the island without difficulty. The men, however, about the middle of the second troop, appeared to have inclined down the stream towards the rapid, probably thinking the water there was more shallow. Suddenly a horse was seen to fall, and after a struggle, to reach the shore without a rider. Four other horses also fell, three of them gaining the bank riderless, the fourth being carried away. The whole accident occurred in far less time than it has taken me to describe it. Once in the rapid, the unfortunate men were, of course, swept away; and although some of their comrades who had reached the island bravely plunged into the river to their rescue, at a great risk, it was without success, as weighted with accoutrements, &c., they sank almost immediately. That the ford was a perfectly safe one was proved by the fact that 40 kahars, with doolie and dandies, crossed it; also a bhistee, riding a small pony about 11 hands high, and if the correct line had only been kept, there was no danger to be apprehended. The accident appears to have happened owing to the men having inclined down stream, and getting in amongst the large slipping stones above the rapid over which their horses fell. Anybody who has had any experience in crossing fords knows how apt one is to keep working down stream, and the water rushing by you is, if you look at it, very likely to confuse and make you leave your proper line. Our British Cavalry have not the same experience in crossing rivers that Native Cavalry have, constantly proceeding on furlough, and on various escort duties, which take them over numerous rivers which trains both men and horses; but many of our British Cavalry have never forded anything of a deep or difficult nature, and both horses and men are strange to it. Fortunately, the accident in question occurred in the day time; if it had taken place at night, the results would probably have been as serious as that suffered by the 10th Hussars at this station last year."

7th Dragoon Guards. Capt. E. M. Lyte, late of the regiment, died at 41 Courtfield Gardens, S.W., of heart-disease, after a few days' illness, on the 3rd inst., aged 36 years. He joined the Army as ensign in the 61st Regt., April, 1862, became Lieut. July 11, 1865, and Capt. Oct. 20, 1869. He exchanged from the 61st with Capt. Money ten years ago, and left the Service in 1877.

4th Hussars. The remains of Major Hugh Stafford Northcote, a survivor of the battle of Toulouse, were laid in the churchyard of St. Mary's Church, Torquay, on the 26th ult. He was second son of Sir Stafford Northcote, of Pynes, Devonshire, and uncle of the present Chancellor of the Exchequer; and married in 1826 Henrietta, third daughter of Mr. W. C. Trevilian, of Midelney, Somerset, by whom he had a family of two sons and four daughters. He joined the 4th Dragoons, now 4th Hussars, in Spain, in 1813, and was engaged in several skirmishes with the French before crossing the Garonne. At the battle of Toulouse his regiment was exposed to a heavy fire in covering a division of Spanish infantry and suffered some loss. On the abdication of Napoleon, he marched through France, and was billeted at the town of Montreuil, near Paris. On its arrival in England, the regiment was inspected by the Prince Regent, and Major Northcote used often to describe the war-won appearance the regiment presented on that occasion, in their patched and stained uniforms, after several years of Peninsular campaigning. The gallant officer's funeral was attended by Sir Stafford Northcote, Col. Colville, C.B., Mr. E. Trevilian, the ladies and other members of his family, and Col. Montgomery-Moore, commanding the regiment. Among the many wreaths on the coffin was to be seen his Peninsular medal, worn some 66 years since. Major Northcote was born in 1793, and was consequently in his 87th year.

6th Dragoons. The Standard says:—"It is not considered probable that any cavalry regiment will be sent to India with the 1880-81 reliefs, as it is hoped that by that time matters at the Cape will have so far settled down as to allow of the removal of the King's Dragoon Guards from that to the Bengal command. Should, however, the King's Dragoon Guards be required for service in South Africa beyond the time proposed, it is the intention to order abroad the Inniskillen Dragoons, now at Edinburgh. In any case, the 15th Hussars will be directed to return to England."

9th Lancers. Major Bushman, lately employed on special duty at Natal, arrived at Bombay on Feb. 4, to take command, and started the same evening for the front, arriving at Cabul on the 9th ult.

13th Hussars. Capt. Peters is en route to India to assume command. The 8th Hussars, which arrived from England in January, 1879, have been ordered to the front when the 13th Hussars at Lucknow have been in India since Feb. 1874. "It may not be generally known [says the Calcutta Englishman] that application was made for the services of the latter regiment, but owing to the deficiency of officers, it was reported that they were not in such a state as to enable them to proceed at present, owing to sickness amongst those with the regiment and the number of absentees. This is a subject that we have frequently brought to notice in our columns in connection with the imperative necessity of restricting the number of absentees when possible, and of keeping regiments in India thoroughly effective. Taking the Army List for the last quarter of 1879, we find that, including those on leave in India, the regiment had twelve absentees. There were six officers absent in England and at the Cape. The colonel of the regiment has lately left for England owing to sickness, and the major is at the Cape; thus both the field-officers are absent, and a captain and a brevet major, the next senior, is on the staff at Peshawur. Considering the duties which cavalry officers have to perform, and the vacancies arising from sickness in India, there are not too large a number of officers, were all present with the corps."

16th Lancers. The funeral of the late Capt. Hammond took place in London on the 24th ult. Capt. Hammond was the only son of the late Mr. G. D. Hammond. He entered the Army as sub-lieut. in the Carabiniers, and it was from that regiment he exchanged to the 16th.

17th Lancers. A squadron has been ordered from Mhow to Ahmednuggur, to take the place of the Bombay troops proceeding to Afghanistan. Mr. H. M. Barton, late of the regiment, died on the 28th inst.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

A correspondent, signing himself "The Man in the Street," writes to the Calcutta Englishman:—"During the course of the last two days I happen to have heard an unusual number of comments on a paragraph which is going the round of the papers on the subject of the Madras command. The extract in question is from one of the Madras dailies, and enumerates a list of officers of the Royal and Imperial armies who may be regarded as 'possible' for the Madras appointment. The comments I have heard in the Barrackpore train, many private offices, the hotels, and at private 'burra khanas,' and they may, therefore, be taken as pretty broadly representing the expression of such non-official public opinion as is found in Calcutta. In every instance attention has been drawn to the absence of the name of Lieut.-Gen. W. Olpherts, C.B., V.C., from the list of suggested C.'s in C., and I may at once own that I have heard more of Olpherts, his gallantry, bravery, ability, and of the devotion of the rank and file to 'Hell-fire Jack' than I had ever known before. How, then, has his name been overlooked by the Madras paper? Is it that the writer's memory does not carry him back to the Mutiny, that he has never heard the eulogistic opinions of such men as Outram, Strathnairn, Napier of Magdala, and a dozen others, on Olpherts' excessive bravery and ability for command? Or is it that, in regarding recent losses of camels and transport, he has forgotten the relief of Lucknow and the saving of guns and baggage, which even Outram was willing to sacrifice, by Olphert's unparalleled daring? Let him read how Olpherts earned his brevets, his V.C. and C.B., and spare five minutes to glance at a record of services seldom equalled. The deeds of such a man are treasured in the memories of his countrymen, even of the outside public, and live in every regiment in the Service. It is a scandal that the sword of Lieut.-Gen. Olpherts should grow rusty for want of employment, when able men are especially wanted. Lest this letter of mine should be misconstrued, I may tell you, Sir, that I belong to neither of the Services, nor am I connected with Indian officialdom in the remotest manner. For your private satisfaction, I enclose my card."

Major-Gen. H. E. Hicks, on the Retired Full-Pay List (late Madras), died at Biarritz on the 25th ult., aged 56. The deceased obtained his commission as 2nd lieut. in June, 1841; was promoted to lieut. in July, 1845; and became capt. in June, 1856. He served with the China expedition in 1842, and was present at the storming and capture of Ching-Keang-Foo in July that year, and the operations before and landing at Nankin in August. Gen. Hicks also served with the Saugor field division during the Indian Mutiny, and assisted at the relief of Kirwee; and at the action on the heights of Punwarree in Dec. 1858. He had received a medal for his services in China. For some time he was in command of the Artillery at Singapore. He obtained the rank of major in Feb. 1861; lieut.-col., March, 1865; col., March, 1870; and major-gen., Aug. 1, 1872.

It is stated that the M Baty. 3rd Brig. will shortly be moved from Limerick to England.

The following movements of batteries in the Bombay Presidency, which have been ordered to be carried out, are shortly to take place:—E Baty. B Brig. R.H.A. to embark for Kurrachee about Feb. 7; 5-8, from Colaba to Candahar, to be first equipped as a mountain train; 14-9, from Deolalee to Quetta; 15-9, from Deolalee to Kurrachee; 10-9, from Govindgurh to Bombay; 5-11, now at Quetta, has been transferred to the Bombay Presidency, and after equipment as a siege train will proceed to Candahar; 9-8, Colaba to Aden; 13-8, Deolalee to Bombay; 1-9, from Aden to Allahabad; 2-9, from Allahabad to Aden; 14-8, from Poona to Aden; 15-8, Aden to Govindgurh; 18-8, Aden to Attock.

We read in Sir R. Temple's minute on the road-making of the Bombay Brigade last winter in the Bolan Pass,—"Capt. Stopford, R.A., Deputy-Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., has fully sustained the high reputation he already bears in the Presidency. The Brigadier-General has bestowed marked commendation on the conduct of his personal staff officer, Lieut. Dean-Pitt, R.A." Capt. Wintle, R.A., also receives mention for "the excellent services rendered."

Lieut. W. A. Plant, A.D.C. to the Governor of Bombay, has accompanied D Baty. B Brig. R.H.A. from Mhow to Afghanistan.

The Court Circular of Tuesday contains the following:—"Windsor Castle, Tuesday.—The Queen was deeply grieved by receiving to-day the announcement of the death of Lieut.-Col. A. Pickard, V.C., C.B., Royal Artillery, which took place at Cannes yesterday evening, March 1. Lieut.-Col. Pickard, who had served with distinction in the New Zealand war, where he had earned the Victoria Cross, had been for many years equerry to the Duke of Connaught, and latterly was appointed Assistant Private Secretary and Assistant Keeper of the Privy Purse and Groom-in-Waiting to the Queen. His loss is sincerely deplored by her Majesty and all the members of the Royal Family."

Major E. J. Ward-Ashton, commanding the Riding-house Establishment at Woolwich, died on Tuesday of pleurisy. His first commission was dated Aug. 14, 1854, and he served in the Crimea, taking part in the capture of Sebastopol. He attained the rank of capt. in April, 1861, and received the rank of major under the Promotion Warrant of July 5, 1872.

The remains of the late Gen. A. Huyshe, C.B. (late Bengal), were interred in the Brompton Cemetery on Tuesday morning. There were present at the grave side, beside the five sons of the deceased, Gen. Huyshe, C.B., his brother; Sir Kenneth Kemp, Bart.; Capt. Walkey, R.A.; Rev. C. E. Walkey, Rev. C. Abbey, Major Dunbar, his nephews; and the following friends:—Lord Chelmsford, Sir G. Campbell, Sir William Hamilton, Bart.; Sir G. Bourchier, Sir H. Thuillier, Sir H. Norman, and Gens. Darling, Hammond, Stallard, Blake, Gosling, Hill, and Wallace; Cols. Young, Mr. Frith, Mr. Craigie, Mr. Marrable, Mr. C. Vogl, Mr. P. French, and Drs. Duke and Murray.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

We learn from Afghanistan that "Lieut. R. Jennings has been placed in political charge of the Thull Chotiali and Zawar valleys.

Capt. J. Matheson, senior assistant-instructor in field fortifications at the School of Military Engineering, Chatham, having been appointed instructor of fortifications and geometrical drawing at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, he will be succeeded at Chatham by Capt. M. H. Gregson, and Lieut. Lake will succeed Capt. Gregson as junior assistant-instructor. Lieut. H. W. Renny-Tailyour, assistant-instructor in telegraphy, has been appointed to take charge of the workshops at the School of Military Engineering, vice Lieut. R. M. Hyslop, resigned.

In his minute on the road-making operations of the Bombay Brigade last year in the Bolan Pass, Afghanistan, Sir R. Temple says:—"Among the Royal Engineers, Lieut. Whiteford, who commanded the two companies Bombay Sappers and Miners, and who was the senior engineer officer with General Phayre, is especially worthy of mention, as also are Lieuts. Rice-Henn and Waller."

1st or Royal Scots. Capt. Logan, 1st Batn., has been ordered from the depot at Glencorse to Mullingar, to take charge of the draft of the 1st Batn. 20th Regt. during its voyage to Cyprus. He will afterwards join the headquarters of his batn. at Malta.

7TH FUSILIERS. H.M.S. Crocodile left Bombay on the 6th ult. for Kurrachee, with 21 officers, 2 warrant officers, 644 rank and file, 54 public followers, 49 private followers, and 9 horses, 2nd Batn., en route to Afghanistan. The following is the list of officers;—Lieut.-Col. Daubeny; Major Kerr, Brevet Major Beauchamp; Capts. Groube, Manning, and Conolly; Lieuts. Rodick, Thunder, Porter, and Herbert; 2nd Lieuts. Drummond-Wolff, De Trafford, Moss, Wood, Marsh, and Barttelot; Lieut. and Adjt. Gall, Pymr. (Major) Moore, Qrmr. Clowes, and Surg.-Major Giraud.

11TH REGIMENT. A wing of the 2nd Batn., consisting of Major Green, Capts. Gibbons, O'Brien, and Andrews, Lieuts. Bishop, Briggs, and Stanley, 2nd Lieuts. Phayre and Light, and 344 rank and file, sailed from Bombay on the 6th ult. for Kurrachee, in H.M.S. Crocodile, en route to Afghanistan.

12TH LANCERS. Vet.-Surg. Wilson has taken up duty with the Royal Artillery at Colchester.

13TH LIGHT INFANTRY. The death of Capt. J. F. James, 1st Batn., which took place at Devonport on the 24th ult., not only cast a gloom over the regiment, but caused widespread grief. The deceased attended the funeral of the late Rear-Admiral Hope on the 16th ult., and it is believed he took cold. The next day he was ill, but continued his military duties. The symptoms, however, became worse, and he succumbed to a severe attack of pleuro-pneumonia. The deceased, who was 47 years of age, was third on the list of captains. He entered the Army Aug. 17, 1855, and on March 7 in the year following was promoted to the rank of lieut. In 1858 he served in the Indian campaign, and was present at the relief of Azimghur and actions at Doomureahgunge and Toolespore, for which he received a medal. On Feb. 20, 1867, he was promoted capt. He served throughout the Zulu campaign, and was present at the battle of Ulundi, and all the engagements in which the regiment took part. His health was greatly impaired by the hardships of the campaign, and this, no doubt, rendered him an easier victim to the attack. Capt. James leaves a wife and daughter. The funeral took place at the Plymouth Cemetery on the 27th ult. with military honours. Lieut. and Adjt. Gallwey obtains the company thus rendered vacant. Mr. G. F. Caldecott, late Lieut., died at Newmarket on the 28th ult.

15TH REGIMENT. Sir R. Temple, in his minute to the Government of Bombay on the road-making services of the Bombay Brigade last year in the Bolan Pass, Afghanistan, says:—"The Brigadier-General has testified emphatically to the assistance he derived from the business-like activity and the administrative ability of Major C. J. Burnett, 15th Regt., the brigade-major."

ROYAL MARINES.

Men of the following trades, &c., are required from the Royal Marines for service at the Island of Ascension:—Masons, blacksmiths, carpenters, sawyers, wheelwrights, painters, plumbers, farrier, butcher, writers (3), game-keeper, shepherd, cowman, carters (7), excavators, labourers, hospital nurses (3). The following non-commissioned officers are also required:—Two serjeants, one as acting quartermaster-serjeant, and the other as acting hospital clerk; and two corporals to act as store porters. The acting quartermaster-serjeant will receive the pay of quartermaster-serjeant, and an allowance of 1s. 3d. per diem; and the pay, &c., of the acting hospital clerk will be 5s. a day and rations. The applicants must be good clerks and accountants.

Mr. Leonard Christopher Peters has been appointed a lieutenant in the R.M.L.I. from the 1st ult.

Major G. Johnston, R.M.L.I., has been placed on the Retired List at his own request, under the provision of her Majesty's Orders in Council of Feb. 22, 1870, and Feb. 5, 1872.

60TH RIFLES. Lieut.-Col. Pemberton, C.B., completes his five years in command of the 3rd Batn. on Wednesday next, after which he will be placed upon half-pay.

62ND REGIMENT. Capt. Wodehouse has been appointed Adjt. of the 4th Norfolk R.V. from the 19th ult.

70TH REGIMENT. From the Kurum Valley it is reported that Lieut. Humsden, 13th Bengal Cavalry, was murdered by robbers on the night of Feb. 19 while asleep in his tent. No such name, however, is to be found in the Army List. Lieut. H. R. W. Lumsden, of this regiment, a probationer Bengal S.C., is, however noted as serving with the 3rd Bengal Cavalry, Eastern Afghanistan Force.

71ST HIGHLAND LIGHT INFANTRY. Capt. A. T. Hamilton, late of the regiment, died at Belgrave Mansions, Grosvenor Gardens, on the 1st inst., aged 62 years.

72ND HIGHLANDERS. The death of the ill-fated Capt. Spens, while gallantly leading his men to repel an overwhelming mass of the enemy, on the Asmai heights, near Cabul on Dec. 14, is thus chronicled by the correspondent of the Pioneer:—"Capt. Spens quietly, and with the true sense of duty which has so often prompted British officers to sacrifice themselves to save their comrades, went out to almost certain death. He was not a powerful athletic swordsman, who could hope to hold his own against six or seven men, but a man whom almost any Pathan would overtop in stature. He had only his straight thrusting sword to rely upon, and he lacked the physical strength so essential to a hand-to-hand fight. He was cut down as he ran his man through. This facing of a mob of active mountaineers, unequalled in the use of the knife and tulwar at close quarters, was bravely personified; and if any soldier ever deserved the simple motto of the V.C.—'For Valour'—Capt. Spens had earned it even before his death." Lieut. and Adjt. Murray, as we stated last week, has lately proceeded from Cabul to Sealkote to clothe and equip drafts of men for service at the front. The 72nd can still muster over 600 men fit for service, in spite of their losses at Charasiab on Oct. 6 and the Asmai heights on Dec. 14, and with the draft of 180 men now at Sealkote they will be nearly 800 strong.

73RD REGIMENT. Capt. Gordon has been relieved in his appointment as Adjt. of the 1st A.B. Berwickshire R.V.

78TH HIGHLANDERS. The two companies at Sattara are ordered to return to Poona to rejoin head-quarters, two companies proceeding to Baroda.

80TH REGIMENT was to have been concentrated at Pinetown about the 18th ult.

83RD REGIMENT. Two companies are ordered from Belgaum to Sattara, relieving two companies 78th Highlanders.

89TH REGIMENT is experiencing what may be called "hard lines." A Rangoon correspondent writes that, having already spent one year beyond the usual three years allotted for regiments to serve in Burmah, they are now apparently condemned to remain a fifth year in this station. Besides this, the regiment is so scattered, that it is almost impossible for it to maintain its efficiency. A large draft sent out to join the regiment more than a year ago has been detained to do duty in Madras. A strong detachment occupies Port Blair in the Andaman Islands, and four companies, housed in comfortless bamboo barracks, have, since last April, been guarding the frontier at Theyetmyo. Owing to the want of a rifle range, the regiment has not been put through a course of musketry for two years, and it is probable that not more than two or three companies can be exercised this year. Lieut. Brown has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate.

91ST HIGHLANDERS. We regret to learn of the death, which occurred at Moka, Mauritius, on Jan. 27, of Major W. P. Gurney, the result of fever contracted on service during the Zulu campaign. Major Gurney, who was 45 years of age, entered the Army Feb. 17, 1854; became lieut., July 6, 1855; capt., Nov. 12, 1860; brevet major, Sept. 28, 1872; and major, Jan. 19, 1876. Capt. Robley will, no doubt, obtain the majority thus rendered vacant, and Lieut. Schank the company. Lieut.-Col. J. B. Kirk, lately commanding the regiment, died at 24 Park Crescent, Regent's Park, on the 27th ult. Col. Kirk entered the Service in 1851, and served in the 96th and 89th Regiments, and on the Staff. He was in command of the 91st when it was ordered, at very short notice, for the Zulu war, it being the first regiment to embark after the news of Isandula reached England. An accident which rendered amputation necessary prevented Col. Kirk from going out with it. After resignation of this command, he was appointed to the Intelligence Department at the Horse Guards, but was compelled by continued ill-health to resign. He was buried on the 3rd inst. at Shenley, Herts, the procession leaving High Canons, the residence of Mr. R. Durant, attended by a large following of relatives and friends, amongst whom were Messrs. C. W. and O. D. Parker, C. and F. Durant, Gen. Sir A. Lawson, K.C.B.; Col. Bray, Q.M.G., Portsmouth; Col. Sprot and Capt. Robley and Prevost. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. H. Huleatt, late chaplain to the Forces, and the Rev. H. Newcome, rector of Shenley.

93RD HIGHLANDERS. Capt. Croker has been offered, and has accepted, the appointment of adjutant to the Police and Pioneer force of Cyprus, which is now in course of formation. A better appointment it would have been impossible to make, as all will admit who have ever met the 93rd.

94TH REGIMENT. We regret to learn that Lieut. Cowper still remains, unable to move, at Lydenburg, in consequence of his accident in Secocoeni's country.

96TH REGIMENT. Brevet Major Josselyn, adjt. of the Bedfordshire Militia, having been elected chief constable of Bedfordshire, is about to retire.

105TH LIGHT INFANTRY. Serjt.-Major Green has been discharged after 23 years' service, and has received from the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men a watch and chain as a mark of respect. He has been appointed canteen steward. Colour-Serjt. Williams succeeds him as serjeant-major.

1ST WEST INDIA REGIMENT. Lieut. O'Donnell, a probationer for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to the 17th N.I., and Lieut. Peirse to the 22nd N.I. on arrival in India.

2ND WEST INDIA REGIMENT. A large concourse of Freetown population assembled, on Jan. 29, at the East Battery, Sierra Leone, to witness the presentation of a bâton to the band of the regiment, in testimony of the polite and ready manner in which, during their three years' residence in the West African settlement, they had always granted their services to the inhabitants. The bâton, which was subscribed for by a few gentlemen of the city, was of ebony, splendidly inlaid with gold, and enclosed in an embossed case. On the bâton itself was the following inscription:—"Band of the 2nd West India Regiment;" and on the case:—"From a few citizens of Sierra Leone, Jan., 1880."

COMMISSARIAT AND TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT. The Natal Witness has the following:—"The treatment which Deputy-Comy. Granville, of the Transport Department, has met with certainly seems strange, and must be exceedingly disappointing to the gallant officer. As yet, no recognition whatever has been made of the services he has rendered, and his acting rank has not even been confirmed. It is evident that there has been an oversight in the matter, and we trust that justice will soon be done to Mr. Granville's claims. After settling up the transport affairs in connection with the war in the Old Colony, he arrived in Durban early in November, 1879, and with the exception of a period of a few weeks, has been senior Commissariat officer at the base of operations. Throughout the war he has, in fact, been doing the duties of an officer of two ranks higher than his own. Every single article of supplies received from England has passed through his hands, and has been forwarded to the front. He has borne the whole burden, and it will be recollected he was highly complimented by Sir E. Strickland upon the manner in which he discharged his duties. In recognition of the position he held here, he received the acting rank of commissary, and now all is over, and everything satisfactorily settled without a single hitch, no recognition whatever is made of his services. A harder case seldom presented itself, for his whole energy has been devoted to the Service and the carrying-out of Sir E. Strickland's orders. Other officers have been promoted whose responsibilites and duties have been a mere nothing compared with what has been done at the 'base of operations.' Everything depended on the way the duties were performed at the base, for the supplies for the whole army were obtained from here. Such treatment is unfair and unjust, and has caused much talk in military circles." Assist.-Comy. J. L. Dalton, V.C., has been granted leave from the Cape to England for six months.

ORDNANCE STORE DEPARTMENT. Assist.-Comy.-Gen. G. J. Moore, having completed three years' tour of foreign service on the Staff of Major-Gen. Donovan in the China command, is about to return to England. The following changes of station have taken place:—Deputy-Comy. W. S. Haldane, from Jamaica to Dublin, vice Ralph; Deputy-Comy. T. G. Stack, from Natal to Dublin, vice Comy. G. A. Brunet, to be retired; Deputy-Comy. J. H. Pearson, from Devonport to Jamaica, vice Haldane; Assist.-Comy. F. C. B. Richards, Malta to Dover, vice J. C. Stanley, to Dublin; Assist.-Comy. R. B. Baker, from Blackness, N.B., to Pembroke, vice Deputy-Comy. A. Montanaro, to be retired; Assist.-Comy. H. H. D. Hain, Malta to Woolwich. The following officers have accepted retirement under the Royal Warrant, 1879:—Deputy-Comy. D. O'L. MacDermott, late in charge of the Military and Naval Arsenal at Cork Harbour; and Deputy.-Comy. R. P. Olpherts, from H.M.'s Powder Magazine Establishment, at Bull Point, near Devonport. Deputy-Comy. MacDermott was a Bachelor of Arts and Gold Medallist of Queen's University in 1853; entered the Army in 1856; served at Tower of London and Tilbury Fort, 1856-61; Woolwich, 1861-65; Dublin, 1865-66; New Zealand, 1866; Hong Kong, 1867-70. The death is reported of Assist.-Supdnt. of Stores J. Darne (half-pay). This officer entered the Army in 1827, served for many years in the island of Mauritius, and also in the Madras Presidency during the Indian Mutiny, and retired upon a pension in 1863.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT. The services of the medical officers in the Afghan campaigns have received well-deserved praise from the Secretary for War, who paid a special tribute to the late Surg.-Major Porter on Monday in his speech on the Estimates. Col. Stanley said:—"In Afghanistan the Generals in command have spoken in the highest terms of the efficiency, zeal, and self-devotion of all ranks of officers, and I am afraid that in this respect there is even melancholy evidence in the large numbers who have succumbed to hard work, especially among the Indian Forces. I must refer to the loss which the medical service and the medical world in general have sustained by the death, at Sherpur, of Deputy Surg.-Gen. Porter, an officer whose arrangements for all the medical duties of the campaign left nothing to be desired. He leaves, both among the medical world and those who are his countrymen, a reputation to which his friends may look back with satisfaction, and a memory which will be dear to all those who knew him."

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

BEDFORD. Major and Adjt. Josselyn, 96th Regt., has been elected Chief Constable of Bedfordshire. The large number of votes that were given to this officer shows the high esteem he has gained for himself during the four years he has been attached to the Bedfordshire Militia.

DURHAM FUSILIERS. Col. Surtees, honorary colonel, is a candidate for the representation of South Durham, in the Conservative interest.

FERMANAGH. Capt. Johnston has been noted at the Horse Guards for appointment to a commission in the Army Reserve.

MID-ULSTER ARTILLERY. The Local Government Board have intimated that they cannot this year spare the barrack accommodation usually set apart in the Union Workhouse buildings for this regiment, and encamping or billetting must therefore be resorted to.

ROYAL LIMERICK FUSILIERS. The recruits have assembled at Limerick for 83 days' training. Of the entire number, 123 appeared, and satisfactory reasons were given for the non-attendance of the 23 who were absent.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

MIDDLESEX (UXBRIDGE). Among those who joined the ranks of the Natal Light Horse during the recent war at the Cape were Capt. Marshall and Lieut. Arden, of this regt., the latter of whom took part in the cavalry reconnaissance of June 3 and the battle of Ulundi on the following day.

2ND WEST YORK. The majority is vacant, by the death of Major J. J. Foster, which occurred at Cannes on the 26th ult. The deceased, who was 53 years of age, joined the regiment several years ago, and had been major since Feb., 1873.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

15TH MIDDLESEX (LONDON SCOTTISH) RIFLES. At a regimental dinner, held at the Freemasons' Tavern on Tuesday, Lieut-Col. Lumsden presiding, Lord Elcho, who was for many years in command of the regiment, was presented with a replica of the Elcho Shield and a beautifully-illuminated address. Among those present were Lord Rosslyn, Lord Bury, Lord Vernon, Lord Brooke, M.P., Lieut.-Col. Viscount de Vesci, Sir J. H. D. Elphinstone, M.P., Admiral Sir J. D. Hay, M.P., Col. Sir P. Lumsden, K.C.B., Major-Gen. Higginson, commanding home division, Col. Moncrieff, Scots Guards, Col. Macpherson, C.B., 42nd Highlanders, Lieut.-Col. Simpson, late 72nd Highlanders, the Hon. Capt. Charteris, R.N., the Hon. H. C. Charteris, Mr. Wells, Mr. T. Hughes, Q.C., Mr. J. Macgregor ("Rob Roy"), and Dr. Cameron. The chairman, in proposing the toast of the evening, referred at length to the services of Lord Elcho in the early days of the Volunteer movement. Capt. Macgregor was then called upon to make the presentation, and read an address from the Volunteers of England and Scotland to Lord Elcho, referring to his spirited work in days gone by in the organisation of the Volunteer force, and in the founding of the National Rifle Association. The toast of Lord Elcho's health was then given, in Highland fashion. Lord Elcho, in reply, expressed the hope that succeeding generations of his house would find in that presentation an incentive to national duty, as well as see in it a testimony that in this land no honestly-attempted work for the public good failed to meet with public recognition.

23RD MIDDLESEX (INNS OF COURT RIFLES). Brig.-Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., presented the prizes to the regiment in Lincoln's Inn Hall on Tuesday. Gen. Wood said it was ten years since he had had the opportunity of seeing the corps under arms, and it was with regret that he saw there had been in that time some decrease, not in efficiency, for relatively the efficiency of the corps was much higher than it was formerly, but in numbers, and it would be an ill return for their kindness in inviting him to be present, if he failed to remark that it was with disappointment he saw that only about one-sixth of the students who joined the Inns became members of the corps. The prizes were then presented, and the successful competitors included Lieut. King, Corprl. Bradford, Pte. Bethell, Corprl. Hartopp, Serjt. Denison, Serjt.-Major Knowles, Pte. Quick, and Capt. Tomlinson.

37TH MIDDLESEX RIFLES. Lieut.-Col. Stedall is about to resign his commission, after fourteen years' service as commanding officer. Major Richards will succeed to the command, Capt. Stedall becoming junior major.

38TH MIDDLESEX (ARTISTS') RIFLES. Lieut.-Col. Sir Frederick Leighton distributed the prizes at the annual general meeting of this corps at Willis's Rooms on Saturday. He said that during the years he had commanded the regiment till now he had not seen it raised to such a high standard of efficiency. Last year had been one of trial and experiment, but the commissioned and non-commissioned officers had worked together, and now the corps was stronger, richer, and more efficient than at any previous moment of its existence. The financial position had enabled him to reduce the annual subscription from £1 5s. to £1. The amount of capitation grant earned by the corps was £1,185, as compared with £1,052 earned in 1878. The number of recruits that had joined in the Volunteer year up to Nov. 1 was 193. From that number must be deducted 120 who had resigned, and been struck off the rolls. With the 65 recruits who had joined since Nov. 1, the strength of the regiment was raised to 746, 91·82 per cent. of whom were efficient.

The fiat has gone forth for the amalgamation of the following Administrative Brigades and Battalions, which, under the new régime, will be distinguished by the name and number of their present senior company, viz.:—Artillery brigades—2nd Devon, 1st Glamorgan; Rifle battalions—1st Clackmannan, 1st Derby, 2nd Devon, 3rd Durham, 1st Essex, 3rd Essex, 1st Flint, 1st Leicester, 1st Norfolk, 1st Somerset, 4th Staffordshire, 2nd Surrey, 1st Sussex, 1st Warwick, 1st Westmoreland, 2nd Worcester, 1st North York, 2nd West York, 4th West York.

13TH BENGAL CAVALRY. Lieut. G. W. Deane, squadron-officer and adjutant, has been granted leave to England for one year, on medical certificate.

7TH BENGAL N.I. Major F. Drummond has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate.

29TH BENGAL N.I. Lieut. R. W. MacLeod has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate.

39TH BENGAL N.I. Major H. O. Cumberlege, wing-officer, has reverted to his appointment as station staff officer at Benares.

4TH GOORKHAS. Col. J. P. Turton has been granted leave to England for one year, on medical certificate.

2ND PUNJAB CAVALRY. The special correspondent of the Standard telegraphed on Monday that a Ghazi had shot Surg. M'Cartie through the shoulder. The injury was not serious.

5TH PUNJAB CAVALRY. A Cabul correspondent writes:—"It is intended, so I am informed, to send the 5th Punjab Cavalry down country soon. This regiment has suffered very severely in both native officers and men, and at present there are not one-third of the former to carry on the duties. The 3rd Punjab Cavalry is named as the regiment most likely to be sent in relief."

1ST SIND HORSE. In Sir R. Temple's minute on the road-making last year in the Bolan Pass, we read,—"Lieut. Domville, 1st Sind Horse, in command of a detachment of cavalry in the Bolan Pass, I know, earned the thanks of the brigadier 'as an energetic and ever-ready cavalry officer.'"

2ND CENTRAL INDIA HORSE. A correspondent at Cabul relates that on the 11th ult. "Capt. MacGregor, A.D.C., in his endeavour to make a prisoner, had a narrow escape. He galloped after the retreating Afghan, who allowed his pursuer to arrive within a couple of yards of him, then turned, dropped on his knees, and raised his rifle. This caused Capt. MacGregor's horse to swerve, and, for the moment, he seemed at the mercy of the Afghan. Luckily Lieut. Chamberlain had ridden after Capt. MacGregor, and, before the Afghan could fire, the former officer was down on him. The Afghan dropped his rifle, drew his tulwar, and seized the bridle of Lieut. Chamberlain's horse; but the youngster was too quick for him, and with one blow severed his head from his shoulders. This little episode took place in front of the advancing brigade. Young Chamberlain is the grandson of the late Mr. George H. Drury, Madras Civil Service, and a nephew of the present Commander-in-Chief and Archdeacon of Madras."

1ST BOMBAY N.I. (GRENADIERS). Vide 19th Bombay N.I.

8TH BOMBAY N.I. is ordered from Sattara, Azirgarh, and Bombay to Sind.

11TH BOMBAY N.I. A wing of the regiment, from Poona, is to replace the 24th Bombay N.I., proceeding on service, at Mehidpore and Agar.

14TH BOMBAY N.I. The Times of India says:—"As the Tenasserim is to be employed in conveying the Poona Horse to Kurrachee, the 14th Regiment N.I. will have to remain encamped at Vingorla until about the 18th inst., when the transport Culna will be ready to convey the regiment to Aden, returning with the 25th Regiment N.L.I. Until the arrival of that regiment, the garrison duty will fall very heavy on the Marine Battalion in Bombay, the strength of which, owing to the numerous detachments out, is only about 500 men."

17TH BOMBAY N.I. is ordered from Dharwar to Sattara. Major J. Jacob, wing-commander, has been appointed second in command, and Major H. L. Walter, wing-officer, wing-commander, in succession to Lieut.-Col. Vaughan, deceased.

19TH BOMBAY N.I. Extracts from minute by Sir R. Temple, Governor of Bombay, dated Dec. 31, 1879:—"Having lately visited some parts of the Bolan Pass, and having seen and heard much of the achievements of the brigade of Bombay troops under Brigdr.-Gen. R. Phayre, C.B., in respect of military road-making during the first half of the present year, 1879, I desire to record a brief statement of the work actually done. The troops employed were the 1st Bombay N.I. (Grenadiers), the 19th Bombay N.I., and two companies of Sappers. The average strength of a Native Infantry regiment was about 700 non-commissioned officers and men, and the Sappers numbered about 150 men. The total strength, then, consisted of about 1,300 N.I. Sepoys, about 150 Sappers and Miners, and about 550 dooly-bearers. The time during which these men were employed in road-making was about six or seven months; but for the first five of these the 1st Grenadiers were employed principally on escort and detachment duty, so that the main part of the road-making was done by the Sappers and the 19th N.I. With this comparatively small number of men, and in this short time, the following results were accomplished:—Of military road-making, 109 miles, from Jacobabad to Dadur, were lined out, cleared, and made passable for wheeled traffic, many temporary bridges being erected by the Sappers, which stood the wheeled transport and the passage of the siege-train very well. It was, however, from the commencement of the Bolan Pass just beyond Dadur that the hard work began. Throughout the length of road from Dadur to Darwaza (63 miles), which comprises what is commonly known as the Bolan Pass, there was formerly nothing that could be termed a road: horsemen and strings of camels passed to and fro, but carts never attempted to pass, by this line; and when artillery had to pass, the guns were dragged slowly and laboriously. The road-making done by the brigade extends over the following lengths:—Jacobabad to Dadur, 109 miles; Dadur to Darwaza, 58; Dozan station, 5; Darwaza to Quetta, 26; total, 198 miles. It is to be remembered that all these operations were conducted with military labour only, without any assistance whatever from ordinary hired labour. It is to be borne in mind that these fatiguing duties had to be performed during a season when the climate in that region is extremely inclement from heat. In the 1st Grenadiers I would specially testify to the service of Lieut.-Col. Anderson. In the 19th N.I., to the services of Col. Creagh (who acted as brigadier during Brigdr.-Gen. Phayre's temporary absence) Major Waudby, and Major Trench. The efforts of the Medical Department were much taxed during the outbreak of cholera which occurred at Dadur in the Bolan during June, and Surg.-Major Cates, 19th N.I., and Surgs. Dane, Channer, and Mullaine did excellent service in that trying time,—the two last-named officers were deputed from Quetta for this special duty. Lastly, I have to report to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief that when the largest share of the road-making devolved on the Sepoys of the 19th, the testimony of all who saw them—many witnesses being unconnected either with the brigade or with the Army—is to the effect that more willing and enduring men could not be found. Their conduct adds one more proof to the numberless proofs already existing of the efficacy of discipline."

26TH BOMBAY N.I. The 23rd Bombay N.I., from Ahmednuggur, Surat, and Sholapore, ordered on service, is to be relieved by three companies of the 26th N.I., from Deesa, Surat, and Sholapore; Ahmednuggur to be left without Native Infantry.

29TH BOMBAY N.I. Major G. C. Sartorius, wing-commander, has been granted leave to England on medical certificate.

FIELD-GLASSES FOR OFFICERS.

SIR,—Will you do me the favour to correct an error which appears in your issue of last week, in an article on "Military Equipment." I allude to that portion of it which refers to the recent decision by the authorities for all officers to carry field-glasses. The price of No. 7, chosen by the Committee for infantry officers (a new glass made by me expressly for the purpose), is £2 15s.; but I undertook to make it in aluminium, if required, for £5. This material is about one-third the weight of the ordinary metal. The glass chosen by the Committee for cavalry and artillery officers is that known as "The Duke," a glass most extensively patronised in both the recent wars at the Cape and Afghanistan; it is slightly larger and heavier than No. 7, but has more power. This glass I undertook to supply to officers of the Army for £5 5s. By inserting this correction in your next issue, you will greatly oblige, yours, &c.,

INDIA.

The Lahore paper again draws attention to the paucity of officers with Native regiments in Afghanistan, and expresses regret that the proposal to fill up some of the vacancies by the appointment of young police officers has apparently been allowed to drop without any action being taken in the matter.

The brigading of the Reserve division has undergone some changes. Brigdr.-Gen. Gib has proceeded to Lundi Kotal, his head-quarters. He has the 1st and 15th Madras N.I. and 5th Fusiliers. Brigdr.-Gen. Roberts commands the 1st Brigade at Peshawur; his corps will be the Royal Irish, 9th and 16th N.I. Brigdr.-Gen. Hill's brigade is at Jumrood, and will consist of the 1st Goorkhas, the 14th Foot, and 41st N.I. The 32nd Pioneers go to Ali Musjid, and 25th Foot now belong to Gen. Bright's column.

A return has been issued showing the numbers killed, died of disease, and invalided, in each of the three armies operating beyond the Indus in the late campaign in Afghanistan, from the date of the advance beyond our frontier into the Khyber Pass, up to the return across the Indus, of the regiments ordered back at the close of operations in the field. There were killed in action 4 European officers, 1 native officer, and 60 men; 19 European officers, 14 native officers, and 1,143 men died of disease; 33 European officers, 17 native officers, and 1,885 men were invalided. The total loss was thus—56 European officers, 32 native officers, and 3,088 men.

Brevet Lieut.-Col. J. M. Sexton, Bombay S.C., has received the appointment of Superintendent of the Bombay Army Clothing Department.

Lieut.-Col. Lowe has taken over charge of the Transport Service at Cabul, Col. Heathcote having been appointed road commandant in charge from Jumrood to Sherpur.

The Lahore paper hears that Col. Hogg, assistant to Sir Michael Kennedy for transport work, will shortly return to Bombay to take up his appointment of qrmr.-gen.; and that his place on Sir Michael Kennedy's staff will be taken by Capt. E. H. H. Collen, Bengal S.C., assistant-secretary, Military Department.

THE EAS[illegible]MONDAY REVIEW.

TO THE EDITOR OF TH[illegible]MY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Observing that t[illegible] Brighton Volunteer Review question presently commands attention, I venture, as one who served for several years during the earlier stages of the movement, to express a brief opinion. Brighton is unquestionably the place at Easter for this force, in spite of the very far superior military attractions of Aldershot. Remember that our Volunteer Army has no commissariat, and is entirely dependent upon a town for supplies. The review being necessarily limited to hours, confidence is best placed in that company which has the greatest experience in the conveyance of considerable bodies of passengers. The London, Brighton, and South-Coast Company have, so to speak, mainly Brighton to cater for, while the London and South-Western Company have not generally provided even good accommodation for the troops at Aldershot, and are overcome with the immense traffic prevalent on their lines during a Bank holiday. I had the honour to join in the force under Lord Ranelagh at the first experimental Brighton Review, and excellently well it went off, in extremely fine weather, while all other localities were drenched with rain. The succeeding assemblages were uniformly successful, while great discomfort attended those held at Guildford, Dover, &c. Aldershot Town is quite destitute of any but the most meagre accommodation for civilian soldiers, and the strict discipline enforced there would be unsuited for a sudden assemblage of Volunteers. The London Rifle Brigade had a miserable bad outing with the Aldershot Division in 1862, and, getting drenched during a field-day, had to find their way back to town under circumstances which have led to no repetition of their visit as a corps since. At an early part of the year, before any excursion traffic was started, the "Black Watch," on return from Ashantee Land, had to show up as splendid as they could at a grand review at one of our principal military stations, but having to confide themselves to the mercies of a railway company, which divides the honours of the camp traffic—third-class carriages of old date, two being of twenty years' and one of twenty-one years' construction (vide evidence at inquiry), were provided as part of the train. Some of these antiquities, on the return journey to Portsmouth, came to pieces, and about one dozen men were badly injured. A colour-serjeant had his leg broken. The continued use of old rolling stock seriously jeopardises the chance of safety, and if any delay should occur, it imperils the success of the whole review. Our civilian soldiers, having businesses and families dependent upon them, must be well considered when they sacrifice their holiday for a day of bonâ fide hard work. It is all very well for noble lords to speak in the House on the subject of having the Volunteers' outing to come off at our great Camp, but they should remember that the coast is where our Army must be first dispatched, and experience of moving large bodies of troops thereto may as well be sufficiently practised. I have not the slightest reason, personally, to urge the selection of Brighton, but I know full well, from frequent service there, the failings of Aldershot. There is too much red-tapeism in that military centre, quite incapable of adapting itself to the sudden requirements of a civilian army. I rather think that I remember a cavalry brigade marching thence to the Metropolis, being landed high and dry on Hounslow Heath for a whole day without any visible mode of subsistence, because some one had blundered. Should Brighton be chosen (and that almost ensures fine weather), I hope that as Volunteer discipline has so materially improved, that credit will be further brought to the force by the strictest military attention being given to every detail of dress and parade. Much success would be obtained if the regular cavalry could be provided in such numbers as to ensure the ground being properly kept. Apologising for obtruding so considerably on your space,

I am, &c., EX-VOLUNTEER CAPTAIN.

THE "CARMICHAEL"
PORTABLE BOOT-TREE.

A want long felt has just been supplied by this most important invention. All sportsmen and military men know the great advantage of having both their long and short boots treed up every day, especially after they have been wet, but there is often great inconvenience in carrying about the boot-trees.

An officer in the 5th Lancers has lately hit upon the idea that an India-rubber tree, which, with ease, can be carried in the pocket, can, when put inside the boot, be inflated, filling out the boot tightly, and so making it an impossibility to shrink.

For officers on active service, autumn manœuvres, or whenever it is impossible to carry wooden trees, this invention will be invaluable.

This invention is patented for Great Britain and other countries.

Orders should be sent as early as possible, accompanied by an old boot as a pattern, to

"Gentlemen who are particular about their external appearance have long been much troubled with the tendency of their trousers to 'bag' at the knees......To remedy this defect, Mr. Gooddy has invented a simple yet efficient machine......We have tried this press, and found it act admirably."

From "Our Van," in "Baily's Monthly Magazine," February, 1880.
"And yet another boon. We have been waiting all our life for the coming man who would invent something to prevent trousers bulking at the knee, and at last he has come. Mr. Gooddy, a Yorkshireman, we believe, and with a place of business at 122 Pall Mall, has invented a trouser press, which effectually prevents the bagginess which has long been the bête noir of men who care about the set of their trousers. Only two or three minutes' attention daily will keep the garments in the state they left the tailor's workshop, and the simplicity of the press is not one of its least recommendations. Everybody who has tried it highly approves of it, and we strongly advise our young friends, and, for the matter of that, middle-aged ones too, to get a trouser press."

TIC-SANO is a vegetable remedy; can be taken by both young and old, and by persons of the most delicate constitution without change of diet.

TIC-SANO is the ORIGINAL SPECIFIC for the above complaints; it has been tried and approved of by the Medical Profession, and has been spoken favourably of by the Public Press.

TIC-SANO.—As the almost Arctic severity of the present winter has brought many diseases in its train, especially those of a neuralgic, rheumatic, and gouty nature, it is satisfactory to learn that a new remedy of a most efficacious and invaluable kind, called Tic Sano, has been discovered.

Extract from the Civil Service Gazette of December 13, 1879:—"All classes of society will learn with the greatest satisfaction of an undoubted remedy for Neuralgia, Gout, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Nervous and Sick Headaches, Gravel, and other most painful disorders, which has been discovered. It is known as RUSSELL'S TIC-SANO, is of a vegetable nature, and is consequently of a completely harmless kind, and much to be preferred to the thousand and one remedies and so-called specifics which have already made their appearance amongst us. It has also a wonderful effect upon the digestive organs, and for aged people, and those of delicate constitution, its use will prove most beneficial."

TIC-SANO purifies the blood, strengthens the system, and so wards off one-half the diseases the flesh is heir to.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1880.

FIELD-MARSHAL VON MOLTKE holds that absence of quantity may be made up for by the quality of an Army. That the Army in South Africa did its work at last, cannot be denied. They destroyed the military power of the Zulus after two campaigns, in which they were aided by a great force of volunteers, European and Native auxiliaries. No one can deny it. That the officers, as a body, displayed the greatest gallantry, efficiency, and skill, is patent to the world. No men could work harder,—Guardsmen, Line, special-service, staff, and ordinary regimental officers of all arms. There were very few exceptions indeed to these remarks, and if they were named or indicated, it would only show how the immense majority had done their duty,—it would prove the rule, if any proof of the British officers' sterling quality were needed. But, nathless, there were points with which the officers could not deal effectively, in which the Army was not all that could be desired, and the question for the country is to consider if, without violent wrench or reaction, the Army can be restored to its old form in its first line. In that old form, the first line was admittedly magnificent, "but it had no reserves." Advocates of the "all for the reserve"—one would think they actually believed in such a system—say that in the old days regiments were filled up by volunteers and drafts from other regiments, in an emergency, just as they are now. True, but the difference is that those volunteers and drafts consisted of what would now be called old soldiers, and that boys were not added to boys. There are Generals who say they prefer boys to old soldiers, but they go in direct opposition to the experience and practice of all the great Generals of antiquity and modern times. In 1854 the bulk of the troops assembled for the bold invasion of the Crimea were what would to-day be styled veteran troops, though few of them had heard a shot fired. Those who see the Guards as they are, and remember the Guards at Malta, would say that they are now nearly up, but not quite up, to the standard of those grand battalions which excited the admiration of the French at Valetta, broke up the Russian columns at the Alma, turned every foot of ground on the slopes of Inkerman to the stronghold of a hero, and dwindled away in snow, mud, and misery, on the dreary plateau, beneath the blows of an enemy who was armed only with official incompetence and neglect, till the sight of the wretched remnant caused Lord Rokeby to burst into tears. The Line were equally fine in proportion, and men now living who remember the 41st, 47th, and 49th, the "Fours" Brigade of Adams, the 95th, 55th, the Rifle Brigade, 7th, 77th,—well, nearly every regiment which landed at Old Fort, and who look at an ordinary Line regiment, will find, we fear, a sorry difference between the old and new. "But there was no Reserve then, and now we have a splendid Reserve." Have we indeed got that for which so much has been surrendered? Scarcely, we fear. Colonel Stanley admits the Reserve is not filling up satisfactorily, and that natural decay—medical unfitness—has begun to eat into it. The case, then, becomes serious, if the first line does not present all the conditions of military stability and efficiency which constitute a fighting army, and the Reserve, for the sake of which these conditions were enfeebled and diminished, is not ready to supplement it. We may be called on some day to meet a European enemy. We were very near it two years ago. Our Army is not maintained to fight Zulus, Caffres, Afghans, Chinese, or Burmans, only. Doubtless, our gallant English lads would fight as became them, but the most sanguine General would scarcely like to face 60,000 foreigners with 40,000 or 50,000 British troops such as they are to-day, or march to meet them with the confidence his predecessor would have felt of yore. And besides, he could not get them. To deal with Cetewayo put the War Office to the pin of its collar. Therefore, we say the condition of the Army is not satisfactory. Troops should behave well in a peaceful country, as well as in the scenes of war; and the younger they are, the more rigid should be the discipline. But it is just as the Army becomes younger that the means of punishment in the hands of officers are weakened by concessions to injudicious and perhaps not well-intentioned humanitarianism. Colonel Stanley remarked that the new Act could not be held responsible for increase of crime, because it only came into operation on March 1; but he could easily find out that there was a different opinion in the Transvaal and Natal among the officers. The men read the newspapers now-a-days. If the country will have an Army of boys, it must consent to have a code of military law which recognises the use of the correctives known at Eton and Marlborough, or a short-service army will give very short service indeed before a serious enemy. The lash was used when needed, in the enemy's country, where there was little or no temptation to licence; but it was put up when the troops moved into the next parish, where temptations abounded. No human being with head or heart would advocate flogging for its own sake. But if there be no proper punishment as an alternative; if the death-penalty be scored out, save for tremendous crimes; if all chastisement akin to "torture" be viewed with just horror, what is to be done with a boy Army on the line of march, when "it drinks more than is good for it," and commits what may be called "irregularities?" There are no prisons available; no military, no civil police, in the vast regions to which we allude, except at rare and great intervals. We await Lord Airey's report with impatience. Colonel Stanley was justified in declining to open up important and vital questions without the Report, but there ought to be no delay about its presentation, for the subjects to be considered are of very great and very pressing importance.

When Colonel Stanley replied to Sir W. Barttelott's question respecting Sir Garnet Wolseley's despatch, of which question it is not quite unlikely the Secretary of State had had some previous information ere the notice was put on the paper, the right honourable gentleman referred to a despatch or report, which had been received from Major-General Newdigate, respecting the conduct of the troops, and offered in the kindest way to have it printed as an unopposed return. It was a statement made by the gallant and excellent officer, in consequence of Dr. Russell's letter; and the Adjutant-General, who is remarkably anxious to publish all the despatches he can, sent it to Lord Chelmsford, who returned it with a covering letter to the Horse Guards. But neither the statement nor the covering letter have made their appearance yet, which, considering the eagerness of the War Office to give the fullest information to the country on the discipline of the Army in South Africa, is rather noticeable.

Brevet Major H. M. Thompson, 82nd Regiment, has been appointed Secretary and Adjutant of the Royal Military Asylum, Chelsea, vice Captain E. M. Roe, 23rd Fusiliers, who, as we announced last week, has resigned the appointment.

A code of regulations for war correspondents was draughted at the War Office by a council of officers. It was merely a "scheme" for the consideration of the authorities. It was not sanctioned or passed. Somehow copies of it reached India, where the scheme was accepted as an actual regulation. The authorities at Pall Mall are setting that matter right, but they will be all in the wrong apparently if they direct their special attention to the case of an officer on the Viceroy's Staff who has been appointed correspondent of a London daily paper permissu superiorum. The India Office, perhaps, might interfere with greater effect.

Colonel W. Bellairs has resigned his appointment as Deputy-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at the Cape of Good Hope. Colonel Bellairs is to be succeeded by Lieutenant-Colonel D. R. Barnes, half-pay, late 14th Foot, who has been employed since August, 1875, as Chief Instructor at the School of Musketry, Hythe.

A very great deal, indeed, depends on the next few years of Army administration. It is almost certain that an officer whose good-fortune is only equalled by his genius, will be called from his present field of action to be the Quartermaster-General of the Army when Sir D. Lysons goes to Aldershot, and that he will become Adjutant-General should Sir C. Ellice be charged with the responsibilities of the command in India, in succession to General Sir P. Haines. It is not unjust to the officer in question to assume that he is aware of the very serious defects which our small wars are developing in the present system, and that he must be working towards the great result of compulsory military service as the only possible solution of the immense difficulties which are crowding on the country, as the costs and charges of a bonus system of enlistment increase in proportion to the extension of Imperial enterprise, and the ardour or the necessities of the population for military service are counteracted by the increased inducements to resort to civil employment.

The days of the crimson sash, which has so long formed part of the uniform of the British infantry officer, are, we believe, numbered, and an order will probably be issued shortly for its discontinuance, a leather belt with field-glass being adopted in its place. This is a change we have long advocated, and it is one that will give the utmost satisfaction to all practical soldiers. The dress sash will probably be retained for State occasions.

There is a proposal to discard the present regulation helmet, in favour of one of a more serviceable pattern, made of leather.

Colonel Stanley stated on Monday that it had been decided to do away with pipe-clayed belts. It is in contemplation, we understand, to go even further, and to substitute a brown-leather sword-belt for the white one now worn by officers. We should, therefore, advise those who are providing themselves with outfits to make inquiries, before giving orders to their tailors.

We understand that the continued absence from London of Lord Winmarleigh is the sole obstacle that exists to the meeting of the Royal Commission on the Scientific Corps.

We shall hope to learn that some person in authority has been induced to take up the case of the unfortunate Mrs. Emmett, widow of Major-General Emmett, R.E., to which we referred last week, for a more deserving one never came under our notice. The idea of the widow of a distinguished soldier who fought in the Peninsula, and rose to the rank of Major-General in the Army, being denied by the War Office even the miserable pittance which we call a "compassionate allowance!" Is there no one who will espouse the cause of the widows and fatherless in Parliament, and induce the Government to make some more adequate provision for the families of those who risk their lives in their country's cause. The regulations as to widows' pensions, as they stand at present, are simply a disgrace to a civilised nation, and the cruel treatment which poor Mrs. Emmett has hitherto received ought to convince the authorities at the War Office that there exists substantial ground for complaint on the part of both the Army and the public.

A Distinguished-Service Reward is vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-General J. R. Stuart, C.B., to the colonelcy of the 54th Regiment.

Sir Garnet Wolseley arrived at Pietermaritzburg on 26th ult., but returns to Pretoria again for a short time. The Frontier Light Horse were to have been disbanded on January 26. Major-General Clifford is now at Pretoria, in command; Colonel Harrison, C.B., R.E., has gone to England, viâ Zanzibar and Aden. Talk of railway from Pretoria to Delagoa Bay, distance 340 miles, of which Transvaal will undertake about 290 miles is once more heard; coal to be had in New Scotland; Swasi Kafirs willing to work on railway. Provisions are nearly doubled in price at Pretoria, owing to Boers carrying out their threat of not selling to the English. Abundance of rain has fallen, and country is looking lovely.

The appointment of Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General at Gibraltar is about to fall vacant, Captain A. E. Pearse, 76th Regiment, being about to revert to regimental duty, on promotion.

It is only fair to Brevet General Massey, that the public, cognisant of his past services, should refrain from judging him on the ex parte statement of the —— correspondent, an Indian General officer who backs up Sir F. Roberts in all things, until the full facts are known. We have reason to believe that, on hearing of the extraordinary decision of Sir F. Haines, the Commander-in-Chief—a decision hastily come to, without any explanation being previously required—General Massey at once started for Peshawur, to have a personal interview with his Excellency. We understand a message has been received, in which General Massey says his case is so strong and clear, that he has not the least doubt of the result, and that every unprejudiced officer at Cabul considers him completely exonerated from any blame for the event of December 11. We may add, from other undoubted authority, that Sir F. Roberts himself may be said to have commanded in the whole of that affair. With regard to the affair of October 8, in which General Massey captured the Sherpur cantonment and seventy-eight guns, though General Roberts, an officer knowing little or nothing of cavalry, thought he might have captured more Afghans, the General commanding can scarcely have endorsed his friend, the —— correspondent, whose telegram is most unhandsome, considering he is himself an Indian officer on the Active List, for General Roberts, in his despatch, gave his "best thanks" to the cavalry commander.

Lord Elcho has good right to be proud. He has given a shield to England, one which foreigners hold, perhaps, in more esteem than we do, and the Volunteers have honoured the stoutest champion in the name of the country with a shield in return.

Major Barnes, 35th Regiment, who is acting as Government Commissioner for the Bloemhof district and as Landdrost, one of those promoted by brevet in July, 1873, like them, has been a good deal "superseded" by luckier majors, and is surely entitled to consideration. It is quite bad enough to have to live in such a place as Christiana without being exposed to neglect elsewhere.

It is long since a Secretary of State for War had the good-fortune which befell Colonel Stanley this week. It is true that in 1874 the Estimates were disposed of in one night, but then it was under peculiar circumstances, among which the public spirit and patriotism of the then Opposition, must be highly placed, and some years further back the Government of the day were equally fortunate.

They are painting Boodle's! Several old members are quite disgusted, and resignations are expected.

Preparations are being made at Portsmouth for carrying out some important torpedo experiments at Spithead. The 1st of May has been named as the probable date upon which the practice will take place.

The customary prayers were read by the dockyard chaplain, the Rev. R. Picton, and shortly afterwards the vessel was launched; the naming ceremony being performed by the daughter of Capt. Hunt Grubbe, captain of the Steam Reserve. The vessel, which was commenced in May, 1878, is to be completed ready for sea during the ensuing financial year.

EMERALD, Capt. W. H. Maxwell. A correspondent, writing to the Times from Levuka, Dec. 28, 1879, says:—"The Emerald has just returned from the island of Rotumah, the latest addition to the British Empire in these waters. She has been conveying thither on a visit the High Commissioner, with his aide-de-camp and private secretary. It is now some months since a deputation of chiefs from each of the two hostile factions between whom the island is divided arrived at Levuka to beg for its annexation to Great Britain, literally for the preservation of their lives. The story they told, which on inquiry proved to be true, was that now for many years a fight had been going on, and the two sides were too nearly equal to render it likely the struggle would be ended, either by force of arms or mutual agreement. Meanwhile, every now and then about half-a-dozen men were slain in this wretched squabble. Sir Arthur Gordon acceded provisionally to their request, and sent a young relative of his own to take temporary charge of the island. It speaks volumes for this gentleman's moral authority that, although a fierce fight had been fought just before his arrival, wherein a French Catholic missionary was killed, and the knives of the combatants were, so to speak, at one another's throats, no attempt was made to renew hostilities in the period that elapsed before the High Commissioner was able to pay the place a visit in the Emerald. His Excellency had several satisfactory interviews with the chiefs, but the formal ceremony of hoisting the Union Jack will not be performed till the cession is ratified by the home authorities."

HECTOR, Capt. C. Simpson, has returned to Netley from Cowes. A fire broke out in the pay office in the central block of Netley Hospital, Southampton, about two yesterday afternoon. A body of seamen and marines were landed from the Hector guardship, and, with the hospital staff, got the fire under in about an hour. It is feared the museum is considerably damaged, more by water than fire.

INVINCIBLE, Capt. the Hon. Edmund Fremantle, C.B., has arrived at Salonica, in consequence of telegraphic orders, for the purpose of rendering assistance, if possible, to Col. Synge. Capt. Fremantle has again distinguished himself by saving the life of one of his crew, during the passage from Alexandria to Aboukir Bay. The Invincible was steaming at about six knots, when a man fell overboard. The engines were reversed, life-buoys let go, and boats called away. Meanwhile, the man was observed to seize hold of the lead-line, and, as a consequence, he was dragged completely under water for several seconds, till, almost suffocated and becoming unconscious, he lost his hold and floated astern, his head being under the water. The captain, on the bridge, saw that delay would be fatal, and having given necessary orders, went overboard as he stood. And he was not a moment too soon, for when he reached the spot where the man was last seen, his rescuer found him already some distance under water. Having brought him to the surface, heavily weighted as he was, he had some difficulty in keeping the man's head above water, till Sub-Lieut. Moore, and Cunningham, blacksmith's mate, jumped overboard to the assistance of both, and, the boats arriving, all were brought safely on board. The rescued man was instantly removed to the sick bay, where he was soon restored to consciousness, and is now quite recovered. Capt. Fremantle already possesses the bronze medal of the Royal Humane Society, for jumping overboard off the poop of the Lord Warden in 1877, in Plymouth Sound, and saving the life of a boy who had fallen from aloft.

MIDGE, Capt. Salmon, and the Kestrel left Singapore in company on Dec. 27, and after passing the Horsburgh Light the Kestrel took the Midge in tow until near Labuan, experiencing calms and light winds to that port, where they both arrived under steam shortly before 11 o'clock on Friday, Jan. 2. They remained at Labuan for four days, having to wait for the arrival of the steamer Cleator from Singapore with coal. Left Labuan on the 6th, the Kestrel taking two prisoners connected with the Kate Waters tragedy and a police inspector in charge of them on board for Hong Kong. The Midge was again taken in tow by the Kestrel and proceeded to Manila, to which port fine weather was experienced. When abreast of Corregidor Island the Kestrel cast off the towing line of the Midge, and they both arrived at Manila, the former at midnight, and the latter at two o'clock on the 10th. Left again on the 15th, and when clear of the shipping the Kestrel again took the Midge in tow and proceeded towards Hong Kong. The Midge will undergo some extensive repairs before being recommissioned.

The Admiralty have directed that in future on ships paying off, captains are to take care to send in the form, stating the names of petty officers and seamen whom they recommend for higher ratings. They are also to state the particular rating for which each man is qualified, and the return is to be forwarded to the depôt or gunnery ship to which the men are returning. Seamen are not to be rated as petty officers in the depôt or in gunnery ships in future unless required for draft, when, if petty officers are not available, those recommended may then be rated.

The members of the Royal Naval Club dined together at Willis's Rooms on Tuesday, under the presidency of Rear-Admiral Soady. There were present Admiral Sir William Mends, K.C.B., Vice-Admiral Robertson, Rear-Admiral Byng, Admiral C. B. Hamilton; Capts. E. T. Church, Henry N. Hippisley, Brownlow, H. Nelson, Fairman, Andoe, F. R. Blackburne, Van der Meulen, H. F. Stephenson, G. Anstruther, William Spratt, Alick Hastings, Arthur Brooke, Verney, T. E. Symonds, and Musgrave; Commanders M'Ilwaine, R. N. Custance, C. Johnstone, and Mr. Alexander Rougemont (guest).

THE DAPHNE SALVAGE SUIT.

In the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice on Saturday, the case of "The Daphne v. the Vortigern" came before Sir R. Phillimore. It was a claim for salvage, brought by the late commander of the Daphne against the owner of the Vortigern and the Liverpool Salvage Association. On Dec. 29, 1878, the Vortigern, screw steamship, of 1,362 tons gross register, whilst on a voyage from Liverpool and Marseilles to Zanzibar, with passengers and a general cargo consisting of coals, muskets, spirits, &c., went ashore off Ras Alulch, on the African coast of the Gulf of Aden, about 31 miles west of Cape Guardafui, within the territory of Sultan Yusouf Ben Ali, a local chief of the Somalis. All efforts to get the ship off proved unavailing, and on Jan. 2 the ship was abandoned, and she was plundered by the pearl-fishers on the coast and the Somalis. Intelligence of the condition of the Vortigern having reached England, the Liverpool Salvage Association instructed their agent at Aden (Mr. Ganslandt) to procure assistance from the earliest passing ship. The Daphne having arrived at Aden on Jan. 26, 1879, on her way to England, her commander was applied to, and he, with a dhow in tow and a party of coolies, proceeded in the Daphne and anchored close to the Vortigern on Feb. 2. Immediately on her arrival the English flag was hoisted and sentries were posted on board the Vortigern, and the vessel was pumped and anchors run out to prevent her driving. Upwards of 1,300 tons of water were removed from the ship, and 300 tons of coal saved. Arrangements were then made for towing the Vortigern to Aden, and she was safely anchored there on Feb. 12. The value of the Vortigern as salved was about £8,000. Sir Robert Phillimore was of opinion that the Vortigern, after being left derelict and plundered by the natives, was saved from complete destruction by the salvors, and awarded the sum of £3,000, as the remuneration for the services performed.

THE HOTCHKISS GUNS.

At the Royal United Service Institution, on Tuesday evening, a paper was read for Mr. Hotchkiss, before a numerous audience, on "Revolving Cannons" as exemplified by a model of the Hotchkiss gun. The chair was occupied by Rear-Admiral Hoskins, C.B., who was supported by Admiral Sir Cooper Key, K.C.B., F.R.S., Rear-Admiral Selwyn, and numerous other officers of distinction. The meeting was also attended by Dr. Gatling, Mr. Nordenfeldt, and Mr. Gardner, inventors of other systems of machine guns, their presence and remarks during the discussion which followed the lecture rendering the proceedings all the more interesting. Mr. Hotchkiss opened the lecture by remarking that for some years past the machine-gun question has become one of great importance to all branches of the Services, for, by slow degrees, all countries are introducing one system or another of this weapon into their armaments. It was during the late American war that mitrailleuses began to attract so much attention, and after their adoption by France they soon became, we may say, quite the rage everywhere. The practical utility of the mitrailleuse proper, that is, the delicate and complicated machine for throwing an enormous quantity of small bullets (or mitraille), was very much doubted by many military authorities, whilst, on the other hand, others saw therein an arm which would be of considerable value, and which probably would, to a great extent, revolutionise the existing modes of warfare. The Franco-German war of 1870, in which mitrailleuses were used on a large scale, demonstrated, however, pretty clearly the pros and contras of this kind of weapon as regards service in the field and in the Army generally; but the practical value afloat is still a good deal a matter of conjecture, although it is generally thought that the true sphere of action of the mitrailleuse is in the Navy. The lecturer then proceeded to explain the nature of his invention and the manner in which the gun worked, comparing every action of the mechanism and the form of the various parts of the gun to what is to be found in the Gatling, a weapon the Hotchkiss so nearly resembles that one might be led at first sight to suppose that both guns were evolved from the same brain. The great difference between the two systems claimed by Mr. Hotchkiss was, that whereas the Gatling fired small bullets or mitraille, his gun fired steel shot and shell weighing from one to two pounds. In the discussion which followed, Lieut. Armit, R.N., drew attention to the similarity which existed between the Gatling and the Hotchkiss guns, remarking that it seemed to have been taken for granted by Mr. Hotchkiss that the Gatling system ended at the rifle bullet, and admitted of no heavier projectile being used. This was evidently a mistake, and as yet no safer system than the Gatling had been invented. Several defects were then pointed out in the Hotchkiss gun, and the lecturer was requested to explain how he would get on in action, with only one lock for all the barrels, instead of one to each barrel, as in the Gatling, in the event of a cartridge-case sticking in one of the chambers. Admiral Selwin followed, speaking at length on the superiority of solid-drawn cartridge-cases over the obsolete metallic wrapped Boxer cartridge. Mr. Nordenfeldt, on being called upon by the chairman, rose, and explained the nature of the results of the competitive trials at Whale Island, which went to prove that the Hotchkiss gun was inferior to his in penetrating power. Dr. Gatling followed, remarking that his gun had been made to fire more worthless ammunition than any firearm ever yet produced had been able to expend. Now that science and mechanical skill had perfected the ammunition, he had perfected the gun, and could make it fire 1,000 rounds a minute—a fact beyond dispute, and reported upon by Major Noble, R.A., in his report on American weapons of war. At the same time, he was quite willing to supply guns to fire the Boxer cartridge, and undertook to distance all competitors, be it with guns of light or heavy calibres. Of the latter description, his company were now constructing some of one and a half inches, to fire steel shot and shell. It should not assumed that his invention was confined to small bullets. Up to now, Governments had confined him to the manufacture of small calibre guns, simply because they declined to even look at a shell-gun until the advent of the torpedo-boat upon the scene, as one of the latest adjuncts of Naval warfare. Then they never asked him whether he could supply a shell-gun, but began experimenting, unbeknown to him, with every such gun brought to their notice. He had, therefore, come to Europe to let it be known that he was prepared to supply revolving cannon or machine guns of any calibre that might be deemed the best suited to the purposes to which the gun would be applied, and he had a new type of large-bore gun in course of construction which he undertook to say would surpass anything as yet invented. The proceedings terminated by the chairman proposing a vote of thanks to the inventors present for the valuable information they had by their remarks contributed on the subject.

THE ROYAL NAVAL ARTILLERY VOLUNTEERS.

The brigade dinner of the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers was held at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet Street, on the 28th ult., the commanding officer, Lord Ashley, in the chair. A good muster of the corps were present, 172 out of the 307 on the books being at the dinner. There have been many entries during the past year, and there is but little doubt if greater facilities for drilling and working together were given, this rising corps would be still more popular, and enrol among its members many recruits from the yachting squadrons. Among the guests were Admirals Oliver and Hoskins, Col. Hope, V.C., Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P., Mr. Rathbone Edge, M.P., E. Doyle, Esq., and Com. Thomas A. Hull, R.N. The unavoidable absence of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh was much regretted. He was, however, well represented by Capts. White and Washington, and Mr. Whitehouse, of the Royal Naval Reserve. Mr. Brassey gave a very graphic account of the first summer cruise of the Volunteers in the gunboat, describing how they found themselves "all at sea," but he could now congratulate the force on attaining a very average degree of efficiency, and the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers may for the future be looked upon as one of the established institutions of the country.

The distribution of prizes won during the year by the members of the Liverpool Brigade of the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers was made on March 1 on board H.M.S. Eagle, in the King's Dock, by Mrs. Wm. Inman. The officers of the corps present were Lieuts. E. S. Inman (commanding), R. C. Lambert, and M. Squire; Hon. Lieuts. T. A. R. Littledale and W. G. Richardson; Sub-Lieuts. H. B. Tasker, J. H. Rea, W. Pierce, F. C. Danson, H. Langdon, S. R. Audsley, G. Greaves, F. H. Medley, and Pymr. C. E. Mumford. Amongst the visitors, of whom there was a large assemblage, were Com. Elliott, Capt. Thrupp (Resistance), Capt. Cookson (Eagle), Lieut.-Col. Tilney, Messrs. W. Inman, T. B. Royden, and Clarke Aspinall. After the presentation of the prizes, some remarks bearing on the success of the corps were made by Lieut. Lambert, in the course of proposing a vote of thanks to Mrs. Inman. He expressed his opinion that while the Naval Volunteer movement had increased generally of late years, the Liverpool Brigade had made the most rapid advance, owing, no doubt, to the active interest taken in it by Capts. Foot and Thrupp, the Naval officers stationed at the port. If the movement spread to all other seaports, as it ought to do, it would prove a valuable adjunct to the great Volunteer movement, now recognised as a real force in our national defences. Mr. Wm. Inman, in the course of acknowledging the compliment on behalf of Mrs. Inman, said he had watched the position of the country, which was now no worse than it was before. He thanked the Army, the Navy, and all those who had assisted the Government in the interests of the country. Mr. T. B. Royden, in the course of a few remarks, expressed the hope that the brigade would continue to increase in numbers and efficiency. On the motion of Alderman A. B. Forwood, seconded by Lieut. Inman, a vote of thanks was accorded to Capt. Cookson for granting the use of the Eagle for the presentation.

ROYAL UNITED SERVICE INSTITUTION.

The forty-ninth annual report of the Council, to be read to-day, Admiral Sir Cooper Key, K.C.B., presiding, will show that 32 life members and 148 annual subscribers, making a total of 180 new members, joined the Institution during the past year. The loss by death amounted to 119, and 63 members withdrew their names, whilst the names of 10 have been struck off the list in consequence of the non-payment of their subscriptions, after frequent applications. The decrease, therefore, is 12.

Life Subscriptions and Capital Account.—Life subscriptions to the amount of £400, including £249 10s. not invested in 1878, have been invested in Three per Cent. Consols, producing £414 12s. 1d., thus raising the fund property of the Institution on Jan. 1, 1880, to £12,505 18s. 11d.

Lectures and Journal.—Twenty-nine papers were read in the theatre of the Institution during the past year. See List on page 7, Appendix A. The thanks of the Institution are due to the authors of these papers for the valuable information on professional subjects contributed by them. The "Journal" has maintained its high character, and its sale exceeded that of 1878, which, as then reported, was the highest on record since 1873.

Library.—The library now contains 19,170 volumes, of which 420 have been added since the last annual report, 300 having been purchased and the remainder presented. Donations of books and maps have been received from the Governments of Austria, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United States. The thanks of the Council have been conveyed to the several Governments for these donations. The Institution is indebted to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and to the Secretaries of State for War and for India, for copies of various works issued by their departments. The exchange of "Journals" with foreign Governments, and with several scientific societies in this and other countries, has been continued.

Museum.—Amongst the additions to the Museum, the following are deserving of notice, viz.:—Models of Cleopatra's Needle; of the vessel in which the obelisk was brought to this country; and of the apparatus employed for erecting it—presented by Mr. John Dixon, C.E.; model of Capt. Scott's gun-carriage for the 10" R.M.L. gun (purchased). A list of the additions to the Museum, and to the Library, will be found in the "proceedings" of this day's meeting, and in the appendix to Vol. XXIII. of the "Journal."

Vice-Patrons.—The Council regret to record the death of Field-Marshal Sir W. Rowan, G.C.B., a vice-patron of the Institution. Sir W. Rowan became a member of the Institution in 1854, and on promotion to the rank of Field-Marshal, in 1877, he was elected a vice-patron. The Council have elected Admirals of the Fleet Sir George Rodney Mundy, G.C.B., D.C.L., Sir James Hope, G.C.B., and Sir Thomas Symonds, K.C.B., vice-patrons of the Institution.

Vice-Presidents.—The Council also regret to notify to the members the deaths of two Vice-Presidents, Major Loraine White and Mr. W. Stirling Lacon. Major White was one of the original members of the Institution, having joined it in 1831. He was elected a Member of Council in 1850, and a Vice-President in 1859. Mr. Stirling Lacon joined the Institution in 1853, and in 1857 was elected a member of the Council, in which capacity he served continuously to the year 1874, when he was elected a Vice-President, in recognition of his long and valuable services. The Council have elected Admiral Sir Erasmus Ommanney, C.B., F.R.S., a Vice-President of the Institution.

Gold Medal.—Seven essays were received in competition for the Gold Medal, the subject being:—"Naval tactics on the open sea, with the existing types of vessels and weapons." Vice-Admirals G. O. Willes, C.B., and W. G. Luard, C.B., and Rear-Admiral A. H. Hoskins, C.B., kindly undertook the duties of referees. Their award will be made known to the meeting, and the medal presented. The subject for the military essay for this year is—"Military Operations in the United Kingdom considered, particularly as influenced by the enclosed nature of the country." The competition is open to members of the Institution, and to all those eligible to become members.

The Council observe with regret a slight decrease in the number of the members on the 1st of January, 1880, as compared with the 1st of January, 1879. They are of opinion that this falling-off is only temporary, and they urge each individual member to give his hearty co-operation in making the benefits of the Institution more widely known amongst his brother officers, with a view to obtaining that support from all branches of H.M.'s Service which this Institution so justly deserves.

A correspondent sends the Hampshire Telegraph particulars respecting the fatal accident to Dr. Gibson, R.N. It appears that the deceased, the Rev. J. D. Lewis (chaplain of the Urgent), and Com. Alfred W. Warry (of the Urgent), were on a tour round Jamaica in the Tyrian. On Monday, Feb. 19, they accepted an invitation to dine at Belmont, the Tyrian being at the time anchored in Ocho Rins. They landed about 6.45 p.m., and found three horses waiting for them. They all mounted, and Com. Warry walked his horse on, being joined shortly afterwards by the chaplain. Almost directly afterwards they heard someone from behind shout out "Look out," and reining aside the deceased passed at runaway speed. His companions followed at a gallop, and three-quarters of a mile ahead they came up with the deceased, who was no horseman, mounted and waiting in the middle of the road. He told them that the horse had bolted. Com. Warry asked him if he thought he could hold it in, and he said he thought he could. After waiting a minute or so, on hearing from the deceased that he was all right, the Commander suggested that they should go on, and they started at a trot. Again the deceased's horse bolted, and again Com. Warry followed at a good pace, and arrived at Belmont, passing at a gallop the fatal turn called "The Bull," under which Dr. Gibson lay dead. The road at this point takes a sharp turn, nearly at a right angle, on a rocky boulder forming the corner, whilst on the other side, from the edge of the road, rocks and large stones slope down at an angle of 45° to the water, 15 to 18 ft. below. On arriving at Belmont and finding Dr. Gibson not there, Mr. Walker, the gentleman with whom the party were about to dine, sent immediately two boys on horseback to find him and show him the road. Ten minutes later Mr. Walker and the party started in search of the deceased, and eventually found the horse, which was being led by a woman, who said she had found it in the sea near the "Bull." Further search was made, and the body of the deceased was found in the water with the neck completely broken. The body was conveyed on board the Tyrian, the vessel leaving at midnight for Port Royal to take the body round for interment in the Naval Cemetery. Unfortunately, a fresh easterly breeze sprang up, which made the progress slow, and in the afternoon of the following day it was found necessary to bury the body at sea, and at three p.m. the ship was stopped off Buff Bay. Colours were half-masted, and the service was impressively read by the chaplain. The body was sewn up in a seaman's shroud, and committed to the deep in the customary way. Dr. Gibson was about 30 years of age; a B.A. and M.D. of Trinity College, Dublin. He had been a little over seven years in the Navy, and served previously on the China and home stations. Our correspondent adds that the deceased was a man of kindly disposition, warm-hearted, and generous, and his sad fate caused a deep impression.

Allen and Hanburys' "Perfected" Cod Liver Oil is not only freer from taste and smell than any oil ever before offered to the public, but it does not give rise to the nausea and eructations which render the use of ordinary oil, even of the finest quality, so repulsive. It is the pure oil, made at A. and H.'s own factory in Norway, and prepared by an entirely new and special process. It presents in the most effective condition all the invaluable properties of the remedy. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having A. and H.'s "Perfected" Oil. Sold only in imperial pints, 4s 9d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; ¼ pints, 1s 4d. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists, and of Allen and Hanbury, Plough Court, Lombard Street, London.

ADJUTANTS OF AUXILIARY FORCES.

Sir,—In your issue of the 21st ult. the income of a Volunteer adjutant is stated to be less than that of a Militia adjutant. In the interest of the latter body of officers, it is only fair that this statement should receive a prompt denial, and be accompanied by figures to prove it. The income of a Volunteer adjutant is a fixed one of £321 6s. 9d. per annum, less income-tax, and he is allowed, nay, required, to recruit for the Army in addition. The fixed income of a Militia adjutant is now only £248 6s. 9d. per annum, less income-tax; as, since the formation of brigade depôts at Militia head-quarters, the adjutant has been deprived of lodging, servant's, and stable allowances, amounting to £73 per annum. A Militia adjutant may think himself lucky if he makes £10 by Army recruits in the course of the year, as quite 4-5ths of the intermediate fees go to the adjutant of brigade depôts. With regard to Militia recruits, it is hardly likely that a regiment would ever require or obtain more than 200 in the course of a year which, at 2s. 6d. a head, brings into the adjutant £25 only. Add on the £16 12s. messing allowance, which, I may remark, en passant, does not nearly cover the expenses, and the Militia adjutant is still over £21 to the bad in comparison with the Volunteer. Again, the work of a Militia adjutant is far harder than that of the Volunteer; so much so, in fact, that I cannot understand the contrary being stated. A Volunteer adjutant attends an evening drill of each corps in his district twice or thrice a quarter, and the six days' battalion drill a year of the regiment. A Militia adjutant attends two parades a week for eight months in the year, and for the remaining four, works harder probably than any adjutant of a Line regiment (14 days' preliminary drill of permanent staff, two months' recruits' training, one month's regiment training, and the annual course of musketry, permanent staff). In addition, he is commanding officer, tells off prisoners, and conducts all correspondence—by no means a light task—for 11 months in the year. Great capital is made out of "bodily fatigue attendant on the continual travelling" of Volunteer adjutants, but a Militia adjutant must, if he wants recruits, attend every fair in the county during summer, autumn, and winter, and probably "travels" as much as the other man. I have left the horse question alone, as it is purely a matter of personal convenience. There is no more reason for a Volunteer adjutant to keep a horse all the year round than there is for a Militia adjutant; his work certainly does not require it. I think it will be found easy enough, in future, to get Volunteer adjutants, as the income is a fixed one, but very difficult to get Militia ones. The examination for the appointment is harder than it used to be, military law, tactics, and duties of brigade-majors having been added to the list of subjects. When captains in the Army begin to understand that they have a stiff examination to pass, an outlay of something like £120 to start the necessary horse, saddlery, and uniform, and then gain nothing whatever by it, they will probably prefer remaining with their regiments instead of accepting Militia adjutancies.—I am, &c., Umtagati.

Sir,—Permit me as a Militia adjutant at a brigade depôt, through the medium of your columns, to point out that none of the letters, &c., on the subject of the pay of Militia adjutants are correct. As an officer thus described, I draw nothing whatever beyond my Line captain's pay, all allowances ceasing at the end of this year, excepting allowance for one horse, which costs me twice as much as I get. I admit we get 2s. 6d. a head for Militia recruits, and 5s. a head for each Line recruit, an uncertain channel of existence, as anything of this kind is fluctuating, and the success of which depends upon the support of the colonel of the sub-district or otherwise. In the neighbouring county, the adjutant of a Militia regiment is provided by the county with a good house, and though deprived of lodging-money draws his servant's allowance, and there are many other invidious distinctions made between adjutants as regards their allowances, which really renders the appointment valueless.—I am, &c., Adjutant.

Sir,—With reference to your remarks in the Army and Navy Gazette of Feb. 14 upon a letter in the Gazette of Feb. 7, regarding the emoluments of adjutants of Militia, it seems unfair that the 61 adjutants of Militia quartered with brigade depôts should draw less in allowances than their brethren who are not so circumstanced, more especially as the former are available for duty with the brigade depôt during the non-training period, and have, consequently, to do more work for less pay. It would also seem unjust to the colonels of these 61 regiments that the adjutancies of their battalions should be worth less in a pecuniary sense than those of the other 62 battalions, as these 61 appointments will be less in demand, and, consequently, liable to be filled by less able men.—I am, &c., Soldier.

Sir,—The statement of pay and allowances drawn up by an adjutant of Militia, and which appeared in your columns of the 14th ult., is, no doubt a correct one as regards his particular case; but how about the 61 Militia adjutants, who are unfortunate enough to be at the head-quarters of brigade depôts? From the magnificent income which he swells up to £350 8s. 11d., you must deduct the following items, viz.:—Servant's allowance, £18 5s.; lodging allowance, £41 1s. 3d.; stable allowance, £13 13s. 9d.,—total, £73, reducing the same to £277 8s. 11d. The fuel and light allowance, which is also included, is only the same as that received by a regimental captain, who is married and lives out of barracks; and the horse allowance, which varies from 1s. 6d. to 2s. per day, according to districts, is but a poor pittance to keep a horse upon, inasmuch as it is almost invariably a necessity to have a private groom, the men at a brigade depôt being either very old, worn soldiers, or very young recruits, from which it is impossible almost to find a competent servant. I also consider that an average of £15 per annum for recruits is all that can be placed to the credit of an adjutant. His estimate of mess allowances is also, in my opinion, a high one; but it varies much in regiments, as it depends on the time for which the recruits are called up, and also on the different systems on which the different messes are conducted. What I would wish more especially to bring into notice is the fact that these 123 (I am taking the figures as given in your columns) officers, specially appointed to perform the same class of duty, and that 61 out of the 123 are in receipt of £73 per annum less pay than their comrades. The sooner such an anomaly and injustice are done away with the better, and the fairest way to do so would be by doing away with all the allowances for lodging, stable, and servants, and giving extra or special-duty pay of 3s. 6d. per day to all Militia adjutants.—I am, &c., One of Them.

CASUALTIES IN THE CRIMEA.

Sir,—With reference to a letter in your columns from "A Field Officer," I beg to state that by the official returns which were published by me in 1857, 390 officers and 20,707 non-commissioned officers and men died in the East. This is exclusive of 11 officers and 157 men of the Naval brigade, five officers and 225 men of the Marine brigade, 12 military chaplains, the Black Sea fleet, and those who died but never landed in the Crimea.—I am, &c.,

Sir,—I have read the articles on military equipment in your issue of Feb. 28 with much pleasure. If you only go on we shall get rid of pipe-clay, and become in time a more practical Army, and not the helpless mass we have so frequently lately been accused of being,—fit for nothing but "marching past." However, what I wish to draw your attention to now is that the infantry officer has no recognised means of carrying his great-coat on the march, whether he be mounted or dismounted, which seems extraordinary, especially as regards the mounted one. I would suggest that the dismounted officer carry it rolled, about the size of the men's, on his sword-belt behind, and attached to it by the straps; perhaps a supporting strap would be also necessary. The mounted one to carry it as the Cavalry. This, I think, would be better than, as I have seen on certain occasions, falling out a man for each officer's coat, and then the man not to be found when the coat was wanted.—I am, &c., X.

The Bermuda floating dock now requiring a thorough overhaul and repair, both internally and externally, the Admiralty have called for fifty volunteers from the seamen and marines serving on board the ships in home ports, who may be willing to proceed to Bermuda, for the purpose of chipping and painting the internal chambers of the dock. Those best adapted for the work will be selected, and will undergo a strict medical examination. They will also receive the necessary instructions as to precautions against lead-poisoning. One petty officer or non-commissioned officer is to be sent with every twenty seamen or marines. The work to be executed will occupy about eighteen months. The men will be required four days a week, the same hours as other men in the dockyard; they will be supplied with canvas suits to work in, and will receive additional pay as follows:—Petty officers or non-commissioned officers of marines, 1s. 6d. per day; leading and able seamen, privates and gunners R.M.A., 1s. 3d. per day; ordinary seamen, 1st and 2nd class, 1s. per day. The names of those who are selected from the volunteers are to be forwarded to the Admiralty without delay.

A telegram from Berlin states that the Reichstag was occupied on Thursday with the discussion of a motion calling upon Gen. von Stosch, the Chief of the Admiralty, to submit to the house the official report upon the loss of the Grosser Kurfürst off Folkestone. Gen. Stosch denied the accusation brought against him of having endeavoured to shift the responsibility for the disaster to the ironclad from off his own shoulders on to those of others, and declared that he had never issued any important regulation without having previously consulted the Admiralty Board. Accidents in the German marine were of less frequent occurrence than in the navies of other countries, and German ships-of-war were honourably regarded in all parts of the world. The Minister concluded by stating that what was really necessary was the prolongation of the term of service of the naval seamen, and he reserved to himself the right of bringing forward a proposal in that sense at a future period. Herr Unsen said that the house ought to show its approval of Gen. Stosch's efforts to convert a small fleet into a large one in the shortest possible space of time and with only moderate resources. He maintained that both Gen. Stosch and Admiral Batsch possessed the entire confidence and attachment of all naval officers. After some further discussion the house rejected the motion.

The annual meeting of the proprietors of the Oxford Military College took place at the Charing Cross Hotel, on Feb. 28, Major F. Duncan, R.A., chairman of the company, presiding. Among those present were the Earl of Powis, Lord Waveney, Gens. Lowry, C.B., Maitland, C.B., and Cameron, C.B.; Cols. Brendon, R.A., Moncrieff, F.R.S.; Capt. Bird Thompson, C. L. Pemberton, Esq., and others. The reports from the college were of the most satisfactory description. Lord Waveney moved, and Lord Powis seconded, the adoption of the report, which was carried unanimously. Gen. Cameron moved, and Gen. Lowry seconded, the re-election of Major Duncan, as chairman, which was carried by acclamation.

The New Boot Polish.—An entirely new idea for polishing boots has just been introduced which does away with the laborious method hitherto in use. Propert's Ebony Blacking polishes instantly without brushing, is of an oily nature, and, being waterproof, retains its lustre in all weathers. One application upon ladies', gentlemen's, or children's boots lasts a week.—Of Bootmakers, price 1s.—Wholesale of J. Propert, Battersea Park Road, London.

THE DOOMED MAJORS.

A correspondent, "Cathay," writes:—Seeing a remark made in one of the papers recently that Major (now Lieut. Colonel) Shadwell, who headed the list of majors then, had over 30 years' service, I was somewhat credulous, but on applying myself to Hart for half-an-hour, I found that there were upwards of 18 officers on the Majors' List with 30 and more years' service; and I am now asking your consideration to record the result of my investigation, as I fancy very few officers are aware of the fact, and thoughts will, doubtless, occur to them, as to yourself I am sure, how these old officers, many of them with good service, can ever obtain to their lieutenant-colonel's rank, seeing that we have arrived at the year in which brevet rank for length of service is to cease. The Military Press, if they will only understand this question in all its bearings, can, I am sure, do nothing less than persist in having the names of these 18 officers brought to the notice of his Royal Highness before the dread fiat goes forth in October next; for, if no exceptional cases are entertained previously, many of these "unfortunates" must be hopelessly left on the Majors' List, and which will be very hard luck indeed, for it must be remembered that each one is a necessarily advertised case of the inequalities of promotion caused by the Purchase system, and to pass such officers by now will be in effect punishing them twice over. I beg to enclose a list, showing the result of my search in Hart:—

THE VOLUNTEERS AND SCARLET.

Sir,—As, like me, you, Mr. Editor, are anxious to see the Auxiliaries in scarlet, I am sure you must be disappointed at the vacillation of the authorities on this question. In the provinces a large number of Volunteer regiments have, at a great expense, changed their uniforms from green or grey to scarlet, under the idea they were carrying out the desire of the Executive; and now, at the last moment, to please a few metropolitan corps, commanded by dukes or earls, the War Office withdraw their scheme, and thus cause the provincial regiments to think they have been fools for their pains. In future no regiments will be in any hurry to alter their uniform, when it is found the authorities are so squeezable. The expense of a change of uniform is particularly heavy in a Volunteer corps, as new uniforms are not often required. The company-drills and class-firing are generally performed in plain clothes, and even battalion drills are so performed when the corps has a good drill-shed. It is, in fact, only when a corps appears out of doors that uniform is required, and thus I have known a scarlet tunic to last for thirteen years, though this is an extreme case. Unless a number of men remain a long time in the ranks, and are careful of their clothing, the £1 10s. per annum cannot possibly pay all the numerous expenses of a corps. The fact is, the War Office should have paid the first cost of the change, and made it compulsory. At first, it was proposed to clothe the force at once in scarlet, and then deduct 10s. per annum, until the cost was paid off. This was abandoned, because of the feared increase caused thereby to one year's Estimates, even though followed by a reduction in future years. There is now a proposed "encouragement," in the shape of allowing "Rifle corps clothed in scarlet" (what an anomaly!) to draw clothing from Pimlico, while this "permission" is taken from corps in green or grey. As a practical man, I may state that this is no boon at all. The amount of credit given by the Army Clothing Depôt is no more than that given by any ordinary tailor, while the red-tapeism of the supply is most intolerable, and there is no saving in cost. Now, Mr. Editor, please put the saddle on the right horse, and remember it is not the fault of the Volunteers, but of the War Department, that we are not all in scarlet, like, yours truly,

A Volunteer Quartermaster-Serjeant.

It was recently decided at a meeting of the Hull Town Council to present an address to the Duke of Edinburgh on the occasion of his Royal Highness's visit to the town for the purpose of inspecting the guardship Audacious; but this week the Mayor informed the council that the Duke's secretary had stated that an address was not necessary, as the Duke's visit would be as an officer of the Royal Navy, and not as a member of the Royal Family.

Epps's Glycerine Jujubes.—Caution.—These effective and agreeable confections are sold by most Chemists. By others, however, attempts are often made at substitution. We therefore deem it necessary to caution the public that they can only be obtained in boxes, 6d and 1s; labelled James Epps & Co., Homœopathic Chemists, 48 Threadneedle Street, and 170 Piccadilly, London.

To Emigrants, or any one leaving Home for a Change.—Eno's Fruit Salt is of the greatest value to emigrants, not only in preventing sea-sickness, &c., but as a means of keeping the blood healthy under the ever-varying conditions to which they may be exposed. Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s 9d and 4s 6d.

SOME MAGAZINES.

There are several interesting articles in Fraser for this month; amongst others, a very opportune one on the coming election. The writer treats the subject in a fair, moderate tone; of course referring particularly to the Liberal defeats at Liverpool and Southwark. Mr. Blackmore's admirable serial, "Mary Anerley," increases in interest each month, and is quite worthy of the high reputation of the author.

The chief interest in Blackwood is Lieutenant Pallander's narrative of the exploration of the North-East Passage. The "Note-book" of a Staff Officer in Afghanistan contains many interesting particulars. The further instalment of "Bush Life in Queensland" deserves commendation, as also the continuation of "Reata."

In Cornhill for this month the charming story of "Mademoiselle de Mersac" is concluded. It has proved interesting from the commencement, but the author deserves especial credit for the tact and power with which he brings about a most difficult dénouement. Many readers may mourn over the fate of the sometimes quaint, but always sterling, heroine, but yet must admit that it is a picture perfectly true to the nature of each of the characters.

There is not much to draw attention to in Temple Bar for this month; each of the two serials, "Adam and Eve" and "The Rebel of the Family," is sufficient to sustain the character of the magazine.

The March number of Belgravia is a good one, but we cannot expect to find always such a charming gem as that contributed by Ouida in the preceding number. In the "Homes and Haunts of the Italian Poets," by Frances Eleanor Trollope, we find a carefully written sketch, "Giuseppe Giusti," who, by his writings some fifty years ago, influenced so materially the political condition of Italy. Mr. James Payn's serial, "A Confidential Agent," is continued, as also Mrs. Hunt's tale of "The Leaden Casket."

The Nineteenth Century for March opens with an article by Sir Spencer Robinson on the position occupied by England as a Naval Power. He observes upon our shortcomings, and states his emphatic opinion that our present system can never produce a really adequate or efficient Navy. There are several ably written political articles in this number, which deserve attention; and also one on war correspondents, from the pen of Lord Melgund, in reply to Mr. Archibald Forbes's observations on the subject in a recent number.

In the Contemporary Review, the Duke of Argyll appears in his usual form, when commenting on the "Ministerial Misstatements on the Afghan Question," but he is not likely to carry many reasoning readers with him.

We find discussed in the Fortnightly Review the late Bishop Wilberforce, by Lord Houghton, "Turkish Fallacies and British Facts," by L. H. Courtney, M.P., the Cabul atrocities, by Mr. Harrison, and "The Irish in England," by Mr. O'Connor Power, M.P.

Macmillan for March does not present anything of particular interest, though some of the articles will attract attention. That of Mr. Simcox on "Bishop Wilberforce," the Dean of Westminster's essay on "The Divine Life" and "The Perfect Death," Mr. Laing Meason's "Catholic Education in England," and Mr. John Mackay's "Smaller Farmers their Own Landlords."

The Gentleman's Magazine for this month is rather dull. Of course, an exception must be made in favour of Mr. Francillon's excellent serial, "Queen Cophetua."

The St. James's Magazine.—The St. James's for March is, as usual, full of sparkling little tales, on a large variety of themes. It would be difficult to find in magazine form a better sample of good light literature.

CASSELL'S PUBLICATIONS.—The newest feature in Cassell's publications for this month is the second part of The Life of Christ, by F. W. Farrar. Its illustrations are of exceptional excellence, and altogether it promises to prove a fitting companion to the productions of this eminent publishing firm, which have already become so familiar to every class of reader.

The March number of Once a Week contains a good deal of readable matter enclosed in a wrapper wonderfully embellished with mythical designs, the handiwork, it may be presumed, of the Artistic Colouring Printing Company, Limited.

Day of Rest. (Strahan and Co.)—The March number is excellent in every respect.

Facts about Port and Madeira. By Henry Vizetelly. (Ward, Lock, and Co.)—We derived not only amusement but also useful information when reading Mr. Vizetelly's experiences on vintages, &c., in the columns of the Pall Mall Gazette, where many were originally published. The author has now, after careful revision and the introduction of at least a hundred engravings, brought them before public attention in book form. The little volume just published contains about 200 pages of most interesting matter as regards wines vintaged around Lisbon, as well as those of Teneriffe, and also narrates some striking facts about port and madeira, both of which wines are steadily regaining their former high position, after having been left out in the cold for a quarter of a century. We could not attempt to notice a tithe of the facts collected by Mr. Vizetelly, but can most strongly recommend our readers, even though they be "total abstainers," to try a few glasses of the wines of the Upper Douro, in company with the author.

With this week the performances of the Carl Rosa Company at HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE have been brought to a termination. "Carmen" was performed on Tuesday evening, with Madame Selina Dolaro as the gypsy-girl; and Verdi's "Trovatore," Wallace's "Maritana," Balfe's "Bohemian Girl," and Ambroise Thomas's charming "Mignon," have formed the final programme of a season which is understood to have been fairly remunerative.

No novelty has been produced at any theatre during the week, and the few changes which have been made in the playbills of the less fashionable theatres are without importance. "Belphegor, the Mountebank," with Mr. Holt in the leading character, played by him a thousand times in all parts of the world, has been acted at the DUKE'S THEATRE. Conquest and Pettitt's drama of "During her Majesty's Pleasure" has been advanced from the boards of the Grecian to the CONNAUGHT THEATRE in Holborn. The Adelphi drama of "Janet Pride" has been the main attraction of the Surrey, and Andrew Halliday's adaptation of "Little Em'ly" has been performed at the STANDARD, with Mr. McIntyre as Peggotty and Mr. Charles Collette as Micawber.

"As You Like It," at the IMPERIAL THEATRE, performed every afternoon, is drawing large and most appreciative audiences. The ideal Rosalind is embodied to perfection by Miss Marie Litton, the general cast is most efficient, the pictorial accessories are complete, and the entire performance affords an amount of gratification to the intellectual playgoer that may be sought for in vain at any other theatre in the metropolis. It is not generally known that the songs and musical arrangements, by Sir Henry Bishop, were first introduced into the play when represented at Drury Lane, Nov. 25, 1824. It was then the "Cuckoo Song," now very properly omitted, was first sung by Rosalind. At the Imperial Theatre the incidental music is effectively given and appropriately applied, the arrangements of the stage are novel and well considered, and the dresses are in keeping with the assigned period and in admirable taste.

The prolonged career of "Les Cloches de Corneville" at the GLOBE will terminate in a fortnight, when the popular opera will have been performed seven hundred times on the English stage. A new opéra comique, in three acts, will be produced at Easter, under the title of "The Naval Cadet."

The theatrical obituary of the week includes the name of Mr. Frederick Payne, the well-known pantomimist and harlequin, who died at the age of 38. The decease, in his 72nd year, is also announced of Mr. Frederick Willis, the proprietor of Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's, and who remembered Almack's in all its glory.

Com. William Breedon, on the Retired (O) List, died on Saturday last at 73 Kennington Road, Lambeth, in his 81st year. The deceased officer was son of the late Rev. T. S. Breedon, D.D., of Pangbourne, Berks, and entered the Navy in Jan. 1813, on board the Elephant, 74, Capt. Fras. Wm. Austen, on the Baltic station. He afterwards served in the Derwent, 18, Capt. Thos. Williams, employed off Newfoundland; the Vengeur, 74, Capt. Thos. Alexander, and subsequently, for short periods, in the Ramillies, 74, Capt. Aiskew Paffard Hollis, and Hyperion, 36, Capt. Thos. Searle, all lying at Portsmouth; served, from Nov. 1818, to March, 1822, in the Arab, 18, Capt. Chas. Simeon, on the Cork station; and, after a further attachment, in the West Indies, to the Ringdove, 18, Gloucester, 74, and again to the Hyperion, commanded by Capt. Geo. Fred. Rich, as well as to the Isis, 50, Capt. Thos. Forrest, was appointed, Aug. 5, 1825, acting-lieutenant of the Rattlesnake, 28, Capt. Hugh Patton, from which ship he was confirmed into the Bellette, 18, Capt. Chas. Croker, Oct. 4, 1825. He came home and was placed on half-pay in March, 1826, and was transferred to the Reserved List in July, 1851. He became retired commander, July1, 1864.

It is announced that to Sir H. Havelock has been left half a million sterling by his father's cousin, on condition of changing his name to Allen. Yesterday's York Herald says:—"Sir Henry, having accepted the bequest, is about to obtain a royal licence to assume the name of Havelock-Allen."

Mr. Marston's unique Paper Cutter has fetched the public to an extraordinary extent. We are informed that considerably more than twelve thousand have been sold at 1s. each, without the aid of advertising, and that at present the demand far exceeds the supply. Happy thought, that paper-knife!

A new slave convention has been entered into between the Governments of Great Britain and the German Empire, whereby co-operation between the ships of the two Powers in the suppression of slave traffic is assured.—Standard.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Nothing preserves the health so well as an occasional alterative in changes of weather, or when the nerves are unstrung. These Pills act admirably on the stomach, liver, and kidneys, and so thoroughly purify the blood, that they are the most efficient remedy in warding off derangements of the stomach, fever, diarrhœa, dysentery, and other maladies, and giving tone and energy to debilitated constitutions. All who have the natural and laudable desire of maintaining their own and their family's health, cannot do better than trust to Holloway's Pills, which cool, regulate, and strengthen. These purifying Pills are suitable for all ages, seasons, climates, and constitutions, when all other means fail, and are the female's best friend.

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.

The PUREST. The MOST PALATABLE. The MOST DIGESTIBLE. The MOST EFFICACIOUS.

Incontestably proved by Thirty Years' Medical Experience to be

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

These two old-established Family Hotels, from their especially advantageous position, both overlooking the Thames Embankment, combine light, air, and perfect quiet, although in the centre of London. They are now under one management, and are conducted on the principle of a fixed charge of SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE PER DAY, which includes a good Bedroom, Breakfast of hot and cold meats, Luncheon, Dinner of six courses, and Tea and Coffee in the evening; also the use of large, well-appointed Sitting-rooms, including an ELEGANTLY-APPOINTED DRAWING-ROOM.

These Hotels, containing upwards of 200 Rooms, have been for many years largely patronised by Members of Parliament, the Clergy, and by Military and Naval Officers and their Families, by reason of their central, but retired localities, affording all the comforts and luxuries of high-class Hotels.

REPORT.—"I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch No. 17,179, of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-1876 in the Arctic, and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best, if not the very best, in the 'Discovery,' and since my return home continues to perform equally satisfactory."

THE letters of Lord Chelmsford and Major-General Newdigate, published this week as a Parliamentary paper, have given the controversy between Dr. Russell and Sir Garnet Wolseley a fresh impetus. It is, therefore, but justice to call the attention of our readers to Dr. Russell's letter of last week in the Daily Telegraph, which otherwise we should have left to speak for itself. The arguments which he would employ in refutation of Sir Garnet Wolseley's report were so obvious, that most of them were anticipated by us last week. The letter, however, none the less merits a careful perusal by all lovers of truth. It was quite certain from the first that Dr. Russell had raised a hornet's nest, and that he would have a hard struggle to maintain his position. He both wounded professional susceptibilities, and also shivered the theories of those who have been trying assiduously for several years past to convince the world that the inherent defects of the Short-service and Linked-battalion system were really merits; that soldiers can be trained in a few months, that veterans were no better than recruits, and that boys were as suited as men for active service. He likewise offended another clique, the humanitarians, who are all for maintaining discipline by punishments which simply cannot be carried out in the field. Thus he has a formidable array of foes banded together against him. Dr. Russell begins his letter by drawing attention to the fact that Sir Garnet Wolseley had, before any inquiry had been instituted, "telegraphed in hot haste that my statements were such gross exaggerations and transparent untruths, that I must have been hoaxed." We presume that Sir Garnet's excuse for using such discourteous language, would be that it was justified by the shameful imputations which Dr. Russell had cast upon the British Army. Dr. Russell, however, distinctly said that he attributed the disorders of which he complained to only a few ill-conditioned men, and by no means held the mass of the troops responsible. Moreover, if the alleged outrages really were committed, there was no slander, save on the exploded legal axiom that "the greater the truth, the greater the libel." Dr. Russell repeats that the outrages he wrote of were actually committed, and asserts that he can prove the correctness of his statement if he can first obtain an assurance from the Horse Guards that his informants will not become the victims of official wrath. This assurance the Horse Guards will not give, consequently it will be difficult for Dr. Russell to make good his case. The excuse of the authorities is, that the officers in question ought to have officially reported that which they privately told Dr. Russell. This plea is, however, valueless, for what Dr. Russell's informants told him was a collection of facts, illustrating the rottenness of our military system. Considering how, under the influence of theorists, a scheme had been officially adopted which all practical soldiers—save, perhaps, Sir Garnet Wolseley and a few Cardwellites—knew would break down as soon as tested; and that under the pressure of spurious humanitarians, the discipline of the Army had been steadily deteriorating,—it was not likely that officers would, in effect, tell their superiors that the War Office had allowed the Army to "go to the dogs." Still, in spite of the disadvantages under which Dr. Russell labours, he is apparently resolved to stand to his guns. He has written out for further evidence, and we may expect ere long another letter from his eloquent pen. We may presume that the Authorities have the same desire as that by which he is animated,—namely, that the whole case should be thoroughly exposed to the light of day, and that the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, should be spoken. Colonel Stanley himself speaks of further inquiry, but we would point out that if the inquiry is not to be a repetition of Sir Garnet Wolseley's clumsy farce, the authorities are not going the right way to work by impliedly saying of Dr. Russell's military informants, "Only let us find out who you are, and it will be the worse for you!" That the inquiry hitherto made is a farce, must be apparent to all who take the trouble to consider the matter. Sir Garnet only dealt with a part of the area and time touched on by Dr. Russell, and employed as his inquirers men whose official position is dependent on the pleasure of the Government. If the Innkeepers be questioned, it is probable that they also, from interested motives, will not be over-anxious to make out a case against the troops. The reason is obvious. Many of these inns are employed to take charge of Commissariat dépôts, and as Commissariat contractors. It is clearly, therefore, contrary to their interest to falsify the statements of Sir Garnet Wolseley. The only manner in which a genuine, honest, and effectual inquiry could be carried out would be by sending out to South Africa a Royal Commission, with directions to seek for information from all sources. The expense would be great, but it is desirable that it should be incurred, for if Dr. Russell's statements are well founded, it is of the highest importance that the fact should be established beyond question, as a starting-point for a new military system. The expense might have been avoided, if Sir Garnet Wolseley had assumed a position of impartiality, instead of putting himself forward as an advocate, and blazing out into wrath, because a rotten system was declared to have produced bad results. It is a significant fact that, at the precise moment when military optimists and rampant officialism are, metaphorically, thirsting for Dr. Russell's blood, a South-African newspaper should contain statements which strongly bear out the charges made in the Daily Telegraph. In the Mercury of January 27 is to be found a letter, dated Utrecht, January 15, with the following passages:—"The detachment of the 58th Regiment stationed here are making themselves rather notorious. Some time ago, they broke into the Commissariat stores, while under the charge of sentries; and during the holiday and the absence of Mr. C. McDonell, broke into his dwelling-house, and took property worth £50; and last week two of them took the military water-cart, pitched off the water-casks, and went to the farmhouse of Mr. Gort Müller, and loaded up the cart full of furniture. They were luckily caught in the act, on the premises. One has deserted, and the other got six months' imprisonment. Robberies are of daily occurrence. Nothing is too hot or too heavy. From a Government waggon to a lap-dog, nothing comes amiss." The other passage relates to the conduct of a picket, despatched to prevent the soldiers being mixed up with a brawl between civilians. "One of the picket exceeded his orders, ordering a Boer to surrender, under pain of being fired at, and presented his empty rifle, threatening to fire if the Boer did not surrender; and the Boer halted. But the Landdrost reported the soldier, and he was placed under arrest, and his corporal's stripes taken from him." Are these statements also gross exaggerations? We naturally have the interest and honour of the Army warmly at heart, quite as much, so we venture to say, as the irascible Sir Garnet Wolseley; but we differ from him in this, that we believe we are proving ourselves true friends to the Army, by preventing the reputation of all being damaged through screening or denying the misconduct of a few. Dr. Russell, too, will, in our opinion, have rendered a great public service, if he succeeds in convincing the public that our present military system is, as all practical soldiers know it to be, one requiring a thorough reform. With regard to the letters of Lord Chelmsford and General Newdigate, they really prove very little, for they refer almost entirely to one column and one part of the campaign. General Newdigate admits that between June 6 and July 1, in his own column, by his own showing, there was considerable excitement, and Dr. Russell, in his letter in Thursday's Daily Telegraph, says that he was informed that one regiment alone fired many hundreds of rounds. As to the effect of the firing, Dr. Russell challenges anyone to show that there was any trace of a result, save on the persons of some of our own men, wounded by their comrades. As to the false alarm of June 19, Dr. Russell says that he has been informed that there was anything but quiet among some of those inside the laager. On July 1, General Newdigate admits that a native regiment, in their hurry to get to their assigned place, rushed through, and carried back part of a European regiment, and that one picquet retired without orders. Dr. Russell implies that the natives were panic-stricken. We gladly accept the testimony of Lord Chelmsford that the conduct of the men on the line of march from the Blood River to Ulundi was good, and that the young soldiers behaved well when under the close supervision of their officers at Kambula, Gingihlovo, and Ulundi; but that is not the point. Dr. Russell never said otherwise. His contention is that detachments, marching through the Transvaal and Natal, in numerous instances were guilty of gross disorders, and that in Zululand there were many "scares." Lord Chelmsford and General Newdigate only deal with a limited time and area, while Dr. Russell's statements had reference, as regards outrages on the inhabitants and "scares" on the field, both to an area and a space of time of far greater dimensions. It is idle to pretend that there was not, after the demoralising disaster at Isandula, a great deal of nervousness and numerous "scares." It is a matter of notoriety that such nervousness and "scares" did prevail, and the explanation is simple. The force was largely composed of mere boys, and esprit de corps was weakened by swamping regiments with volunteers who did not know, and were not known by, their officers. It was to point out the evils of the system that Dr. Russell took up the pen, and in his zeal for the Army, with which he has been so long and intimately associated, braved so much obloquy and misrepresentation.

Monday being a Naval night in Parliament, it is needless to say that Captain Bedford Pim was in his place, and almost equally unnecessary to add that he was not pleased, but opened the debate with a sweeping condemnation of most things connected with the Admiralty and the Navy. That the officials at the Admiralty are incompetent, and that the condition of the Navy is a disgrace to the country, is the very gloomy view held by Captain Pim. Still there was much brought forward by the Member for Gravesend which was worthy of attention, and in pointing out the lack of vessels suitable for blockade purposes and for the convoy of merchant ships, he hit on a blot which requires to be looked into attentively, and upon which we may anticipate action being taken when the Royal Commission on Colonial Defence and Protection of Commerce has made its report. The number of foreigners in the Mercantile Marine, and consequent limit to that source of recruiting for the Naval Reserve, was also called attention to, as was the superiority of the French Navy over our own in the number of sea-going ironclads. Admiral Sir John Hay followed Captain Pim, and bore out much that he had said on the two last-mentioned points, although it was not to be expected that he, or any one else, should be so very downhearted as the Member for Gravesend After further criticism from other Members, and an allusion by Mr. Bentinck to the indifference shown throughout the country to the condition of the Navy, although our very existence as a nation depended upon it, the First Lord of the Admiralty made his statement on the Navy Estimates, Captain Pim having withdrawn his sweeping motion of condemnation, and it is pleasing to find that Mr. Smith was enabled to clear away some of those clouds under which the Navy had been cast, and to lighten the dark suspicions as to the "disgraceful state" of the Naval Service, which had been awakened by the remarks of former speakers. As we have already summarised the Estimates, it will be unnecessary for us to follow the First Lord throughout his statement; but it is to be remarked that he opened his statement rather as one who was defending the policy of the Admiralty, than as one who was confident that the programme was beyond the charge of incompleteness, and that the provision made was sufficient for the wants of the Naval Service of Great Britain. It appears that there has been an increase in the reserve of seamen pensioners, and there are now over 12,000 available, and there is also a similar number of men in the first-class Naval Reserve. But the attempt to form a seamen's pensioner reserve does not succeed, and even now there are but some 1,600 enrolled. The only class of officers specially alluded to was the Executive, the position of Lieutenants being brought under notice by Sir John Hay. But from the remarks of the First Lord of the Admiralty, these officers may be assured that there is nothing now under consideration on their behalf, any earlier opportunities of retirement being far too costly to offer, and the recent increase of the list to a total of 1,000, including those for navigating duty, is all that Lieutenants need expect for some time. A hint was given of a readiness to adopt any other system of nominating Naval Cadets, should such a change be for the good of the Service; but at present the Admiralty has been content to reduce the number of entries by about twenty per annum,—fifty-five, and not seventy-three, being now passed into the Britannia, in the hope that this number will be found sufficient to feed the Lieutenants' List, and prevent the creation of blocks. The gunnery question had an unusually prominent place given to it by the First Lord of the Admiralty, and as we have previously announced, the Admiralty desires the reintroduction of breech-loaders of a new type. The Colossus will be armed with 43-ton breech-loaders, and a new vessel of the Colossus type will mount these guns en barbette, instead of in turrets. A lighter breech-loading gun, of 6-inch calibre, is also to be introduced with the view to its supplanting the present 64-pounder, which is so generally used afloat at the present moment. The demand for cruisers was also dealt with by Mr. Smith, and it is satisfactory to learn that the matter has received so much attention on the part of the Admiralty. As Sir Cooper Key remarked at the Royal United Service Institution on Saturday last, the Admiralty has not been idle, and there is now at the yards the necessary equipment for forty armed cruisers, steamers which would be taken from the Mercantile Marine and converted in time of war. The First Lord of the Admiralty, while stating that he greatly relies upon our swift merchant ships in time of war, added that arrangements had been made for laying down three fast unarmoured cruisers, to have a speed of 16 knots, and an ordinary cruising speed of 14 knots, with a coal-carrying capacity sufficient to enable them to steam 4,000 miles. Thus, at last, are we moving in a right direction; and even the Member for Gravesend will admit that some effort is being made to provide a class of vessel which shall be able to keep the sea, heavily armed, and fairly protected so far as their engines and boilers are concerned. Another new departure is the open declaration that the big ship and the biggest possible gun is at last being recognised as by no means the best system, and the Admiralty now considers that two 43-ton guns are preferable to one 80-ton gun, and that two ships with the lighter gun are better than one ship only carrying half the number of 80-ton guns. Thus are we coming towards what has been termed the "floating gun-carriage" type of ship, such as has been adopted by China; and it would almost seem that the greatest maritime nation in the world is taking a lesson from abroad, though it is to the credit of the country that the most effective type of gunboat afloat was designed by an English firm, and thus private enterprise has been able to show the way to the Naval Constructor's Department. These guns, with the torpedo and machine guns to protect ships from the advance of torpedo boats, may be accepted as the new armament of our ships-of-war. In conclusion, we must give our support to the view taken, almost unanimously, by the critics of Mr. Smith's statement, and add our regret that, although there is a fair show of work to be done, it is so scattered over a large number of ships of different types, the ships actually to be completed within reasonable time are very few.

On July 29, 1879, Sir Garnet Wolseley sent home a report of the operations of the 1st Division of the South African Field Force, under Major-General Crealock, which has just seen the light (or darkness) in a Blue-book, "Further correspondence respecting the affairs of South Africa" (C 2,482). It is interesting reading, if the information be a little stale. On April 12 Lord Chelmsford, then at Durban, gave General Crealock a long memorandum, in which it is set forth that "the first objective point of this division will be the Emangwene military kraal," on the north side of the Umlatoosi, which was to be burnt, and the whole district cleared out. Next, the Undini military kraal on the south side of the river, which was to be similarly dealt with. Lord Chelmsford expected that Major-General Crealock would have to fight on his way to these places, but there was "a perfectly open country" and "no physical difficulties in the way of the above-mentioned operations." Major-General Crealock was directed to establish a permanent entrenched post between the Tugela and Umlatoosi, "to be stored with two months' provisions for the whole division," and the force advancing from it to the kraals "should take with it one month's supplies." Another post of a less permanent character was to be established between that post and an "advanced entrenched post." When the advance took place, the rear-guard in the "permanent entrenched post" was to "move forward and occupy the permanent post," taking with it one month's supplies. When Emangwene and Undini were burnt, "the Major-General will have to decide for himself as to what further operations are possible, or desirable." Lord Chelmsford reserved for his own Division, as an objective point, Ulundi itself; but he hopes "the 1st Division will be able to grapple successfully with the difficulties of the Umlatoosi between Undini and St. Pauls," and to establish eventually an entrenched post and depôt, thus assisting in the general advance against the King's own kraal. Although Lord Chelmsford did not anticipate that Major-General Crealock could establish this depôt until a portion of the force under his own orders had reached the neighbourhood of Entonjaneni, he pressed on Major-General Crealock the necessity of rapid action. "It is of the highest importance that the advance upon the Emangwene and Undini kraals should be made as soon as possible." "That speedy advance" was "mainly dependent upon supply and transport being forthcoming in sufficient quantities," and Major-General Crealock was directed to proceed to the River Tugela, without delay. It is obvious that Lord Chelmsford, in giving these orders, believed that the Zulus would offer a protracted resistance after their defeat in the probable actions in front of Emangwene, Undini, and Ulundi, and that he confidently relied on Major-General Crealock being able to destroy the two military kraals on the south-coast district before he himself had reached Ulundi, and be in a position to assist in the general advance as soon as the 2nd Division had reached Entonjanani. In that he was disappointed. General Crealock states that Lord Chelmsford, in giving him the command of the Division, informed him that he was to consider it an independent command; therefore, he "was entirely untrammelled." Major-General Crealock assumed command of the Division on April 18, on the Tugela. His force consisted of the Naval Brigade, with three 9-pounders, four Gatlings, and two rocket-tubes; 3rd Buffs, the 57th Regiment, 3rd Battalion 60th Rifles, 88th Regiment, the 91st Regiment, 99th Regiment, Ellaby's Battery, and Lloyd's detachment Royal Artillery (eight 7-pounders in all), Blood's Royal Engineers, 90 mounted infantry, and about 2,500 irregulars, white and black, mounted and dismounted. When he arrived at the river, he found the 1st Brigade and part of the Naval Brigade at and near the two forts on the banks of the Tugela, and the 2nd Brigade, consisting of the 57th Regiment, 60th Rifles, 91st Regiment, two guns, the Naval Brigade, Barrow's Horse, and natives, entrenched at Gingilhovo, twenty miles away in Zululand. It was not till two months later that Major-General Crealock removed from the Tugela, and moved towards the enemy, who did not in any case dispute his advance. The reasons assigned by Major-General Crealock for this delay in the report are,—(a) the want of transport for stores and ammunition; (b) want of horses, saddlery, and clothing for cavalry; (c) the inability of the base of operations (Major-General Clifford) to comply with the repeated and urgent demands made by the Major-General for oxen-leaders and drivers, mules and horses, to complete the Division for service in the field. It does not need much intelligence to see that the Division was literally grounding on its beef-bones whilst it was trying to feed itself for the future. But these were Lord Chelmsford's orders. Major-General Crealock's responsibility ceases if he can show that he moved as soon as it was possible to do so, that the supplies he demanded were not extravagant, and that they did not exceed the regulation for an army of the strength under his command in the field. The next point he has to establish is that he moved with all possible speed to his objective. In his report, Major-General Crealock gives a detailed account of his marches, of which it is enough to say that there were many difficulties which could not be successfully met, and that the Division finally concentrated on the sea-coast at Port Durnford on June 28,—five days after the arrival of Sir Garnet Wolseley at Cape Town, and four days before the appearance of that officer off Port Durnford, where he made an unsuccessful attempt to land from the Shah. Sir Garnet Wolseley steamed back to Durban on the evening of July 3, and set out overland for Port Durnford. On that same night, Major-General Crealock sent out Barrow's mounted men (250), and John Dunn's native scouts, to Emangwene kraal. They burnt it and some other wigwams, and "captured, by a rapid advance, 600 head of cattle." These were in charge of 200 "armed Zulus" (a man to every three head), "who fled into the bush." It may be observed that as all Zulus at that time carried assegais, it is probable the runaways were the peasants of the district, who had bolted from their burning kraals. Next morning seven chiefs, with followers, families, and cattle, surrendered. On July 5, "the Division formed in line to receive the submission" of eight chiefs, "with some 300 fighting men;" and in the afternoon, a force under Major Barrow marched to the abandoned kraal of Undini, which they "entirely burnt." Thence they returned to the laager, "after a fatiguing march, during which eight horses, entirely exhausted, had to be abandoned on the road." That was the last military service of the 1st Division. On July 7, Sir Garnet Wolseley made his appearance in camp, and assumed command, and Major-General Crealock resigned it. The gallant officer is aware that his report is a meagre record of four months' work of a fine force of British infantry, a Naval Brigade, provided with cavalry and artillery, but he says he obeyed his orders. Major-General Crealock observes, "The whole of these instructions, without exception, have been carried out by the Major-General commanding the 1st Division," and takes credit for effecting the submission of the whole of the chiefs from the Tugela to St. Lucia Bay. "I wish it to be clearly understood that circumstances over which I had no control, and which I could not overcome by any act of mine, prevented our earlier advance from the Tugela." The blame of the delay would thus appear to be shifted from the General to the base, were it not that the Major-General says, "I do not wish his Excellency to suppose that it was possible for the base to complete the 1st Division sooner than they did, for the animals were not in the country." So no one was to blame, if all the conditions laid down by Lord Chelmsford were indispensable, except the officer, if there was one, who gave instructions and who designed a plan of operations which could not be carried out. The Major-General does not appear to have considered himself free to depart from the injunctions he had received to burn these two military kraals, when he found there was no one to defend them, and no enemy to engage his troops; but he was certainly left a large discretion, as soon as that great object was effected. The establishment of these pregnant dépôts cost a mint of money and many days; and the lives of the only men who died were lost in the work of escorting mealies, and buscuit, and groceries to and fro, or in the unwholesome laagers, which were held by full garrisons against a hypothetical enemy. Major-General Crealock has been subjected to much unfair criticism, and has fairly met much of it in his report. He seems to have been the victim of circumstances over which he had no control, and must regret, as much as any of the officers and men of his force, that it was not his good-fortune to have seen some active service in the field against the enemy.

An official notification has been received by the Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth that the Royal yacht is to be ready to embark her Majesty for the passage to Cherbourg on the 24th inst.

The competitive practice between the Nordenfeldt and Hotchkiss guns, by firing at a moving object, is to be carried out on board the Hecla without delay, and orders have been received at Portsmouth for her to proceed to sea for the purpose of making these trials.

We are glad to hear that the Admiralty has at last accepted the Royal Navy List for issue to ships' libraries, and has authorised the editor to use the term "supported by the Admiralty."

The services of Staff Commander Dyer, late in command of the Industry, from which ship he was invalided home after trying service on the West Coast of Africa, have been recognised, this week's Gazette containing the announcement of his promotion. He will relieve Staff Captain Raymond as Queen's Harbourmaster at Malta.

The Forester, on being relieved on the West Coast of Africa by the Flirt, will leave that station for the North America command. The Forester has been two years in commission, and her services at the Cape, under her present commanding officer, Lieutenant Sidney Smith, were most highly spoken of.

Two additions have been made to the Fleet this week by the launch of the Ajax, turret-ship, sister to the Agamemnon, and the Niger, and we hope the latter may be found to be a really improved Pioneer, which is far from being as well adapted for river service on the West Coast of Africa as could be desired. The Ajax will be sent to Chatham from Pembroke during the ensuing financial year, to be fitted for sea, and the Niger will be completed at Sheerness.

The following sub-lieutenants having completed their examinations have now been confirmed in their rank, namely, Messrs. Frederick H. Eagle, May 21, 1878; Rupert Blomfield, June 20, 1878; Arthur Barry, October 16, 1878; Richard H. Story, October 16, 1878; William G. Stewart, January 13, 1879.

Admiral the Hon. Charles Elliot, C.B., struck his flag at Devonport on Tuesday, and proceeded on leave, but will return to duty to-day. Rear-Admiral Curme's flag was shifted to the Royal Adelaide during the absence of the Commander-in-Chief.

The Pioneer, after her long stay on the West Coast of Africa and expedition of the Niger, has been ordered to Simon's Bay for repairs, and this opportunity of recruiting health will be much appreciated by the officers and crew of the ship.

A temperate but forcible letter which appears in another column, respecting the deprivation of distinctive lace now suffered by senior assistant-paymasters, we commend to the notice of the Admiralty, as an addition to the correspondence on this subject which has already reached the Board officially.

From the statement of the First Lord of the Admiralty on Thursday night, it is, unfortunately, too clear that the Coastguard has no prospect of improvement in pay or pensions. As the question has been under "careful consideration," it might be supposed that there should be no cause for anticipating a different conclusion. But there is no denying that the mode of counting time for pension is better afloat than in the Coastguard; and this might, in common fairness to the shore force, be remedied.

The training-brigs attached to the different training-ships are being prepared for sea, and the squadron will shortly be ready for summer cruising.

Two gold medals in one week do not often fall to the lot of an officer, but it has happened so to Captain the Hon. Edmund Fremantle, C.B., C.M.G. On Friday the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society awarded this officer the gold medal of the society for his gallantry in saving the life of a seaman, which act has already been reported in these columns; and on Saturday he was announced as the winner of the Royal United Service Institution gold medal, for the best essay on "Naval Tactics on the Open Sea with the Existing Types of Vessels and Weapons." The honours thus awarded to Captain Fremantle are shared, in a lesser degree, by others, the silver medal of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society being given to Sub-Lieutenant Moore, of the Invincible, and Cunningham, the blacksmith's mate, who also jumped overboard to save their shipmate. And as regards the Royal United Service Institution essay, among the other competitors the following received honourable mention,—namely, Lieutenant Graham Bower, in command of the Conflict; Lieutenant Charles Campbell, late flag lieutenant to Admiral Lord John Hay; Captain Samuel Long, now on half-pay; and Lieutenant Sydney Eardley Wilmot, of the Vernon.

A commission, formed to report upon the best means of developing the Russian coalfields, and substituting native fuel for the Cardiff and Newcastle coal at present used by the Fleet, will commence its sittings next week. Nearly all the public departments at St. Petersburg have appointed representatives to the commission, and the Russian Admiralty has designated two, Capt. Semetchkir, aide-de-camp to the Grand Duke Constantine, and Lieut. Nozikoff, of the Baltic Fleet.

The Russian Government has decided to break up the two monitors, Sistova and Nicopol, captured on the Danube from the Turks in 1877. It has also decided to sell the corvettes Pamiat, Mercury, and Liveetsa; the steamers Bratets, Akkerman, Boltoon, Brestovatz, Ablanoff, Bogot, Dotchka, Matooshka, and Meteor; the schooner Salgeer; the tenders Boug and Berezan, and the steam-barges Zimnitsa and Petroshani. All these vessels belong to the Black-Sea Fleet, and most of the steamers were employed on the river Danube during the latter part of the Turkish war.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., arrived at Malta on Wednesday, to relieve Sir Geoffrey Hornby, who proceeded to Marseilles yesterday in the Helicon, en route for England.

Commander Edward Kennett, who has been Governor of the Naval Knights of Windsor since August, 1873, died on Thursday morning at his residence.

Rear-Admiral H. D. Hickley, Captain H. J. Carr, and the Rev. John B. Harbord, M.A., Inspector of Naval Schools, are engaged at Devonport in the revision of the training regulations for boys.

A central Asian correspondent writes to the Cronstadt Vestnik from Kazalinsk, that the Aral fleet has been completely reorganised, and the naval station enlarged and placed under a fresh administration. For many years the flotilla has been under a cloud, as the steamers were not considered of much service; but since the solution of the navigating of the Oxus, it has sprung into fresh importance, and fresh officials have been brought from Russia to adapt it for the uses to which it is likely to be applied, in the event of an expedition operating from Turkestan against Merv.

The Deputy-Adjutant-General of the Royal Marines was rather severely handled by Mr. Anderson in the House of Commons on Monday, and, we think, unfairly so. Doubtless, Mr. Anderson was prompted to speak as he did by some officer or officers of the Royal Marines; but it is beyond a doubt that Major-General Adair has the confidence of the majority, and is looked upon as one who has the best interests of the Service at heart, and will act, as a member of the Committee now sitting, for the general welfare of the corps. We cannot, however, be surprised that there should be soreness at the manner in which selections for commandants have been made, and our views on this question have been fully expressed in these columns. Indeed, we cannot imagine anything more likely to cause ill-feeling than to allow an officer to get within one step of the highest rank, and then to leave him as second commandant and to put a junior over his head. It stands to reason that at times the supreme command must devolve upon the second in command, and at one of the divisions a rejected officer has for some time been doing duty as commandant, and has shown himself in every way fitted for the post, although he was passed over to make way for a junior. If any colonel of Marines should have attained that rank, and yet be thought unfit for the command of a division, the best and only sensible plan would be to retire him with an addition in the way of a bonus, as some salve for damaged prospects and the sudden termination of his career in the Service.

Rear-Admiral Hood, with the ships of the Channel Squadron under his command, arrived at Lisbon on Monday, and would remain there until the 20th, when the squadron will leave for Gibraltar, arriving about the 27th.

Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, C.B., will shortly be again enabled to hoist his flag in a ship worthy of "his Excellency" the Commander-in-Chief in the East Indies. The Euryalus has been repaired at Malta, and will return to Bombay as soon as possible, and will probably leave Malta to-morrow. We understand that the officers ordered to inquire into the defects of her propeller have made a report which cannot be accepted as satisfactory by those responsible on board the ship.

Captain C. E. Foot, R.N., will on Tuesday evening read a paper before the Society of Arts on "Transport and Trading Centres for Eastern Equatorial Africa," the chair being taken by Sir Douglas Forsyth, K.C.S.I., C.B. Captain Foot has recently been spending a portion of his term of half-pay in an African trip, and is thus posted up in the latest particulars as to the development of trading facilities.

Even now, with two deputy-assistant-adjutants-general added to the permanent establishment, the officials of the Adjutant-General's Staff find their work fully cut out, and it is almost an impossibility for them to discharge properly the whole of the duties devolving upon their Department, the proper administration of the Auxiliary Forces entailing responsibilities upon a body of officers who had quite enough to do before. In view of this state of things, a further increase of the Staff is not unlikely to take place.

Lord Ranelagh presided over a fully-attended meeting of the Metropolitan commanding officers of Volunteer Corps, at the offices of the National Rifle Association, Pall Mall, yesterday afternoon, when the decision arrived at last Tuesday respecting the postponement of the field-day having been fully discussed, it was decided:—"That, having regard to the expression of opinion of the Secretary of State for War, and the consequent orders issued from the Horse Guards, to the effect that the field-day had been abandoned, any initiative touching the suspension of Par. 419 of the Volunteer Regulations should not be taken by the Metropolitan commanding officers." A deputation, consisting of the Mayor and Aldermen of Brighton, introduced by Lieutenant-General Shute, M.P., and Mr. Ashbury, M.P., had an interview previously with the Secretary of State for War in the House of Commons, when Colonel Stanley intimated that it was impossible to hold the review.

A very beautiful stained-glass window, in three compartments, the subject of each being taken from the book of the prophet Jeremiah, "The potter, and the vessels made to honour," &c., has just been completed in the Cathedral of Cork. Underneath is the family arms, on a richly decorated shield; and connected therewith a tablet of polished black marble, bearing the following inscription:—"In memory of Josiah Aylmer Coghill, Lieutenant 24th Regiment, who, on January 22, 1879, with Lieutenant Melville, bore the colours of the 24th from the field of Isandlwana, South Africa; and having crossed in safety the Buffalo River, returned to aid his comrade, and with him died. Presented by friends." Alongside the "Coghill" window, in the south transept, another window will shortly be placed, in memory of Brigadier-General Augustus Travers, C.B., Madras Staff Corps, presented by his brother officers. And in the nave of the same cathedral the family of General Travers are about to add a memorial window to the previous numerous records of the bravery of that remarkable military family. The Cork Cathedral seems to have centred the attraction of several of the friends and families of many of the departed brave officers furnished to the British Army from Ireland, as well as the mourned-for local worth of the city and large diocese. The cathedral is not surpassed in the United Kingdom; no less than sixty-six memorial windows have been placed during the past five years; and, to use the words of the late Bishop of Cork, these memorials are surrounded with beauty and clothed with sanctity. (Query, would not this be a befitting place to deposit the colours saved by Lieutenants Coghill and Melville?)

We learn from India that Colonel R. Preston, C.B., Military Secretary to Sir Frederick M. Haines, has, for the present, given up his intention of proceeding home, and that the appointment of Colonel H. C. Wilkinson, Inspector of Yeomanry at Aldershot, as his successor, will, therefore, have to be countermanded.

It may be remembered that we contradicted, some months ago, a report that Colonel Sir C. K. Pearson, K.C.M.G., C.B., half-pay, late 3rd Buffs, was to have the command of the troops at Shorncliffe on the retirement of Major-General the Hon. R. Monck. We were told at the time that the appointment would be made in due course, but the acceptance of the command by Colonel W. Earle, C.S.I., Grenadier Guards, shows that our information was correct.

The appointments we were enabled to announce at the end of last year as likely to be made, viz., those of Major-General E. Newdigate, C.B., to the command of the Dover District, and Major-General T. H. Pakenham, from the Aldershot Staff, to Devonport, will take effect from the 1st prox., when Lieutenant-Generals Lord Alexander Russell, C.B., and the Hon. L. Smyth, C.B., retire.

The Russian Government has given orders for increased machinery for the dockyard at Nicolaieff. For some time past, the authorities have meditated an extension of the dockyard. The land has already been acquired, and a sum of 500,000 roubles has been assigned by the Minister of Marine for the preliminary part of the undertaking.

Reviews.

Herat. By Colonel G. B. Malleson, C.S.I. London: W. H. Allen and Co.

Colonel Malleson's volume, Herat, the Granary and Garden of Central Asia, appears just at the right moment. People who are supposed to know a great deal about the subject, and others who know nothing, have been advancing all sorts of theories as to the future of Herat. A close study of the "argument" with which Colonel Malleson introduces his subject will amply repay the reader who really wishes to be well informed. In that very masterly document, the author considers it necessary to direct attention to the difficulties that were encountered and surmounted by the British army before the policy of our Government had triumphed, and the greater part of Afghanistan had passed into our possession. Then arises the still more important questions as to whether the untutored Afghans were capable of offering a successful defence of positions that were impregnable, if thoroughly well defended; and how far these chances of accomplishing this would be increased, were they tutored by Russian officers. To the first question, the author gives a direct negative; to the second, he agrees that when the headlong dash and courage of the Afghans were supplemented by technical and scientific knowledge, it merely required time to cement the already growing alliance between Russia and Afghanistan, in order to render the passes leading to Cabul absolutely impregnable. And what would have been the result? The impossibility of any effort to be made by England to recover by force of arms her lost influence in Afghanistan proving successful. In Colonel Malleson's opinion, every preparation for "a spring" had been made by Russia in 1877, and it would have been attempted, were it not for the conclusion of the Treaty of Berlin. That move rendered open co-operation impossible, while secret manœuvres were stamped out by the British invasion of Afghanistan. With all this, the Afghan question is not yet settled as it ultimately must be, if we are to retain India; and the author, therefore, takes a more comprehensive view of the subject. In doing so, he draws an interesting picture of the peace and plenty that reigned in Herat, the garden of Central Asia, before the coming of the Afghan, and the desolating consequence of his rule, as recorded in the works of the illustrious Hungarian, Arminius Vambery. But notwithstanding this infamous rule, Herat retains the vital power. If she be relieved from its burden, commerce will flow back, her markets will recover their former position, and prosperity will be restored. The Afghan rule in Herat may be regarded as at its termination, and the question arises,—Which of the three great Powers, Persia, Russia, or England, is to make the push that will finally break the Afghan yoke? On this question, Colonel Malleson's observations will be read with an interest worthy of its importance. Persia, standing alone, may be put out of the question. The prize must be gained by either Russia or England. The former is already on the move, the object being the occupation of Merv by an army which will co-operate with one lead from the vicinity of the Caspian. If this movement prove successful, the occupation of Herat becomes an immediate question. If Russia gains it, she will possess the outlying bulwark from which all the conquerors of the North, with one exception, have issued to over-run India. She will, moreover, become a standing menace to Hindustan, and what is more important still, she will imperil our rule in India. The question, then, to be decided by the people of England is clearly defined. The author mentions several facts relative thereto, particularly pointing out that Herat would, in our hands, be more than an impregnable bulwark to our Indian possessions. Such is a slight sketch of the "argument" put forward by Colonel Malleson, in support of his theory on the Afghan question. He writes with considerable earnestness, but no doubt in perfect good-faith, and with the single aim of showing the necessity of at once securing the magnificent inheritance won for us by our ancestors. Feeling the great importance of this question, and having had opportunities not open to many of forming opinions in reference to it, it is not to be wondered at that he should so eloquently advocate immediate action on the part of England, the moment that the advance of Russia upon Merv is even remotely threatened. Colonel Malleson has written not only an interesting book, but one which is practically useful, as containing a history of the principality of which Herat is the capital, and a record of the routes leading from it to Candahar, Mashad, Merv, Charjui, Cabul, and to important centres in Afghan Turkestan. Whether its perusal will have the desirable effect of drawing closer and more immediate attention than has hitherto been vouchsafed to this most momentous subject, remains to be seen. The author has, at all events, written what may do right good service, but which cannot possibly do any evil.

The Secretary of the United States Navy has placed the Constellation, at Brooklyn navy yard, ready to carry food to Ireland. This ship has capacity for 2,300 barrels, and cargo to fill it is solicited. An anonymous donor offers in the New York Herald to furnish a quarter of the cargo, and that paper offers to furnish another quarter. Flour, oatmeal, and potatoes are in particular solicited.

THE ARMY IN SOUTH AFRICA.

On Tuesday was published as a Parliamentary paper a copy of the following report made by Major-General Newdigate, commanding the 2nd Division of the South African Field Force, to the Adjutant-General of the Forces, on the discipline and conduct of the troops composing that division during the campaign in Zululand:—

"18 Albert Mansions, S.W., Feb. 13.

"Sir,—As it appears from Dr. Russell's letter of the 11th inst. that the 'scares and stampedes, the floggings, &c.,' took place before Sir Garnet Wolseley had taken over the command, I cannot, in justice to the troops which formed my division, remain silent. They are for the most part still in South Africa, and cannot stand up for themselves. The division was composed of part of the King's Dragoon Guards, the 17th Lancers, N 5 and N 6 Batteries Royal Artillery, the 2nd Company of Royal Engineers, the 2-21st, 1-24th, 58th, and 94th Regiments. All the latter were composed of young soldiers. Their discipline in camp, on the march, and in action, as well as the cheerful and soldier-like manner in which they went through much hard work, reflect the highest credit upon them. There were very few instances of 'flogging.' There were no 'public-houses' to 'close' in Zululand, so the 'scares which made night hideous again and again,' 'the wild alarms,' and 'outbursts of musketry and cannonading at nothing,' are the only points to which I need refer. I don't know whether any army in the field has ever yet been quite free from night alarms, but during the two months my division was in Zululand, on one occasion only was there any firing from the laager at night. Between 9 and 10 p.m. on the 6th of June the native sentries dove-tailed in between our own picket sentries pointed out some Zulus creeping towards them. The sentries opened fire, and the officer commanding the picket fired two or three volleys. The assembly was sounded, tents struck, the laager manned, and the pickets drawn in. Firing commenced, and was quickly taken up on all sides. One shot was fired by an artillery battery. The serjeant-major swore positively that he saw a body of Zulus advancing; as, however, I heard no bullets whizzing overhead, I at once stopped the firing, and very shortly after again sent out the pickets. It was afterwards said by Zulus belonging to Sirayo's tribal force of 1,500 men that they actually intended to make an attack, but, in consequence of the hot fire by which they were met, gave it up, and never again attempted a night attack. On June 19 two shots were fired by a picket sentry on some few Zulus who were lurking about. The troops fell into their places quietly. The pickets were not withdrawn, and as no attack was made, the men were dismissed. On July 1, at the White Umvoloosi River, one of the picket sentries heard tramping in his front in the long grass. He challenged twice, but receiving no answer, and being unable to see what was before him, he fired one shot into the air to give the alarm. It turned out to be the officer of the N. N. C. returning with his escort (mounted) from visiting the native outposts. He had omitted to warn the field officers and pickets when he went out. On this occasion everything was perfectly regular except in one small portion of the laager. The battalion of natives who, in case of alarm, were ordered to form up inside, and not leave the entrenchment, carried back with them in their haste a portion of one of the regiments, and also scrambled over and through the waggons where Lord Chelmsford and his head-quarters had arranged their bivouack. Col. Lowe also, in the confusion, received an injury on his head. I regret that I must add that a picket of that regiment also retired without order, the only instance with the 2nd Division during the campaign. All the others remained perfectly steady at their posts, and the regiments fell in quietly in their places until dismissed. I blame myself entirely for the confusion which I have described. The native battalion was not bivouacking on the spot I had intended, immediately in front of their place in the laager, and consequently ran over and through the regiment and head-quarters in their hurry to get to it. In conclusion, with regard to the statement that 'all the generals of Lord Chelmsford's army set off for England as fast as they could,' I beg to state that I did not leave Zululand until after my division was broken up on July 28; that I offered my services to Sir Garnet Wolseley for employment in any capacity he might think fit; that three of my regiments were still garrisoning the different forts in that country or escorting convoys back to Emtongani, and that I did not leave South Africa until after Cetewayo had been captured.—I have &c., EDWARD NEWDIGATE, Major-General, the Adjutant-General to the Forces."

Upon the foregoing report Lord Chelmsford writes as follows to the Adjutant-General to the Forces:—

"50 Stanhope Gardens, S.W., Feb. 16.

"In reply to your letter (105—General No.—650), dated Horse Guards, Feb. 14, giving cover to one from Major-Gen. Newdigate, I have the honour to make the following remarks:—I am able to endorse all that Major-Gen. Newdigate has said regarding the behaviour and conduct of the troops that were under his command during the Zulu campaign. I had every reason to be satisfied with the cheerful and willing spirit shown by the non-commissioned rank and file of the whole force that marched with me from Blood River to Ulundi, and I consider that the general conduct of the troops, so far as regards subordination and discipline on the line of march, was exemplary. As regards the 'scares and stampedes' alluded to by Dr. Russell in his letter, Major-Gen. Newdigate has fairly detailed the several instances which occurred. With very young soldiers and equally young non-commissioned officers, it cannot be expected that at night such scares will not occur. History tells us how, during the Peninsular War, the Light Division one night experienced a panic which no one could account for, and which proved conclusively that even the highest-trained and best-disciplined troops are not exempted from the weakness to which, no doubt, younger soldiers are more liable. The steadiness of the young soldiers, however, at the battles of Kambula, Gingihlovo, and Ulundi show that, individually, the young soldiers of the present day are not in any way deficient in courage and steadiness when acting in close formation, under the immediate supervision of their officers.—I have, &c., CHELMSFORD, Major-General. The Adjutant-General to the Forces, Horse Guards."

THE BEARER COMPANY IN ZULULAND.

SIR,—While thanking you for your kind mention of my name in a paragraph in your issue of the 6th inst., about the Bearer Company's work at Secocœni's town, permit me to correct a false impression which I think your paragraph might create, and which might, if left unnoticed, prove prejudicial to the estimate formed of the value of bearer-company work in general. What the company really did on Nov. 28 last was exactly what your paragraph warns your readers against inferring, from the words used and quoted by Col. Stanley in the House.

The Bearer Company operated with the central portion of the attack, namely, that on the "Fighting Koppe;" this was gradually approached by the troops in skirmishing order, commencing about 4.15 a.m., and carried by them by assault about 10 a.m. During the approach to the "Koppe," the Bearer Company kept close in the rear of the line of skirmishers, and during the assault it followed the assaulting party up the "Koppe," keeping close in its rear, and picked up the men who were wounded directly they fell, who otherwise must have been left where they were, unless carried to the rear by their comrades.

I quote from a letter written to me by Colonel Brackenbury on Nov. 17, when I was training the company (and he, having seen the thing at work in the German Army, should, I fancy, be considered an authority). He says,—"The Bearer Company advances in rear of the troops in the front line." This being his idea of its proper position in action, is it likely that he would have spoken of its performances on Nov. 28 as he did if it did not maintain that position?—I am, &c.,

JAMES HECTOR, M.B.

SIR,—Whilst the above subject is occupying attention, permit me to advert to the boot of the infantry officer. The Dress regulations, I think, require "Wellington" or "ankle" boots. The former are very good and look smart for ordinary parades and duties, and for such I would use them, but they cannot be worn with the garter. For "marching order" I would have a good, serviceable laced boot, without toe-caps or fancy work. The use of "spring-side" boots is very common, but I think them unserviceable and unsoldierlike, and would recommend their distinct prohibition. I take this opportunity of saying that the suggestion of your correspondent "X." seems a good one regarding the great-coat, viz., that it should be carried at the back of the waist-belt. It undoubtedly ought to be carried by the officer himself, and that is a better place than on his arm, or coiled round his breast; the latter mode in warm weather is insupportable.—I am, &c.,

EX-ADJUTANT.

It has been decided to limit the grant of the medal with clasp for "Jowaki" to those troops only which were in the field against the Jowaki Afridis from Nov. 9, 1877, to Jan. 19, 1878, inclusive, and a General Order, issued on the 1st inst., apprises the Army of that fact.

The following general memo. has been issued by Admiral Ryder, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth:—"Instances having occurred of leave on full pay after foreign service having been allowed to officers, who, between return to the United Kingdom and discharge from their ships, had been granted leave for extended period, the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have acquainted me that the following regulations are to adopted:—1. When leave for over four days is granted by order of the Admiralty, or a Commander-in-Chief, between the time of the arrival of a ship in England and of paying off, the amount of such leave is to be deducted from the period of full-pay leave granted. 2. A similar course is to be followed, when a flag lieut., or other officer, whose discharge to half-pay is not dependent on the paying-off of the ship, is granted leave for over four days between the date of arrival in the United Kingdom, and discharge from his appointment. 3. A notice of deduction made, or to be made, is to be inserted in the full-pay leave forms transmitted to their Lordships."

The Directors of the Royal Seamen and Marines' Orphan Schools and Female Orphan Home, Portsmouth, acknowledge with much thankfulness the following contributions:—The serjeants, R.M.A., £2 2s.; by sale of officers' papers, H.M.S. Last week a barge whilst light and riding at anchor in a very heavy gale, was blown from the Jenkin Sands to within a mile and a half south-east of the Swatch buoy. She was observed from Southend, and the lifeboat crew of that station prepared to go to her aid, but they failed to get their boat off; upon which the captain of the Southend Coastguard telegraphed to Leigh to ask if any of the Leigh men would volunteer to save the lives of those on the barge. Mr. A. G. Wilder, Geo. and Fred. Emery, and S. Lungley, with Coastguardmen Fox and Porter, quickly got aboard the smack Three Sisters and arrived just before dark alongside the barge, the boat of which had its stem broken in. F. Brusbridge, from a barge at anchor near, had rowed singlehanded to those in distress just as the Leigh crew arrived, and the latter returned to shore in two hours from starting, with Brusbridge, the captain, and the mate.

5th Lancers. The following is from the Examiner, and expresses, we believe, the opinion of most cavalry officers in India:—"It is stated in the Times, in the usual weekly Indian telegram, that the Commander-in-Chief in India has superseded Brig.-Gen. Massy for the 'extraordinary apathy, in consequence of which the Afghans were enabled to withdraw unmolested on the night of Oct. 8 from their position on the Cabul heights,' and 'for want of prudence and military ability displayed by the cavalry commander on the unfortunate Dec. 11.' The foregoing are extremely serious charges to make against an officer, and if substantiated are sufficient to put an end to his career in the Army. They are made by authority, for the Times' correspondent at Cabul is an officer of high rank serving under Gen. Roberts. It is well-known in India that Gen. Massy is not popular with the Viceroy, who wields all authority in Army matters, to the exclusion of the Commander-in-Chief. Gen. Roberts is a persona gratissima to Lord Lytton; hence the recall of a man who will ever be known in history by the proud title he won in the Crimea, 'Redan Massy,' and to whose prompt action in seizing the Shaturgardan Pass immediately upon the news of Sir Louis Cavagnari's murder becoming known, the success which has crowned the Afghan campaign is mainly due."

8th Hussars. A squadron left Peshawur for Basawal, Afghanistan, on Feb. 1. 9th Lancers. Writing of the cavalry in Afghanistan, the Lahore paper says:—"Of the 9th Lancers we have heard that the horses have been so reduced in strength as to be unable to carry their riders over a small ditch." "W." writes:—"With reference to your note respecting Major Bushman, 9th Lancers, the acts of the authorities are as incomprehensible as the vagaries of the wind. Major and Brevet Col. Russell, C.B., 13th Hussars, has not done any regimental duty for some three years, but he has not been seconded. Whereas Major Bushman, while on his way to rejoin, has been seconded; but you have not remarked that, as he is now on the Seconded List, he is paid by England; so when he rejoins, he will find himself on English pay, as having been seconded, and Major Abadie promoted, the latter drawing the major's pay and allowances of the 9th Lancers, the Indian Budget not allowing major's pay for two majors when the establishment is one major only." 2nd Lieut. Hon. R. H. Westenra, lately promoted from the 4th Dragoon Guards, left England on Thursday in H.M.S. Jumna, in charge of a draft of 82 men.

5th Fusiliers. Col. Bigge, commanding the 2nd Batn., writes to an Indian contemporary:—"Since landing on the 4th, a paragraph in your military correspondent's letter of the last mail has caused much pain to myself, and the whole battalion I have the honour to command. The paragraph in question drew a very invidious comparison between the way in which the 30th and 5th Fusiliers embarked for foreign service. It stated that the 5th Fusiliers did not embark in a creditable manner. The facts of the case are as follows:—This regiment left Chatham on the morning of Jan. 1. Although it was New Year's morning, and Chatham is a perfect sink of iniquity, I may add, the most demoralising station in Great Britain, only one man was absent when the roll was called, and only one man was in the slightest degree the worse for liquor. This is not merely my own assertion, which pardonably might be interested, but it is as well known to Gen. Bulwer and staff, who were personally superintending the departure of the regiment, which was most orderly and creditable to all concerned. Both Gen. Bulwer and Gen. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, who personally superintended the embarkation at Portsmouth, were highly pleased with the appearance and order of the men. What your military correspondent meant to allude to was the defective arrangement to embark the regiment at the railway platform, Chatham. This young regiment had to parade in the dark, to march through that sink of grog-shops, and when we got to the station found that the railway authorities had neither the train ready, nor the platform cleared. Consequently, five companies at least had to stand under arms in a street, surrounded by a pack of prostitutes, &c., of the lowest description, and I trust you will pardon my saying that it speaks well for the discipline of my regiment that perfect order was maintained, and that only one man (and he was confined on parade) was the worse for liquor. Now, these are the plain facts of the case, and I leave you to judge my astonishment to find that in place of praise, we are blamed. The 30th Regt. au contraire leaving a healthy respectable station on Dover heights naturally were not exposed to any temptation whatever. I know nothing about the way they embarked, but I can safely assert that it was not more creditable than ours. You will see the account of defective railway arrangements in Army and Navy Gazette of either Jan. 3 or 10. I need hardly say how much our amour propre has been wounded by these assertions, and I trust that in fairness, you will give an authoritative contradiction in the strongest possible terms. The 5th Fusiliers have many friends in this country, who will doubtless be as much grieved as ourselves to read such an announcement in your paper.' Capt. Dyke remains with the 1st Batn., on promotion, Capt. Trafford being transferred to the 2nd Batn. Lieut. Thornhill, 1st Batn., has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee. 2nd Lieut. 71st Highland Light Infantry. The head-quarters and service companies left Gibraltar on the 8th inst. in H.M.S. Himalaya, en route to Edinburgh.

72nd Highlanders. On Dec. 13, after Gen. Baker had captured the Takht-i-Shah peak, a number of doolies containing officers and men wounded on the 11th and 12th on the Sherdurwaza heights were sent down the hill to Sherpur. Serjt. Cox, with 20 men of the 72nd, was in charge of the doolies, and among the wounded were Major Cook, V.C., 5th Goorkhas; Lieut. Fergusson, 72nd Highlanders; and Lieut. Fasken, 3rd Sikhs. Upon arriving at the foot of the hill, says the Pioneer, the road leading under the southern wall of the Bala Hissar was followed, and it was soon seen that parties of armed men were lining the parapets. Serjt. Cox, fearing to draw fire by striking across the fields towards Beni Shahr, where Gen. Baker was shelling some villages, put on a bold face, and marched on steadily. This had the best effect, as not a shot was fired from the walls. Ten Highlanders were at the head of the doolies, and ten in rear. Just as the little party got near the Bala Hissar gate, a large body of Afghans sprung out from among the willows lining either side of the road, and drawing their knives, came straight upon the advance guard. The road from Beni Shahr joins the road to Sherpur just at this point, and seeing that it would be impossible to cut through the enemy, or to retreat the way he had come (as in the latter case the men on the walls would probably open fire), Serjt. Cox pushed on, ordering his men to reserve their fire. His object was to get the doolies fairly on the Beni Shahr road on his right, and then to fall back until help should come from that quarter. The movement succeeded admirably. Waiting until he was within twenty yards of the Afghans, he ordered the ten men with him to fire a volley. This was too much for the enemy, who broke and took cover in the trees. The doolie-bearers thought all was over, and those carrying Major Cook dropped their doolie in the middle of the road. They were about to run when Serjt. Cox threatened to shoot them down unless they did their duty. They soon recovered courage, and while rapid volleys from the advance-guard kept the Afghans in check, all the doolies were got safely upon the Beni Shahr road, and finally reached Gen. Baker's force in safety. Serjt. Cox managed the whole business splendidly, and under such leadership the men were cool and collected, skirmishing and retiring without being touched by the scattered fire directed at them. After waiting an hour, the escort was strengthened by some cavalry, and the little convoy of wounded reached cantonments in safety. The position in which Serjt. Cox was placed was a most dangerous one, as the least hesitation or want of decision would have been fatal; the Afghans were, indeed, so sure of success, that they did not fire at first, but trusted to cutting up the guard at close quarters with their knives. The fate of the wounded in the doolies would have been too horrible to think upon. The three officers, whose lives were saved by Serjt. Cox's steadiness, reported the incident to Col. Money, who had sent the doolies down the hill; and it is to be hoped a strong recommendation for a substantial reward will be made by the Lieutenant-General commanding. Serjt. Cox was one of the men decorated with the distinguished-service medal on Dec. 8 for gallantry at the Peiwar Kotal, and he is now fairly entitled to the annuity of £20 per annum which is given for repeated acts of bravery by "heroes without commissions."

90th Light Infantry. 2nd Lieut. Blake has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee. Capt. Evetts left England for India on Thursday in H.M.S. Jumna, to join on exchange from the 16th Lancers, and Capt. Bennett, to join on exchange from the 24th Foot. A correspondent—an officer of the 80th—who had the details immediately after Kambula from an eye-witness, writes :—"The recent notification that her Majesty had been graciously pleased to confer the Victoria Cross upon a non-commissioned officer, for an act performed in the Transvaal so far back as March, 1879, must be my apology for asking your permission to draw attention to two brave soldiers who, in the opinion of many, deserved the same decoration. I refer to Lieut. Lysons and Private Fowler, 90th Light Infantry. Last March, in the operations on the Hlobana Mountain—which Gen. Wood knew how to conduct so as to lead up to the glorious victory of Kambula—a spot was reached in the descent where, from a rock or cave above, a murderous fire was directed by the enemy. Poor young Lloyd, interpreter to the General, fell, and the General's own horse was shot. Upon this, the General directed that a certain corps (not Regulars) should attack the place. Some delay occurring, Capt. the Hon. R. Campbell, principal Staff officer, true to the traditions of his regiment, volunteered, and finally obtained permission, to take half the personal escort up to this rock. Outstripping the escort, at length only Capt. Campbell, Lieut. Lysons, and Private Fowler reached the spot. As they did so, a shot from the hidden defenders of the point killed poor Campbell, showering his brains over Lyson's coat. Still the two brave boys—for they were nothing more—nothing daunted, either by what happened before they commenced the ascent or by their ignorance of what force the enemy might have concealed, pressed on, and, entering the place, fairly dislodged the enemy, who had doubtless commenced to retreat on seeing the determination of the two. At all events, one Zulu was shot by, I believe, Fowler, and others escaped. The remains of poor Campbell were then brought down, and he and Lloyd buried under fire. It may be asked why these two soldiers were not recommended, but those who saw Gen. Wood's smile of intense happiness when he perceived the Zulus trooping down upon us at Ulundi may understand that, perhaps, ordinary valour is as nothing to him, and he would probably require more than many others have required before recommending his own staff for V.C.'s. I forward my name for your information, and to show that I can have no personal interest, direct or indirect, in the matter. As things stand now, the 90th L.I. alone have received no V.C. out of the three regiments which had the honour and happiness of serving in the Flying Column."

91st Highlanders. A correspondent writes from the Cape :—"I regret to announce the death of Major W. P. Gurney, 91st Highlanders, at the Mauritius, on Jan. 28. Major Gurney shared the fortunes of the 91st Highlanders through the Zulu campaign. Was present at the battle of Gingihlovo and the relief of Etshowe, and not absent a single day from his regiment during the time they formed part of the coast column, when sickness claimed more victims than the battle-field. At the end of the war, he went to the Mauritius in command of three companies of the 91st. Having served 26 years with the regiment, his loss is deeply felt by every officer and soldier. To the surprise of all, he was not given even a brevet for his services."

Lanyon, C.B., C.M.G., shall retain the Administratorship of the Transvaal, on the departure of Sir Garnet Wolseley, pending the completion of arrangements for the future government of the South-African Colonies generally. Lieut. Claridge sailed for India on Thursday in H.M.S. Jumna, to join a native regiment, as a probationer for the Staff Corps.

Medical Department. We (Lancet) are glad to hear that Government has sanctioned the formation of a medical officers' mess at Aldershot, and we understand it is contemplated to open one without delay in the East Infantry Barracks, South Camp. This is a step in the right direction. Aldershot is not only our largest garrison, and has therefore always a large staff of medical officers, but under present arrangements the young medical probationers are sent there, after they leave Netley, for instruction in ambulance and stretcher-drill at the depôt of the Army Hospital Corps, and for a course of riding drill; it is therefore most essential for their well-being and comfort that a mess should be provided. Netley already possesses a handsome and well-regulated mess, and we have a vivid recollection of the hospitality and sociability of the old medical staff mess at Fort Pitt in days gone by. We hope the example of Aldershot will be followed at all our large garrison towns. The Lahore paper says:—"We hear that Surg.-Gen. J. H. Ker Innes, C.B., who has long and so ably administered the Army Medical Department in India, in peace and in war, will be going home almost immediately, and that Surg.-Gen. Crawford has been ordered to Calcutta from Madras, to inaugurate the new arrangements for working the reconstituted Medical Services in this country, which come into force on April 1 next. It is stated that Mr. Innes, having been across the frontier in Afghanistan for a few days, has been granted the six months' donation batta, amounting in his case to over 12,000 rupees." We hear from Simla that Surg.-Major J. B. Hamilton, whose appointment as statistical officer to the Surgeon-General, British Forces, has been abolished, succeeds to the medical charge of the Nynee Tal Depôt, vice Surg.-Major O'Leary, whose tour at the depôt has expired. The following officers have proceeded with the Bombay troops on service to Afghanistan, viz. :—Surgs.-Major J. O. Wial, S. H. Lithgow, M.D., B. Burland, M.B., W. R. G. Hinde, M.D., H. Waghorn, and J. Riddick; and Surgs. M. D. O'Connell and E. A. H. Roe. The Lahore paper has the following :—We have from time to time published correspondence implying a sense of discontent on the part of medical officers with the recognition of their field-service by the Government. In many instances, we think, the Medical Service has good ground for complaint of neglect. To take one case, we would point out that Surg.-Major W. S. Whylock, M.D., who has been favourably mentioned in Gen. Stewart's despatches, and who distinguished himself for zeal and attention during the cholera epidemic, might justly expect some decoration. This medical officer served at the siege of Delhi, and was very lately principal medical officer with the force under Gen. Hughes at Candahar. It appears to us that the conferring of a C.S.I. on this officer would be only a well-deserved mark of acknowledgment, both to himself and to the Service to which he belongs."

West Kent. Major Ross, late of the regiment, will again contest Maidstone as a Conservative.

Royal Meath. Serjt.-Major Robinson has been presented by Lieut.-Col. Probart and the officers of the 1st Batn. 9th Regt. with a handsome silver tea-pot, sugar-basin, and cream-jug. On the tea-pot is the following inscription :—"To Serjt.-Major E. Robinson, from Col. Probart and officers of the 1st Batn. 9th Regt., as a token of their appreciation of his worth, and of his long and valuable services in the battalion, 1880." Serjt.-Major Robinson was appointed to the Meath Militia from Serjt.-Major of the 9th last year, on his retirement from the Army after 21 years' service.

The Irish Times says:—"Current report has it that only three Militia regiments will be called up for training at this station during the ensuing drill season—viz., the Queen's Own Royal Dublin City Militia, the Dublin County Light Infantry, and the Kildare Rifles. Other Militia regiments will be trained in their own counties, with the view presumably of alleviating in a measure the existing distress."

THE VOLUNTEERS.

Hon. Artillery Company. The annual presentation of prizes took place on Tuesday evening, at the head-quarters in the City Road. Lieut.-Col. Loyd-Lindsay, V.C., M.P., and the Hon. Mrs. Loyd-Lindsay attended. The proceedings commenced with the reading, by Capt. Raikes (the indefatigable instructor of musketry), of the report on the progress of the shooting during the year 1879. This document first adverted to the loss which the regiment had sustained by the death of Capt. Field, and then went on to point out the large increase which had been recently witnessed in the numbers of men who had qualified as marksmen, or who had passed the ordeal of class-firing. It further stated that Serjt. T. Wace, after a two months' course of instruction at the School of Musketry at Hythe, had been appointed serjeant-instructor of musketry to the regiment, after having, according to the certificate which was included in the report, proved himself the best shot of 156 non-commissioned officers and men from various corps, who had just completed a similar course of instruction at the school. The report concluded by mentioning the results of large numbers of matches and shooting competitions which had been held during the regimental year. The Hon. Mrs. Loyd-Lindsay then presented to their winners the challenge and other prizes, which had been tastefully arranged at the back of the platform. At the conclusion of the distribution, Col. Loyd-Lindsay delivered an address, in which he said he thought the report of the instructor of musketry was one of which any commanding officer of a Volunteer corps might well be proud, and it was to him a matter of great satisfaction to find that the regiment year after year preserved its high standard of efficiency in shooting, and that fresh hands continually came to the front to hold their own against the veteran shots.

1st London Artillery. B (Capt. Laycock's) Baty. gave a very enjoyable concert at the Institute, South Place, Finsbury, on the 10th inst. The following officers were present :—Major Wegg-Prosser, 2nd Lieut. Prosser, 38th Regiment, Capt. Laycock, and Lieut. Pool. Amongst the visitors were Capts. Michod, 21st Middlesex, and Sadler, C.L.R.

2nd Middlesex Artillery. Lieut.-Col. Sir W. Palliser, C.B., has consented to contest Taunton in the Conservative interest.

1st Lanark Artillery. A serious accident occurred on Saturday to a party of officers who had gone to Irvine for gun-practice. Serjt.-Instr. Kirker, R.A., in loading a shell struck the fuse incautiously with a mallet, and caused the shell to explode. Kirker had his left leg blown off, and eight of the officers were more or less seriously injured. Lieut.-Col. Watson was wounded in the knee, and the amputation of his leg became necessary. He died at seven o'clock on Sunday morning. Kirker died on Saturday night. Before his death he admitted that the accident was due entirely to his own carelessness. Col. Watson was a most popular commanding officer, and in him the Volunteer service sustains a great loss.

London Rifle Brigade. Lieut.-Col. Sir A. D. Hayter, Bart., seeks re-election as Liberal Member for Bath.

3rd London Rifles. Lieut.-Col. Laurie seeks re-election for Canterbury, in the Conservative interest.

15th Middlesex (London Scottish) Rifles. "H." writes :—"That Lord Elcho should bestow a liberal amount of butter upon the London Scottish on the occasion of his presentation is not a matter to be wondered at; but his lordship goes a little too far when he says, speaking of Capt. Fisher, 'And here I would explain that whenever an important situation is to be filled, they come to the London Scottish.' Am I to understand that most of our great men have once belonged to this distinguished corps? If so, I shall look with greater respect than what I have hitherto upon the pale, bare legs I see under the grey kilt. His lordship also says that 'a metropolitan regiment some years ago wanted a commanding officer; they came to us, and promoted one of our privates—a Peer—to the post.' But if I mistake not, the Peer he mentions was an honorary member, and he did not go as commanding officer, but as major."

The Indian Army.

4th Bengal Cavalry. It is reported that Col. Campbell has been requested to make good to Government the sum of rs. 8,148-11 incurred for the feed of the horses of the regiment during the stay of the regiment at Malta, and which he omitted to deduct at the time from the sowars at rs. 7 per mensem, as was done by other cavalry regiments there and in Abyssinia. Capt. Harenc, adjutant of the Behar Mounted Rifles, has resigned his appointment, and proceeded to join his regiment on service.

11th Bengal Lancers. Capt. E. C. Money has been confirmed in the appointment of squadron-commander, and Capt. H. H. R. Heath in that of adjutant.

12th Bengal Cavalry. The Lahore paper says :—" The 12th B.C., which has returned from the front, is a mere skeleton of a regiment, and is ordered to Nowshera to recruit. On the memorable ride of the regiment past Butkhak to meet Gen. C. Gough, many of the horses were unable to struggle up the bank of the river after crossing the stream. We are not advocates for coddling up either men or horses. Let them both do their work honestly. But we fear there is too often a reckless disregard of the means to the end. Horses' legs are not made of iron, and neither man nor beast can work well for long without food and rest. And while we write of this arm, it occurs to us to ask, with twelve regiments of Bengal Cavalry in the field, how they are all to be relieved by the seven regiments that have not yet been employed, if the war lasts, as it probably will last, for the next two years? Recruiting is, we learn from all sides, growing daily more and more difficult." Major A. P. Broome has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate. We learn from Cabul that Brigdr.-Gen. Hugh Gough has assumed the temporary command of the cavalry brigades.

14th Bengal Cavalry. The regiment, which has returned to India from Afghanistan, is said to show undoubted signs of hard work, and will require rest to bring the horses into good condition.

13th Bengal N.I. Lieut. G. A. Collins has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate.

22nd Bengal N.I. Surg. H. Mallins, M.B., has been granted leave to England for 1 year 182 days, on medical certificate.

26th Bengal N.I. Surg. G. F. Nicholson, lately in medical charge of the commissariat and transport camp, Jhelum, is transferred to Rawul Pindi, where he will assume medical charge of the native depôt hospital, and left wing of the 26th, garrisoned there for station duty.

28th Bengal N.I. Major G. S. Hills, second in command, has been granted leave to England for 1 year 182 days, on medical certificate.

37th Bengal N.I. Major T. D. Madden, wing-commander, has been appointed second in command, vice Hunt, retired, and Capt. J. Corse-Scott, wing-officer and qrmr., wing commander.

41st Bengal N.I. Surg.-Major J. Browne, M.D., has been appointed to the medical charge of the Native Base Hospital, Peshawur, and Surg. E. S. Brander has succeeded him in medical charge of the regiment.

2nd Punjab Cavalry. The Times' correspondent at Candahar telegraphs on the 6th inst. :—" Dr. M'Carthy, of the 2nd Punjab Cavalry, was shot at and slightly wounded on the 29th ult. while riding alone near the hills in the neighbourhood of the city. Probably this was but an attempt by a robber to get his horse and property, and was wholly disconnected with fanaticism."

3rd Punjab Cavalry has been ordered to proceed from Edwardesbad to Cabul, on being relieved by the 5th Punjab Cavalry.

3rd Hyderabad Cavalry. Col. H. C. Dowker, commandant, has been granted leave to England for two years, on private affairs.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs has, the Standard says, expressed to Major-Gen. Hamley, the Chief Commissioner, his sense of the admirable manner the Commissioners selected by her Majesty's Government to act on the Commission for the delimitation of boundaries under the Treaty of Berlin performed their duties.

A Fleet Circular has been issued regulating the employment of electric firing gear and of torpedoes. The firing gear supplied to her Majesty's ships is to be fitted before a ship is placed in the first division of Steam Reserve, under the immediate superintendence of the commander or a lieutenant of the Naval Torpedo School at Portsmouth, and the fittings so arranged are not to be altered without the sanction of the Admiralty. In each vessel supplied with torpedo stores, at least two of the commissioned officers of the military branch, one of whom is to be a lieutenant, are to be thoroughly instructed in their use and application, and are to be fully competent to use the torpedoes supplied. They are also, in vessels fitted with electric firing gear, to be thoroughly instructed in its use, and to be competent to carry out electric firing from the director. The electric firing wires are to be frequently tested by the gunnery officer, or torpedo officer where one is borne, and always, if possible, before exercise. Two armourers or artificers are to be specially instructed in the manner of repairing the wires when damaged, and are to be stationed in the battery at general quarters for this duty. In every ship the boat which is fitted as an outrigger torpedo-boat is to be prepared in all respects for torpedo service, and exercised at least once in each quarter by day and once by night. The gunnery lieutenant or torpedo officer is to consider it an important part of his duty to ascertain that the whole of the electric firing gear and torpedo stores are kept in a thoroughly serviceable and efficient state.

In our advertising columns will be found an announcement that Truefitt and Co., which has for more than sixty years flourished in the Burlington Arcade and Bond Street, has been turned into a limited-liability company. Mr. Truefitt's business, we may mention, in addition to hair-cutting and the manufacture and sale of toilet requisites, embraces tailoring and outfitting departments. As Mr. Truefitt is to act as manager under the new company, there is every reason to believe that the prosperity which has hitherto attended his business will continue. The board of directors is a strong one, and the statement of accounts shows that the prospect held forth in the prospectus of good dividends is likely to be realised.

TIC-SANO.

IT is a FACT, positively and earnestly asserted, that medical men, after trying every remedy in vain, have at once relieved the agonising pains of the following disorders by the use of a VEGETABLE MEDICINE which has been brought to their notice, and testimonials have been received which prove this statement is not a false one, but can be easily verified. This medicine is and will effect a cure in a very short time. In chronic cases of many years' standing, it has, when taken regularly, effected a complete cure, even in persons of advanced age, when the case had been pronounced hopeless.

"Although I have, as a rule, a very great objection to all secret nostrums, still, for once, I must award due praise to a medicine which comes under that category. I find your Tic-Sano to be a very valuable remedy in neuralgia and rheumatic pains. I also find it most successful in many painful menstrual disorders, especially in dysmenorrhœa."

"I have now given your Tic-Sano a fair trial, and am satisfied that it is a most valuable remedy in all cases of a neuralgic nature, and one that I should not like to be without, as these complaints are very prevalent in this neighbourhood.

PORTABLE BOOT-TREE.

A want long felt has just been supplied by this most important invention. All sportsmen and military men know the great advantage of having both their long and short boots treed up every day, especially after they have been wet, but there is often great inconvenience in carrying about the boot-trees.

An officer in the 5th Lancers has lately hit upon the idea that an India-rubber tree, which, with ease, can be carried in the pocket, can, when put inside the boot, be inflated, filling out the boot tightly, and so making it an impossibility to shrink.

For officers on active service, autumn manœuvres, or whenever it is impossible to carry wooden trees, this invention will be invaluable.

This invention is patented for Great Britain and other countries.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 13, 1880.

MR. OTWAY stated in his place in Parliament, on Thursday last, that, as he understood, "more than 1,000 men had been flogged in South Africa." Whence he inferred that the lash had utterly failed as a deterrent! That is, because men commit offences, therefore the law and the police utterly fail to deter men from committing them. But what about the fact? Is it possible that even 500 men were flogged in South Africa, when an officer of Lord Chelmsford's high character as a man of honour and truthfulness has put his hand to the deliberate statement,—"I am able to endorse all that Major-General Newdigate has said regarding the behaviour and conduct of the troops that were under his command during the Zulu campaign?" What did General Newdigate say of his men?—"Their discipline in camp, on the march, and in action, as well as the cheerful and soldierlike manner in which they went through much hard work, reflect the highest credit on them. There were very few instances of flogging." Either Mr. Otway, also a man of high character and honour, has, to use the style of the day, indulged in "such gross exaggeration and transparent untruths, that he must have been made the victim of a hoax," or there has been some serious suppression of facts. It is to be inferred from Colonel Stanley's remark on the same night, "that he would not enter upon the question of the state of discipline of the troops in South Africa, till the facts were more fully and satisfactorily before him," that an inquiry is going on. We are glad the Secretary of State did not express any opinion on the point without due evidence, as he did on a former occasion. He spoke with weight and firmness in resisting further change. We wish he had done so on a certain occasion last year. He now said:—"Where there were rough characters in the Service—he was sorry to say there were such, and might be such at any time—where they had rough men, in many respects enterprising and soldierlike characters, it was necessary that proper means of maintaining discipline should be placed in the hands of those who had charge of them. In this matter, her Majesty's Government felt that they must not shrink from performing what they believed to be their duty, however unpleasant it might be." Sir W. Barttelot will not, we trust, be held up to odium as an enemy to the Army for his reference to its composition. The gallant and honourable Member observed:—"There was no one on either side of the House who would not wish that the punishment of flogging could be abolished, but it should be remembered that our Army was not an army of conscription. It was raised from different classes to those of which Continental armies were composed. There were in our Army honourable and gallant men, but there were others of a different character; but even in their case, flogging was only resorted to in the most extreme cases, and for the very worst offences." These are truths to be laid to heart, and we have nothing to add to the views on this subject which we expressed last week. An Army largely composed of lads, in which there is an infusion of rough characters, without an adequate strength of steady non-commissioned officers, needs strict discipline, in the field and out of it. All comparisons between a force of volunteers like our own and one based on conscription are worthless. Flogging is now a detestable necessity. None can be more anxious that it should cease to be so than ourselves.

Lord Airey's Report was finally settled, signed, and delivered, before Lord Napier of Magdala left London. Lord Airey has been taking a little sun at Melton, by way of a change after his hard work, and the gallant officer, now getting on to be an octogenarian, had a week's hard hunting as a refresher. We hope some of the young ones will be able to do as much as such veterans as Lord Lucan, Lord Airey, and others of the old school, when their turn comes.

The Cape Yeomanry are an acknowledged failure,—a ludicrous, a disgraceful failure, it may be said; and even the Premier, the "Honourable" Mr. Sprigg, to whom the force owes its existence, and who less than a year ago declared publicly that he and his Ministry would stand or fall with it,—even he has been compelled to make, if not verbal, at all events practical, acknowledgment of the utter worthlessness of the force as a fighting one by taking it bodily out of the field, and giving its work to the hitherto contemned and despised regular corps of the colony, the Cape Mounted Riflemen, who took over and finished it at once, and only too completely.

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. A. Stewart, who temporarily doffed the jacket in order to proceed to Afghanistan, where he has rendered good service, is to succeed the late Major Ward Ashton in command of the Ridinghouse Establishment at Woolwich. Major H. C. Magenis is likely to fill Colonel Stewart's place in C Brigade.

They do wonderful things at the War Office! We hear that Deputy Commissary Gordon, one of the very best officers in the branch of the Service to which he belongs, is "selected" for retirement! He has just returned from South Africa, where he was in charge of the Ordnance Stores of the First Division, and won the approbation of every officer who had any knowledge of his exertions and work.

With the permission of the War Office, Captain Oscar Prevost, of the Quebec School of Gunnery, has been ordered by the Government of Canada to proceed to England, to undergo a practical course of instruction in the manufacture of cartridges at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, to qualify him to undertake the superintendence of an establishment which it is proposed to open in Canada for the production of all descriptions of small-arms ammunition, to obviate the necessity of supplies being drawn from England.

Colonel Redvers Buller, V.C., C.B., has accepted the unattached Majority from a company in the 60th Rifles, which we lately announced would be offered to him, on his being provided for on the Staff of the Adjutant-General's Department.

Sir Garnet Wolseley has been "inaugurating" the unveiling of a monument to the memory of the "black men of Edendale who fell in Zululand." The Edendale settlement is one of a very remarkable character, and the natives educated there are negro "Covenanters," who sing psalms morning and night, and pray and slay their enemies with equal fervour and gusto.

Major-General W. Hope, C.B., has accepted the command of the troops in Scotland, vice Lieutenant-General R. Bruce.

Captain M. S. Bell, V.C., Royal Engineers, has been appointed Assistant-Quartermaster-General on the Staff of the Intelligence Branch of the Quartermaster-General's Department in India. Captain Bell has been for some time attached to Sir A. Alison's staff at the War Office.

Captain J. A. Fergusson, Rifle Brigade, from Garrison-Instructor at Edinburgh, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Sir James Fergusson, Bart., Governor of Bombay.

We regret to learn that the appointment of Adjutant-General of the Madras Army has fallen vacant, by the death of Colonel F. W. Jebb, half-pay, late 67th Regiment, which occurred at Madras on the 19th ult., of Bright's disease. Colonel Jebb entered the Service June 23, 1854, and served with the 23rd Fusiliers in the Crimea from November 14, 1854, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal with clasp and Turkish medal). He passed from the Staff College in December, 1859, obtained command of the 67th Regiment, August 20, 1872, and was appointed Adjutant-General at Fort St. George, August 29, 1877.

The Russian Minister of War has appointed a Special Commission to inquire into the projected reorganisation of the Russian cavalry. The Commission consists of twenty cavalry officers, of whom two are adjutant-generals, two lieutenant-generals, seven major-generals, and the remainder colonels. Count Mushin Pushker is the president.

General Lord Napier of Magdala, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., left England on Thursday for Gibraltar, to resume his duties as Governor and Commander-in-Chief of that fortress, from special employment in London as a member of Lord Airey's Committee on Army organisation.

Despatches by General Roberts detailing events from the 8th to the 24th of December have appeared in the Indian Government Gazette. General Roberts bears witness to the assistance rendered him by Lieutenant-Generals Kennedy and Vaughan, the latter of whom aided him with his experience gathered during many years' service on the frontier. The following are also mentioned as having rendered especially good service:—Major-General Hills; Brigadier-General H. Gough; Colonels Hogg, Jenkins, and MacGregor; Lieutenant-Colonels Collett, FitzHugh, Lockhart, and Heathcote; Majors Hanna, Kingsley, Hills, Morton, Kennedy, Coombe, Badcock, Woodthorpe, Moriarty, and Hastings; Captains Deane, Hall, Gordon, Eardley-Wilmot, Campbell (R.A.), Holding, Martin, Hunt, Lewis, Stratton, and Pole-Carew; Lieutenants Manners-Smith, Brabazon, Sherston, and Chamberlain; Deputy-Surgeon-General Porter (since deceased); Surgeon-Major Roe; and Surgeons Coates and Owen.

Lieutenant-Colonel R. R. Jones, R.A., has been selected to succeed Colonel G. K. Taylor, R.A., in command of the Auxiliary Artillery in the Edinburgh District.

As we stated recently, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Carrington, 24th Regiment, the well-known dashing leader of Irregular Horse, lately with the field force operating against Sekukuni in the Transvaal, has been offered, and is likely to accept, the command of the left division of the Cape Mounted Rifles—a very good appointment indeed, although some people may be expected to take exception to it, as they did to the appointment of Colonels Moore and Bayly, on the score of the injustice done to the senior officers of the corps. There is, of course, a good deal to be said in support of this view, but as believers in the doctrine of "expediency," we hold the Government is right in this, or would be right if, in superseding them, it took the undoubted and legitimate claims of these officers into consideration, and provided for them elsewhere, pensioned them off, or, at least, gave them the option of remaining in the corps in their present rank. They are mostly men who have risen from the ranks in the old Frontier Police, and have all done good service in their time, but though excellent policemen, they are not soldiers. They are entirely without military training, and have not, and indeed cannot be expected to have, the education, and with it the tact and savoir-faire, necessary to enable men to command successfully ordinary battalions of the Line, to say nothing of commanding such a corps as the Cape Mounted Riflemen, composed, as it is—unless the very recent mistaken endeavour to augment the force with the scum of Natal and Cape Town gives direct contradiction to this assertion—principally of educated men, taken from the upper and middle classes of English society, and amongst whom discipline has to be preserved not so much by having recourse to the law, as by the tact and personal force of character of the officers in command. We all know how much importance poor Tommy Atkins, attaches to the fact that his colonel or his captain is a gentleman, or is not one. Surely it must be, if possible, the more necessary that the officers of the Cape Mounted Rifles shall be gentlemen! Therefore it seems but common sense to suggest that the old officers of the Frontier Police, who, from a military point of view, do not know their right hands from their left, should not chafe and fret because they are not made "colonels," and given the command of battalions of gentlemen. They ought to be wise enough to see that it would never do, but by all means let them fight the Government, if necessary, with any and every legitimate weapon that may come to their hands, until their unquestionable claims on the country to be done full justice to, and they themselves be provided for, in situations suitable to their capabilities, or placed on the shelf with liberal pensions.

Inspecting Veterinary-Surgeon T. P. Gudgin has accepted the Distinguished-service Reward of £50 per annum, which we stated lately had been offered to him in recognition of his services in the Zulu campaign.

We see it stated that Lieutenant Chermside, R.E., is the first subaltern of the British Army who has received the Cross of St. Michael and St. George. This is an error, for the decoration was conferred, at the close of the Ashantee campaign, upon Lieutenant J. H. Barnard, 19th Regiment, now Captain Barnard, 101st Fusiliers, for his brilliant services when employed on the Staff of the Volta expedition with Sir John Glover. Captain Barnard was the first subaltern to wear the Cross, and it was his most meritorious case which caused the Colonial Office to decide to throw the Order open to the lower grades, notwithstanding that it is an invariable rule, if not, indeed, an absolute law, that the Bath shall be conferred on none under the rank of field-officer. As Captain Barnard is now in Afghanistan on Major-General Bright's Staff, it is a simple act of justice to him to correct at once a mistake which robs him of credit fairly his.

Colonel J. C. M'Neill, C.B., V.C., arrived at Windsor Castle on Monday, from Canada, as second Equerry in Waiting, and had an audience of the Queen in the afternoon. He was the bearer of a letter from Princess Louise. Colonel Baker Russell, C.B., 13th Hussars, who was gazetted a Queen's Aide-de-Camp lately, in recognition of his services in the Secocoeni campaign, will be considered a supernumerary, pending a vacancy occurring on the establishment, when he will be placed on the list of unpaid aides-de-camp, awaiting succession to the paid establishment.

It seems to be quite an article of faith with Colonial statesmen, that in becoming "Cabinet Ministers" they become not only soldiers, but Generals as well. In nearly all the frontier wars, in disturbances which the Cape Government has undertaken to settle within the last few years, a Cabinet Minister has always rushed, if not into the thickest of the fray, at all events into the camp or bivouac of the unfortunate officer in responsible command of the forces in the field; and that these officials did not consider themselves out of place, or merely ornamental in such positions, was proved in at least one instance, in which the Cabinet Minister in the field (!)—an attorney by profession—interfered so offensively with the conduct of operations, that the officer in command—a man of spirit and choleric withal—refused absolutely to submit to his dictation, formally handed over command to the lawyer, and left the field! It appears, however, that the "Minister," having thus succeeded in obtaining the command, did not feel himself quite equal to exercising it, for he, in his turn, hastened to hand it over to another genius (a shoemaker this time), a captain of levies, who gaily carried on a scrambling sort of warfare for several months at, of course, an appalling expense to the unfortunate colony, but, happily, with but very little loss of life on either side. All this would be very amusing if it were not sometimes rather tragic, as witness the slaughter of those unfortunate farmers at Moirosi's Mountain in May last, and who lost their lives through the utter ignorance of the very most elementary principles of soldiering on the part of the "officer" supposed to command the yeomanry corps the poor fellows belonged to.

CROCODILE, Capt. Doughty, left Malta for Portsmouth yesterday morning.

DUKE OF WELLINGTON, Capt. M. Culme-Seymour, A.D.C., flagship of Admiral A. P. Ryder, Commander-in-Chief, Portsmouth. It is said that the transformation of the fore-cabin of the Duke of Wellington from a court-martial room to a nursery and servants' dormitory, will, together with some other necessary alterations for the female department, cost close upon £500. "It is true," says the Hampshire Telegraph, "that the captain will be much more handy in case of fire at night, or some other extraordinary call upon him, than if he were at home and in bed at Southsea. But after all, such an occurrence is so rare, and there are so many able and efficient officers always on the spot, that they could got along very well, even if the flag captain were sound asleep all the while. Such a chance as that is not worth the money and annoyance the cancelling of the former order anent the residence of women on board ship is likely to cost. There is hardly a soul to be found, except those personally interested, who give even a modified expression of approval of the new domestic arrangements."

EURYALUS, Capt. Richard King, which has been docked at Malta for examination and repair to her screw propeller, is to leave to-morrow for Bombay.

EXCELLENT, Capt. J. O. Hopkins, took over the duties of the command on Monday. Capt. Hopkins entered the Navy in Jan. 1848, and served in the Black Sea during the Crimean War, obtaining his commission as mate in Sept. 1854, and as lieut. in the following Oct., while serving in the Sanspareil, commanded successively by Sir Sydney Dacres and Sir Leopold Heath. In the Sanspareil he was present (but not in action) at the bombardment of Odessa in April, 1854; assisted in disembarking our forces at Varna, and was present in the attack of Oct. 17 on the sea defences of Sebastopol, when his ship sustained a loss of eleven killed and fifty-nine wounded. Served from Oct. 23, 1854, until the end of the war in the London (medal with clasp and Turkish medal). At the conclusion of hostilities, he returned home and passed his examination for lieut. at the Royal Naval College, April 10, 1856. In May following he was appointed to the Nile, Capt. G. Rodney Mundy, and in Nov. 1857 to the Racoon, Capt. J. A. Paynter, serving in the Channel and Mediterranean. In Nov. 1859 he was transferred, as additional lieut., to the Marlborough, flagship of Vice-Admiral W. F. Martin, in the Mediterranean, and in Feb. 1861 to the Neptune, Capt. G. T. P. Hornby, on the same station. In Dec. 1861 he was appointed flag lieut. to Sir Sidney Dacres in the Edgar, on the Mediterranean station, and in Nov. of the following year was promoted com. He served as com. in the Royal Oak from Dec. 1863 until promoted capt., Sept. 14, 1867, under the successive commands of Capts. F. A. Campbell and the Hon. G. D. Keane. In April, 1869, he was appointed to the Liverpool, commanded by Rear-Admiral Hornby, as flagship with the Flying Squadron, with which he served until Dec. 9, 1870. His next service was in command of the Narcissus in the Detached Squadron, from Oct. 9, 1872, to Dec. 8, 1873. Capt. Hopkins subsequently served as flag captain to Admiral Sir Thomas Symonds, at Devonport, from Nov. 1875 to Nov. 1878. He has gone through the senior torpedo course of instruction in the Vernon.

FIREFLY, Lieut.-Com. Sisson, has been ordered from Cape Coast Castle to Simon's Bay.

FLIRT, Com. J. W. Brackenbury. To enhance the enjoyment of the crew, Com. Brackenbury has generously purchased a set of 17 handbells and several other musical instruments, for the crew.

INCONSTANT, Capt. Lord Walter Kerr, bearing the flag of Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., arrived at Malta on March 10.

INVINCIBLE, Capt. the Hon. Edmund Fremantle, C.B., has arrived at the Piræus. Alluding to the award to Capt. Fremantle of the gold medal of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, a correspondent of the Hampshire Telegraph says:—"Some people have said that the captain of a ship should leave the jumping overboard to others, and that he should stay in the ship at such a time, as the captain is of greater importance at such a moment than anyone else. To suddenly leave the bridge and go overboard while the ship was under weigh has been thought by some to be not the thing to do; but I may say that the Admiralty have not taken so very straight-laced a view of the case, and the First Naval Lord for one has spoken most highly of Capt. Fremantle for his gallantry, as well as for his professional ability, which last qualification is shown by the fact that he has won the gold medal of the Royal United Service Institution for the best essay on 'Naval Tactics on the Open Sea, with the Existing Types of Vessels and Weapons.' It has been remarked that although Capt. Fremantle had no time to take off his coat or boots, he found time to give the necessary orders as to what should be done before he left the bridge so suddenly. This may possibly be the outcome of former experience, for it may be remembered that when he left the Eclipse on the New Zealand coast, while she was under weigh, he failed to make his instructions as to her movements quite clear, and as a result she went on shore, and was severely damaged. Then followed a court-martial, with no serious result, and on their Lordships reviewing the minutes they came to the following conclusion:—'My Lords consider that while Com. Fremantle, in his sudden determination to go on shore, showed a praiseworthy zeal and desire to perform the difficult service on which he was engaged, he should not have left the Eclipse without giving more definite instructions to the officer left in command of the ship.'"

JUMNA, Capt. G. Parsons, left Portsmouth on Thursday morning for Bombay with drafts from numerous cavalry and infantry regiments, numbering, with those to be called for at Queenstown, 78 officers, 12 officers' families, 900 men, 30 soldiers' wives, and 34 children.

OSBORNE, Com. Lord Charles Beresford, M.P., which is in hand at Portsmouth Dockyard for her annual refit, is to be hurried forward, and is ordered to be ready for sea, if needed, on March 24.

PALLAS is ordered to be brought forward for commission at Chatham.

READY, Com. H. H. Edwards, was at Muscat according to last accounts.

REPULSE is to be commissioned at an early date. She has had to have new boilers, and her machinery thoroughly overhauled, the expenditure on the hull alone being estimated at £20,000. She has been supplied with the electric light on the ends of the bridge and on the poop, and also with 14-in. Whitehead torpedoes, which will be discharged from ports on the main deck.

ROVER is ordered to be brought forward for commission at Chatham, and is now in the hands of the dockyard undergoing repairs. It is expected that she will be sent to the West Coast of Africa.

SEALARK, Lieut. G. R. Bromley. The Sealark's old and well-known dog "Jack" died recently, after fourteen years' service in the ship. Mourning cards, with the likeness of the dog, and the following inscription, have been circulated:—"In affectionate remembrance of a faithful and vigilant friend, 'Dog Jack,' who, after serving devotedly for 14 years in H.M.'s brig Sealark, departed this life Feb. 24, 1880, aged 15 years."

SERAPIS, Capt. Guy O. Twiss, arrived at Malta on March 8, and left the following day for Portsmouth.

SPARTAN, Capt. R. Tracey, was at Rangoon on Feb. 16, and will receive her sailing orders for England on being relieved by the Eclipse.

SULTAN is to be completed for commission, and will, it is expected, be despatched to the Mediterranean. Her refit will have cost £50,000. She has been provided with Wilde's electric lights, and armed with Nordenfeldt guns on the gunwale and Gatlings to be mounted in the tops. Her armament has been strengthened by nine 20-pounders on the upper deck and the deck above the battery, and extra magazines have been built for storing outrigger torpedoes and gear. Two second-class torpedo boats will be carried and twelve Whitehead torpedoes, for which ports have been cut through her armour.

TEMERAIRE, Capt. the Hon. W. Carpenter, is to leave Malta on March 15 for a ten days' cruise.

TORCH, Com. Richard H. Hamond, arrived at Malta from Corfu on March 7.

Chapman, the petty officers recently assembled on shore at an evening party (confined to themselves), to express the unity and cordiality which prevails among them. The evening was spent in a most enjoyable and social manner. An excellent supper was served during the evening.

VERNON, Capt. W. F. Gordon. Lieut. Eardley Wilmot, of the Vernon, is to be congratulated at having for the second time been honourably mentioned among the competitors for the prize essay of the Royal United Service Institution. Flinn, commissioned boatman, William Minton, commissioned boatman, Thomas Tegan, commissioned boatman, and Robert Selwood, boatman, Coastguard.

The Pioneer regrets to hear of rumoured difficulties in the administration of the Indian Marine Survey Department. Differences of opinion (says our contemporary) between two of the senior officers of the department have most unfortunately been allowed to come to a head, the result being, we fear, the loss to India of the services of the senior of the Royal Navy officers attached to the Survey, and one who is, moreover, probably one of the ablest and most accomplished marine surveyors of the present day, Lieut. Jarrad. It appears that Lieut. Jarrad entertained some professional objection—the etiquette of the Royal Navy being very precise in such matters—to the arrangement by which he became liable, in the absence of Com. Taylor, to receive orders from Mr. Carrington, the Deputy Superintendent of the Marine Survey Department, but not a naval officer. This led to a reference to Government, and a decision against Lieut. Jarrad, which has the effect of replacing his services at the disposal of the Admiralty. A little tact on the part of the authorities and a little private pressure brought by them to bear on the parties concerned, would have prevented the present contretemps.

With reference to the remains of the Naval officer lately found in the sands at the Manakau Heads, New Zealand, near where the Orpheus was lost in February, 1863, the Admiralty have forwarded a letter to Messrs. Batten and Adams, Devonport, requesting to be informed whether they supplied uniforms to any of the lieutenants of that ship.

THE NEW BOOT POLISH.—An entirely new idea for polishing boots has just been introduced which does away with the laborious method hitherto in use. Propert's Ebony Blacking polishes instantly without brushing, is of an oily nature, and, being waterproof, retains its lustre in all weathers. One application upon ladies', gentlemen's, or children's boots lasts a week.—Of Bootmakers, price 1s.—Wholesale of J. PROPERT, Battersea Park Road, London.

TO EMIGRANTS, or any one leaving Home for a Change.—ENO'S FRUIT SALT is of the greatest value to emigrants, not only in preventing sea-sickness, &c., but as a means of keeping the blood healthy under the ever-varying conditions to which they may be exposed. Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s 9d and 4s 6d.

THE BURSTING OF THE DUILIO GUN.

A telegram from Spezia, dated Sunday, announced that some damage had been done to the Duilio from the bursting of one of the 100-ton Armstrong guns. The gun is composed of an inner steel tube, surrounded by wrought-iron coils, the steel tube being chambered. Loading on this occasion was effected by hand, not by machinery, the charge being a battering one, and the projectile left the muzzle in regular course. The inner steel tube broke completely across at the base of the front cone, the wrought-iron coils forming the bulk of the gun being almost entirely uninjured. They seem to have drawn asunder forward and backward. One correspondent states that the gun did not, strictly speaking, burst, but was rent longitudinally. The breech struck and damaged the back part of the turret, ripping up the backing and opening, but not bending the plates. The gun divided, and fragments were broken off. The men were not, therefore, injured by flying pieces of metal, but only by the gas. The roof of the turret was torn by a movement of the back plates to which it was fixed. The gun will, it is thought, require only a new tube. A committee assembled to investigate the cause of the accident, and telegraphed to the Minister of Marine for leave to continue firing, which the Minister granted. The committee consider that the accident should not be allowed to damage the credit of the gun, or the system on which it was built. The committee went on board and both guns of the fore turret were fired with the full charges. Nothing unusual occurred. There is a strong opinion after a preliminary examination that the accident is due to some serious flaw in the steel tube. The gun had fired 28 rounds before the accident occurred, and had also been fired with much heavier charges than those for which it was designed.

The Duilio herself has so far answered the expectations of the Government, and has recently undergone a very successful trial at sea. The machinery worked without a hitch, the speed realised being a knot more than was anticipated, a result which contrasts favourably with several late trials in Stokes Bay. Though constructed at Castellamare, the ship was engined by Messrs. Penn, of Greenwich. The displacement at the load-line is 10,650 tons, and the indicated horse-power, 7,500 horses, so that the Duilio is a more powerful engined ship than the Inflexible. Each set of engines consist of a couple of cylinders, having an effective diameter of 86 inches, with a stroke of 3 ft. 3 in., and is supplied with steam by ordinary box boilers. The official trial was made at Spezia on Feb. 16, with excellent results. The screws were 17 ft. 3 in. in diameter, and were set to a mean pitch of 19 ft. 6 in. The whole of the armament of four 100-ton guns was on board, and the ship fully equipped and ready for sea, with the exception of her shot and shell. For these, however, an equivalent weight of pig-iron ballast was put on board, which brought her down to a mean draught of 26 ft. 9 in. This is said to be her sea-going trim, but in consequence of the unexpected weight of her armour—which will probably be rectified in the Dandolo by the adoption of compound armour—is slightly in excess of her estimated load-line, which was 25 ft. 11 in. With a pressure of 30 lb. to the square inch in the boilers, the engines were found to make from 83 to 84 revolutions per minute during the full-power trial, and to exert a mean indicated horse-power of 7,710 horses, the power stipulated for on the contract being 7,500 horses, and the number of revolutions 80. The engines worked with perfect smoothness and regularity throughout the trial, while the ship herself attained a mean speed of 15·04 knots, which, notwithstanding her deep immersion, was a knot per hour more than it was expected to get out of her. The Duilio was commenced at Castellamare in 1873, and was launched in May, 1877. Like her sister-ship, the Dandolo, she is slightly longer and narrower than our Inflexible, but is heavier armoured and armed. The Duilio measures 339 ft. 7 in. between perpendiculars, and 64 ft. 7 in. extreme breadth; her main deck is 11 ft. 6 in., and her battery 15 ft. 9 in. above the water-line; and her double bottom, which is upwards of 230 ft. in length, is divided into a large number of water-tight compartments. The turrets, which are formed of solid iron plates, 19 in. thick, are placed at each end of the citadel, the same as in the Inflexible, 7 ft. 8 in. from the middle line of the ship, the advantage of the arrangement being that the fire of one does not interfere with that of the other, and that all the guns can be trained at one time upon the same object. The machinery and boilers, magazines and shell-rooms, and a portion of the machinery for working the turret-guns are enclosed in a citadel 107 ft. by 58 ft., which is covered by 22-in. armour at the water-line, 18-in. above, and 14-in. below. Above this citadel is a box, similarly armoured, which encloses the bases of the turrets and the remaining portion of the hydraulic mechanism for working the guns. The ship is also fitted with a powerful spur weighing 17 tons.

As regards the injuries received by those on board, the special correspondent of the Times says:—"The only grave cases among the wounded are two—a midshipman, who was severely burned, chiefly in the hand; and a sailor, who stood close beside the gun where it opened; he was burned, and sustained some injury by his head striking against the turret wall. In all the other cases the men are only slightly burned, having been below the turret. A charge of powder was on a truck below the turret, but did not ignite. Five officers were standing on the roof of the turret, but were uninjured. The general opinion is that if the gun had burst explosively, many must have been killed, and the ship set on fire by the ignition of the charge below the turret. One sailor who was on the roof of the turret fell off, and had his leg broken. The turret, which is of oval shape, and 22 ft. by 26 ft. 6 in. inside, was almost filled by the two guns and their carriages. The diameter of the breech of the gun is 6 ft. 6 in. Great exaggeration is shown in some of the accounts which have been published in Italy. There were only nine wounded, of whom two were officers. Sir W. Armstrong offers to give a thousand francs to the wounded men, and to repair the gun at his own expense. Capt. Albini, who was below the turret, was not hurt. Mr. Hutchinson, from Messrs. Armstrong's, was in the turret, and only had his hair singed. The English officers present were Captain Nicholson, naval attaché, and Lieut.-Colonel Brackenbury, of the Royal Artillery. There were also present some employés of Messrs. Armstrong, but none of them were hurt. The Italian sailors were quite under control at the time of the accident, and no want of confidence is shown in the other guns." A commission has been appointed to inquire into the causes of the bursting of the gun.

In a letter to the Times, a correspondent states that now "The remains of the second 38-ton gun have been all collected, and a comparison can be made between them and those of the gun which burst on board the Thunderer, it will be at once seen that the conclusion jumped at on the occasion of the second explosion is, at all events, premature, for the explosions are of completely different characters. In the first gun the bore is not expanded much beyond the broken edge of the steel tube which remains in the stump of the gun. In the second the bore is expanded, and the steel tube is expanded over the whole of the space which had been occupied by the front charge of powder. In the first gun, the huge band or jacket which encircles the main body of the gun, and which weighs many tons, is quite intact; in the second, it is burst from end to end, and a portion of it is blown clean away. When the first gun was fired, the water compressor which checked the recoil was uninjured; but when the second gun was fired with two charges, the violence of the recoil was so great that it burst the compressor. In one word, the nature of the second explosion is much more violent than that of the first; the recoil was much greater, and the seat of the explosion was much farther back towards the breech of the gun. Do not these facts prove that the first gun could not have been double-loaded?"

ARMED CRUISERS.

An important paper was read by Mr. Donald Currie at the Royal United Service Institution last week, on "The Adaptation of Ocean Steamers to War Purposes." The Marquis of Lansdowne presided. Mr. Currie pointed out that England, depending upon her Naval supremacy, should be prepared not only for defence, but also for attack. Italy, France, Germany, and Russia were all increasing their naval forces; and though our insular position might protect us, it was a question whether our colonies might not be attacked and our food supplies cut off. These considerations pointed to the importance of the Mercantile Marine as an auxiliary to the Royal Navy. The vital parts of merchant steamers could be efficiently protected by iron sheets, as shown by the experiment on the Oberon at Portsmouth. They would then, if of suitable speed, be most usefully employed as mail packets in time of war, as offensive and defensive cruisers, as despatch-vessels attached to a squadron or naval station, as transports, and as gunboats, or store-ships. But the employment of merchant steamers for war could not do away with the necessity for a full strength in the Navy. There must be, in his opinion, a considerable increase in the number of our cruising men-of-war. There were not 100 ocean steamers in this country really suitable for Admiralty requirements, and fit to travel over 12 knots an hour; indeed, taking everything into account, there were not 80. He pressed upon the country the necessity for deciding one way or the other whether anything was to be done in the way of making use of merchant vessels as armed cruisers. Briefly sketching out what appeared to him to be a practical and valuable programme, he said the Government might select 10, or 20, or 30 steamers (if they could find that number), capable of steaming over 12 knots an hour for 25 to 50 days without stopping, and engage these vessels upon some such terms as these:—A payment monthly, or by the year, for their retention, making it an obligation on the owners to retain in their employ men connected with the Royal Naval Reserve. They also should keep at certain specified places, such as Ascension, the Falkland Islands, Simon's Bay, Hong Kong, Sydney, Halifax, Bermuda, Vancouver's Island, and other strategical points, a sufficient number of men of the Royal Marine Artillery and Infantry, with guns, fittings, magazines, ammunition, torpedoes, &c., necessary for the arming of the vessels retained. In the course of his paper Mr. Currie also urged that Government docks should be established at every one of the important strategical points of our widespread empire, and that all our coaling stations should be fortified. In the discussion which followed, Admiral Sir W. King Hall agreed with what Mr. Currie had said with regard to the want of docks and their fortification; he thought we should find ourselves very badly off in that respect if a war should break out. The Treaty of Paris had not only destroyed the right but also the left arm of the country. He deprecated the present system of competition in gigantic ironclads, and said that what we required was a mosquito fleet of small gunboats. Admiral Sir Spencer Robinson also thought we had not enough of fast cruisers in the Navy, and said there was no doubt the Mercantile Marine could render excellent service to the country in that respect, but though of opinion that it would be well to fit out every merchant ship so that she should be able to defend herself, he saw difficulties in the way of making such vessels available for war purposes. It would be necessary to bear in mind the weight of the guns which it would be requisite to place on board those vessels, the capability of those vessels to bear such a weight, and its bearing upon the vessels' other carrying requirements. Mr. Currie, before the meeting broke up, explained that he did not mean that merchant ships should carry for any length of time heavy guns. All he meant was that they should be so prepared that they could ship them at any moment, and that such guns should be kept in readiness at certain foreign stations.

The discussion on this paper was resumed on Thursday afternoon. Capt. Bedford Pim expressed his opinion that the condition of the Mercantile Marine was critical in the extreme, especially as regarded the proportion of foreigners in the mercantile service. If they could reduce the weight of their guns, they might have smaller vessels, which could be built for £9,000 or £10,000 each. He trusted the subject would be threshed out by practical men, and that the country might not be led into an expenditure which was useless. Admiral Hoskins thought that the question of coal depôts, docks, and the protection of them, constituted the main question for consideration. As to the employment of large merchant steamers, he thought that, if armed, they would be able to protect themselves against the class of vessels which it had been proposed to send against them. Capt. Long remarked that, as to the capacity of merchant ships for self-protection, he thought they should see that subsidies given to mail steamers should not be given without regard to this question. Lord A. Churchill thought it important to provide an admirable type of cruiser. The question of armed merchant ships divided itself into two branches—vessels which were capable of being armed to act on the offensive, and those which, being armed, could carry on legitimate commerce. If the provisions of the Treaty of Paris were violated, and we were attacked by those who put privateers into requisition, we should be compelled to do the same. Admiral Lethbridge considered that, if we went to war, the first thing would be the destruction of the Suez Canal, so that we must not look for a passage that way, but must turn attention to the passage round the Cape of Good Hope. The question was, whether we should not have a flotilla there, ready to act in defence of our commerce? That touched on the coal and dock question. He would also suggest Sierra Leone as a coaling station; while Barbadoes might be selected on the opposite side of the sea. Admiral Selwyn remarked that the merchant steamers were calculated to play the part of running away, and that was their business. The instant the merchant steamer fired a gun, she provoked attack. There was the much wider question of how we should provide corn and feed our people without these merchant steamers? In the present state of maritime warfare, one cruiser would create a scare. They had experience of how the American carrying trade had suffered in two years during the civil war. The merchant steamer would do best if it continued its work. We should press forward constant experimental research, and what was wanted was to secure the last development of science. It was desirable to have a Council appointed, before which every new project might be presented, to receive the good and reject the bad. The Marquis of Lansdowne thought that there was apathy on the part of the English public with reference to this question, and it was desirable that closer attention should be paid to the subject. Our responsibilities were not diminishing, and as to our resources there were one or two points of weakness. One was the comparatively small number of cruising vessels, and there was also the fact that our ironclads were liable to get out of order. The question of men and officers was a serious one. Mr. D. Currie replied, and urged that there should be a large supply of the best Government cruisers in the service of the country. A vote of thanks was passed to Mr. D. Currie for his lecture.

THE HOTCHKISS AND NORDENFELDT TRIALS.

Our Portsmouth correspondent states that at the recent trials between the 1½ in. Hotchkiss gun in comparison with the Government Nordenfeldt guns, under the supervision of Admirals Boys, Hamilton, and Herbert, and the staff of the Excellent, the mean of accuracy trials resulted against the Hotchkiss gun, the Naval 1-in. gun showing 40 % less mean deviation. For penetration, the 1½-in. steel shots of the Hotchkiss gun and the Naval 1-in. bore Nordenfeldt gun both penetrated the same thicknesses of plates at 300 yards distance; the guns were fired against several thicknesses of plates at different angles, the most interesting experiment being four steel plates of 3-16ths inch thickness, behind one another, with a few feet between each plate. These were all penetrated by both the Hotchkiss and the Nordenfeldt steel shot, but the Hotchkiss shell, which burst after passing through the second plate, only cracked and failed to penetrate the third plate. Hotchkiss shell made a slight indent on the face of a ⅝-in. steel plate, whereas Hotchkiss 1½-in. steel shot and Nordenfeldt 1-in. steel shot both penetrated but did not pass through the plate, thus showing the maximum penetration of the two steel shots to be the same.

The Hotchkiss gun always fires single shots, but the Nordenfeldt 1-in. gun can fire either single shots or volleys, as desired. Both guns were fired alternately against two small targets away from one another, and placed on different levels, in order to ascertain which of the guns could most quickly change fire from one point to another. The results showed that when both guns fired single shots, the Hotchkiss gun gave in a given time two-thirds of the number of hits noted for the Nordenfeldt gun, but that when the latter gun fired volleys, the Hotchkiss gun only registered a quarter of the number of hits given by the Government Nordenfeldt gun. We understand that these trials are to be continued on a large scale against moving targets at sea, representing torpedo-boats and other smaller craft, and we anxiously await the results of these trials.

The following are the names of the killed inscribed on the Active memorial of which we gave a description last week:—Mr. L. C. Coker, midshipman, Fort Ekowe; J. Radford, leading seaman, Fort Ekowe; J. Moore, shoemaker, Fort Ekowe; A. Smith, able seaman, Fort Ekowe; W. Stagg, private, R.M.L.I., Fort Ekowe; W. Aynsley, signalman, Isandlwana; A. Pearce, coxswain of cutter, D. Martin, able seaman, W. Seddon, gunner, R.M.A., G. Walsh, ordinary seaman, T. Liverpool, krooman, Lower Tugela; T. Duffey, signalman, A. Mabey, drummer, R.M.A., in Transkei."

Rowlando's Odonto or Pearl Dentifrice is of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and giving a pleasant fragrance to the breath; it eradicates tartar from the teeth, prevents and arrests decay, and polishes and preserves the enamel, to which it imparts a pearl-like whiteness. Its unprecedented success for more than half a century shows the universal favour in which it is held, while the fact of its being entirely free from any acid or mineral ingredients constitutes it the safest and purest tooth-powder ever used. To prevent fraud, the genuine Odonto has a 3d. Government stamp on the box. Sold everywhere. Ask for Rowland's Odonto.

INDIA.

The Transport Department comes in for a good deal of dispraise at times; but the work done is sometimes appreciated, as witness the following divisional order issued at Sherpur on Jan. 22:—"Lieut.-Col. Mark Heathcote, having handed over the office of Director of Transport, Sir F. Roberts wishes to place on record his sense of the services rendered by that officer. At the request of the Lieutenant-General, he undertook the arduous duties of the appointment, when the Cabul Field Force was in motion upon Cabul, and when the Transport organisation was far from being complete. By the exertions of himself and his assistants, reforms have been introduced and improvements made which have enabled the recent operations to be carried on with greater facility, and which promise, in course of time, to place the Transport Department on a thoroughly efficient footing, and Sir F. Roberts begs to thank Lieut.-Col. Heathcote for the assistance he has afforded him."

The Lahore paper says:—"His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will leave Calcutta for Peshawur at the end of the current month, and orders directing the formation of his camp at the latter station have been issued. His assumption of the command of the army of the field in Afghanistan will probably depend on the views of the Government in England on the future policy to be pursued towards Cabul. But we believe that the Government of India generally opposes the step. The operations against Ghuzni will in all probability be confided to Sir D. Stewart; the force under Gen. Roberts, though it might afford a detachment to co-operate with the Candahar column, having ample occupatior in the countries immediately surrounding it. The reserve division under Gen. Ross will very shortly move forward, and we understand that Gen. Arbuthnot's brigade, being now completely equipped, will push on to Cabul whenever the resumption of military operations is decided upon."

It will interest Deputy-Surgeons-General of the Indian service to know that, under G.G.O. No. 13, of 1880, they are not entitled to retire on the full pension to which they would be entitled on the completion of their tour in the grade of Deputy-Surgeon-General, but only on the pension to which their length of service at the time of their retirement entitles them, plus the extra pension of a Deputy Surgeon, £250 per annum. This is the ruling of the Military Department on the point.

The Indian Daily News has made a calculation showing what the demand has been on the Indian Army, and what forces, European and Native, have been left to garrison each Presidency. The Naga outbreak is taken as locking up only two battalions of Bengal Infantry, and the result of the calculation roughly is as follows:—

BENGAL.

Artillery	52 Batteries	18	34
Cavalry	34 Regiments	19	15
Infantry	100 Battalions	49	51
Sappers	10 Companies	9	1

This, however, does not represent the full garrison of Bengal, under which term we include the Central Provinces, for it has the aid of two regiments of cavalry and fifteen and a half regiments of infantry from Madras. The actual garrison, then, of Bengal, Rajpootana, the North-West, the Punjab, and Central India may be put down as follows:—

Sappers	1 Company.
Artillery	34 Batteries.
Cavalry	17 Regiments.
Infantry	66½ Battalions.

BOMBAY.

		On service.	Left at garrison.
Cavalry	8 Regiments	6	2
Infantry	39 Battalions	17	22
Sappers	5 Companies	5	0

MADRAS.

Including Hyderabad Contingent.

Artillery	23 Batteries	7	16
Cavalry	10 Regiments	2	8
Infantry	56 Battalions	31½	24½

Now, if we take the batteries at a uniform strength of 150, the cavalry at 450, and the infantry at 750 men, which is by no means under-estimating their average strength, we have for the garrison of the Bengal Presidency and Central India 62,525 men, for Bombay 19,350 men, and for Madras 24,275 men. But from the Bengal force must be deducted at least 10,000 men for the Peshawur, Rawul Pindee, and Lahore Divisions, leaving the actual garrison between the Nerbudda, the Sutlej, and the sea about 52,000 men.

ASSISTANT-PAYMASTERS.

SIR,—I would beg you to afford space in your valuable journal for a few words on the present hard case of an efficient though little appreciated class of Naval officers,—namely, the Assistant-Paymasters. In consequence of the unprecedented slowness in the promotion to the senior rank of the assistant-paymasters of the Royal Navy, her Majesty was pleased, by Order in Council dated Oct. 30, 1877, to grant to these officers the privilege, after attaining eight years' seniority, of ranking with lieutenants of under eight years' seniority, and they were shortly afterwards ordered to wear the corresponding uniform of two rows of half-inch lace round the sleeves. The Admiralty, however, by a circular letter, dated Feb. 4, 1878, directed that assistant-paymasters' of eight years' seniority should rank with but after lieutenants of under eight years' seniority, thus very materially altering her Majesty's Order in Council. And it would seem a matter of doubt if their Lordships legally have the power to alter, by a simple letter, signed by their secretary, an Order in Council signed by the Queen. Not content, however, with depriving these officers of the rank granted to them by her Majesty, the Admiralty have, by directions contained in the new Uniform Regulations, dated May 7, 1879, but only just issued, deprived them of the second row of half-inch distinction lace on the sleeve, and substituted instead a row of three-sixteenths of an inch gold braid. No doubt, the loss of a little gold lace may seem a small matter, to those unacquainted with the Service, but it is really not so. An officer, having worn a uniform symbolising a certain rank and position, honourably earned, naturally thinks it hard, for no fault of his own, to be suddenly deprived of it. Being closely concerned in the welfare of this class of the Royal Navy, is my excuse for so far trespassing on your valuable space.—I am, &c.,

Com. Jeffery Reid Amherst, R.N., on the Retired (O) List, died at his residence, Pershore, Worcestershire, on the 7th inst., in his 84th year. The deceased officer, who was son of the late Major-Gen. Amherst, entered the Navy in April, 1809, on board the Téméraire, 98, Capt. E. Sneyd Clay, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Manley Dixon, and continued to serve on the Baltic and Brazilian stations until promoted to lieut., May 3, 1815. During the term of his servitude in the Baltic, he was much employed in escorting large convoys through the Baltic and protecting them against the repeated attacks of the enemy's flotilla. His appointments, subsequent to the peace, appear to have been May 1, 1830, to the Caledonia, 120, bearing the flag, latterly in the Channel, of Sir Manley Dixon and Sir E. Codrington, and Nov. 26, 1831, to the San Josef, 110, flag-ship of the former officer, at Plymouth. He became retired com., Jan. 20, 1864, and was promoted to the (O) List, Feb. 12, 1874.

The death is announced of Major Benjamin Dutton Kennicott, late of the Plymouth Division Royal Marine Light Infantry. The deceased officer joined the Service in August, 1855; was promoted to lieut. in April, 1859; and to capt. in August, 1867. He served in India and China in 1857-59, was present at the attack on the forts at the Peiho in June, 1859, and served in the campaign of 1860.

We (Standard) understand that King William's Town and Kokstad have been selected by the Cape Government, for political reasons, as the head quarters of the two wings of the regular Colonial force, the Cape Mounted Rifles, which corps is to be increased by 800 officers and men.

At a meeting of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, Capt. the Hon. Francis Maude, R.N., in the chair, the secretary, Mr. Edward C. Lean, drew the attention of the committee to the gallant conduct of Capt. the Hon. E. N. Fremantle, C.B., C.M.G., of the Invincible, who, during the recent passage of that ship from Alexandria to Aboukir Bay, and when she was steaming along at about six knots an hour, jumped overboard as he stood to the rescue of a man who had fallen from the vessel, and succeeded in reaching him and keeping his head above water until Sub-Lieut. C. H. H. Moore and Blacksmith's Mate Cunningham also jumped overboard and swam to the assistance of both. The boats arriving, all were safely taken on board. It was proposed from the chair, seconded by Admiral Sir Claude Buckle, K.C.B., and unanimously carried, that, subject to the approval of the Lords of the Admiralty, the gold medal of the society should be presented to Capt. Fremantle, and silver medals to Sub-Lieut. Moore and Cunningham.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in packets labelled—"JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London."

A slight sketch, called "Old Cronies," just added to the playbill of the ST. JAMES'S THEATRE, affords a pleasant proof of the neatness which Mr. Theyne Smith displays as a writer of brisk dramatic dialogue. The old cronies are Dr. Jacks, busy on the compilation of a new dictionary, and Captain Pigeon, a retired naval officer of mature years, who has at last resolved to venture upon matrimony, and is only puzzled as to the precise mode in which the momentous question should be popped. Eventually, he determines on proposing by a shilling telegram, when he learns by his prepaid reply that the lady has accepted another offer, and so the Captain contentedly relapses into his original belief in the advantages of celibacy. The two characters in the piece are excellently acted by Mr. Mackintosh and Mr. T. N. Wenman; and the scene, representing a substantially finished library, is admirably arranged. Comediettas with only two such characters are rare upon the stage, and the ingenuity displayed in preserving a dramatic interest without feminine intervention is therefore in this instance to be especially noted. The first piece of the kind, called "Two O'Clock in the Morning," was produced at Covent Garden Theatre nearly forty years ago, but that dualogue was an adaptation from the French, while this has the merit of being of home growth. Mr. Tom Taylor's popular comedy of "Still Waters Run Deep" will be performed on Saturday, with Miss Grahame as Mrs. Mildmay, Mrs. Kendal as Mrs. Sternhold, and Messrs. Hare, Kendal, and Terriss as Mr. Potter, John Mildmay, and Captain Hawksley.

"Othello" has been revived for six nights at SADLER'S WELLS, Mr. Hermann Vezin's admirable impersonation of Iago being the finest feature of the performance. Mr. Talbot, who has the peculiarity of playing Othello without darkening his visage, is more successful in the stormy speeches than in the subdued, pathetical passages. Mr. F. Wyndham is appropriately placed as Cassio, and Miss Carlisle and Mrs. Charles Calvert are competent representatives of Desdemona and Emilia. Next week Mr. Hermann Vezin will appear at this establishment as Macbeth, a character in which he excels. Hamlet is announced to follow, and at Easter a new drama is to be brought out, with elaborate appointments.

The late Andrew Halliday's drama of "The Great City," produced at Drury Lane on Easter Monday, 1867, is now being acted at the Surrey. Mr. George Sennett plays the part of Mogg the convict, formerly acted by Mr. McIntyre, and Miss Alice Ingram represents the heroine, a character in which Miss Robertson, now Mrs. Kendal, made her first appearance on the London stage. The principal situation in the piece is derived from Mr. Charles Dickens's novel of "Great Expectations."

To the lively entertainment offered by Mr. and Mrs. German Reed, at St. George's Hall, was added on Tuesday evening a bustling sketch, written by Mr. Arthur A'Beckett, and called "Three Flats." The embarrassments of a solicitor with theatrical proclivities, who is continually receiving visits intended for the occupants of the chambers on the other floors, furnish the subject of the slight plot which brings into requisition the talents of Miss Hudspeth, Mr. Alfred Bishop, Miss Edith Brandon, Mr. Alfred Reed, and Mr. Corney Grain. The company after this week take a fortnight's holiday, reappearing on Easter Monday.

At DRURY LANE, the popular comic opera of "Madame Angot" will be represented, when the theatre re-opens at Easter. Mr. Augustus Harris intends to give the aspect of novelty to a well-worn production, by introducing elaborate ballets into the three scenes.

Mr. Charles Coote, the originator of the famous "Coote and Tinney's Band," so much in request at fashionable dancing parties during the last forty years, expired last Saturday evening, at his residence, 42 New Bond Street. Mr. Coote, who was a clever composer and arranger of dance-music, had attained his seventy-second year.

ALLEN AND HANBURYS' "PERFECTED" COD LIVER OIL is not only freer from taste and smell than any oil ever before offered to the public, but it does not give rise to the nausea and eructations which render the use of ordinary oil, even of the finest quality, so repulsive. It is the pure oil, made at A. and H.'s own factory in Norway, and prepared by an entirely new and special process. It presents in the most effective condition all the invaluable properties of the remedy. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having A. and H.'s "PERFECTED" OIL. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—PURE BLOOD.—As this vital fluid, when in a healthy state, sustains and renovates every part of the living system, so, when it becomes impoverished or impure, it exerts a precisely contrary effect. It is abundantly manifest that any medicine which does not reach the circulation can never exterminate the disease; but any preparation capable of exercising a sanitary influence over the blood, must with it be carried to every living fibre of the frame. The lungs, heart, liver, kidneys, and skin all receive benefits from its more wholesome condition. Holloway's purifying Pills operate directly, powerfully, and beneficially upon the whole mass of blood, whether venous or arterial. They strengthen the stomach, stimulate the liver and kidneys, expel disease, and prolong existence.

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.

The PUREST. The MOST PALATABLE. The MOST DIGESTIBLE. The MOST EFFICACIOUS.

Incontestably proved by Thirty Years' Medical Experience to be

GENERAL DEBILITY, WASTING DISEASES of CHILDREN,
RICKETS, and ALL SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to purchase, as a going concern, the business now carried on by Mr. H. P. Truefitt, in Old Bond Street and the Burlington Arcade, London, together with Branches of the same at Brighton, Aldershot, Sandhurst, and at the Westminster Palace and Langham Hotels.

The pre-eminence of Mr. Truefitt as a manufacturer of Toilet Requisites has so long been acknowledged by the public, that his goods are sold by most of the principal shops and Co-operative Societies in the United Kingdom, and are also largely exported. Hence, in addition to the retail business carried on at the various establishments, a large and increasing Wholesale Trade has sprung up, to meet the requirements of which additional Capital may be most profitably and advantageously employed.

In addition to the Toilet and Perfumery business with which the name of "Truefitt" has for the last sixty years been associated, a large and highly profitable business has for many years been carried on in HATS and HOSIERY; including Portmanteaus, Coat Cases, Fitted and Unfitted Bags, Hat Cases, Umbrellas, Whips, Sticks, &c., and within the last two years a TAILORING DEPARTMENT has been opened, with complete success.

Mr. Truefitt was the original founder of The Toilet Club, a title since freely appropriated by Hair Dressers throughout the kingdom. The number of Subscribers is over 3,000, and the annual return for Hair Cutting, Washing, &c., irrespective of all sales in the Perfumery Department, exceeds £7,000 per annum, and in spite of the general depression in all retail trades, the gross return has been and is steadily increasing.

The Ladies' Department, probably the most perfectly appointed suite of rooms of the kind in Europe, is absolutely disconnected with that portion of the Establishment appropriated to Gentlemen. Ladies are attended by Male or Female Assistants in Saloons or Private Compartments, which are approached through handsome reception rooms, fitted specially for the sale of Flowers, Feathers, Ornamental Hair, and all novelties in Coiffures, &c., as well as Fancy Hats, Umbrellas, &c.

Among other advantages to Shareholders (both Ladies and Gentlemen), it is proposed that they shall be entitled to a DISCOUNT OF 20 PER CENT. on the ANNUAL TICKETS for Hair Cutting, Washing, &c., 25 PER CENT. upon all Articles manufactured by the Company, and 15 PER CENT. upon all other goods purchased for Cash at any of the Establishments, thus introducing into the business the TRUE principle of CO-OPERATION.

From a careful investigation into the past working of the business, and on a moderate estimate of the profits to be derived by the further development of the highly remunerative department referred to above, and by the addition of others, it is calculated that a dividend of from 12 to 15 PER CENT. may fairly be anticipated.

The various Premises, Stock, Goodwill, &c., have been valued by competent experts at £45,000, for which sum Mr. Truefitt has agreed to sell his interest in the same to the Company.

Of this amount, Mr. Truefitt has agreed to accept £22,000 in cash, and the balance of £23,000 in Fully Paid-up Shares of the Company.

Mr. Truefitt's interests being absolutely identical with those of the Company, in which he has reserved to himself so large a proportion of the Capital, he has agreed to occupy the position of Managing Director for a period of not less than five years, thus preserving the continuity of that management which has contributed so materially to the prosperity of the business.

The whole of Mr. Truefitt's interests, together with the Freeholds, Leaseholds, Plant, Machinery, &c., will be transferred to the Company, without any liability whatsoever, and the several establishments will be given over at a fixed date, thus avoiding any injurious interference with the course of the present business.

NO PROMOTION MONEY OF ANY KIND HAS BEEN—OR WILL BE—PAID.

The only Contract which has been entered into is the one above referred to, dated 26th day of February, 1880, between Mr. H. P. Truefitt, of the one part, and Robert Richard Edward, on behalf of the Company, of the other part.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares may be obtained at the London and County Bank, 21 Hanover Square, or any of its Branches; the Solicitors and Auditors; and also at the Offices of the Company in Old Bond Street.

IN reference to the alleged disorderly conduct of some of the troops in Natal and the Transvaal, there has been little or nothing said in Parliament or out of it respecting the position of the officers who are responsible for the maintenance of discipline. It is bad enough. There appears, so far as can be seen from the reports, to have been no military police and no properly constituted Provost-Marshals with the Army in Zululand, nor with the detached corps marching through or quartered in the provinces adjoining it, before and after the war. There may have been such officers, but we have heard of cases in which officers of rank took the law into their own hands, which makes it improbable that the camp police duty was properly executed. Provost-marshals and military police generally ought not to be needed in peace time, except in large camps, but there should be some authority to see that soldiers, when detected in the act of breaking civil or military law in such regions as Natal and the Transvaal, where there are really no police worthy of the name, are properly punished. Major-General Newdigate, in his report, remarks that there are no public-houses in Zululand, and that there were but few cases of "flogging" while he was in that country with his division. He has not specified what is his standard of comparison, so that we cannot form any idea of what he thinks few or many. There were, at all events, cases of flogging where the means of getting drunk were not at hand. But where there were public-houses—i.e., in Natal and the Transvaal—and temptations to drink "more than was good for them" were ready for the men, the power of dealing with the results of temptation was limited. In future, public-houses or not, cases of flogging will be still fewer, whether there be more or less men deserving of it in the Army. The new Act only came into force in South Africa on March 1, 1880, but it is understood that copies of it were sent out to the military authorities in the autumn of last year, and that they were led to believe that, as the troops in Natal and the Transvaal were held by the lawyers not to be "on active service," it was not lawful to inflict corporal punishment. But if Secocoeni's levies were enemies, surely the whole region might come under the definition of a country "partly occupied by an enemy?" The conditions to which officers in command of troops in the field are reduced by the recent change in the law, will be best understood by the summary of the provisions of the Act of 1879. The state of things is this. Sec. 22, Mutiny Act, and "Article of War" 118, enact that no court-martial shall for any offence committed during the time of peace within the Queen's dominions have power to award corporal punishment, "provided that any court-martial may sentence any soldier to corporal punishment while on active service in the field, or on board a ship not in commission." "Active service" is defined to be "when a soldier is attached to or forms part of a force which is engaged in operations against the enemy, or is engaged in military operations in a country or place wholly or partly occupied by an enemy, or is in military occupation of a foreign country." Now, it is asserted that the authorities in Natal and the Transvaal conceived that the forces in those territories were not on active service, and that it was not competent to any court-martial to order flogging, no matter what might be the offence, or the circumstances in which it was committed. Next, let us see what are the powers of summary punishment possessed by officers when in the field. Article of War 164 allows "Provost-marshals, duly appointed according to the established usages of war and rules of our Service," to punish offenders whom they or their assistants may detect in the actual commission of crime or breach of good-order and military discipline. If the Provost does not see the offender commit the crime, but that sufficient proof of it exists, he shall report to the "Commander of our Army in the field, who is hereby empowered to deal with the case as he may deem most conducive to the maintenance of good-order and military discipline." The new Act forbids the Provost inflicting any punishment on his own authority. He can only "report" to the officer in command, who "may" thereupon, if an ordinary court-martial cannot be assembled, summon a field general court-martial to adjudicate upon any offence against the property or person of any inhabitant or resident, "which court may award any sentence which it would be lawful for any general court-martial to award for such offence." And what then, and next? The execution of the sentence? Not at all. The proceedings must be laid before and be confirmed by the officer in command, who may be far away. Take the case of an officer in charge of a detachment in Natal going down to the sea-coast to take ship with the rest of the regiment, which is going to India or to the Mediterranean from Durban. At some small hamlet a few of his men—"the rough characters" of Colonel Stanley—who have heard of the debates in Parliament last year, and of the new Act, proceed to a carouse on the maddening stuff called "Cape smoke." Then comes the state of things to which Colonel Stanley possibly referred, when he told the House of Commons, "They must remember that the point on which the British soldier was most likely to fail was in respect of his duty towards the inhabitants of the district through which he might be passing." There is a row, and there is great disorder. The men engaged in it are arrested by the picket, and are marched off to the camp, where they are placed under arrest,—i.e., excused from duty—in the guard-tents for the night. Next morning the detachment marches off, and the men who have been arrested have to continue their march—for there are generally no prisons, no magistrate, no police, except at long intervals—and they have, literally, a better time of it, barring their headaches and bruises, than their comrades, because there is no adequate punishment for their offence. The lesson is not lost. The contagion spreads, and the unfortunate officer in charge is liable to official displeasure if the acts, which he cannot check, become known to the authority. This is no fancy sketch. Such is the effect of the new Mutiny Act.

The concessions to the officers of the Army in the new Warrant, which will be found elsewhere, are just, if not ample. The words are so plain, that there is no need of explaining the provisions. But if service between 18 and 20 years of age be reckoned, why not go lower? Is there anything sacred in the figures 18? Moreover, the refusal to reckon the two years between 16 and 18 only affects a limited number of officers, daily growing smaller. The extra expense would, therefore, be infinitesimal. The only justification for the compulsory retirement of officers in the prime of life is to be found in the necessity of creating a flow of promotion. This, however, is a wooden, clumsy system, equally injurious to the State and hard on individuals, for the good and bad officers are alike placed upon the shelf after completing a certain number of years' service. Surely the object of the authorities ought to be to get rid of the bad or indifferent officers, in order to make way for their more capable comrades. As matters stand now, however, the capable is frequently removed to make way for the incapable man. Only by the frank adoption of selection, tempered in the lower grades by seniority, can this absurdity be got rid of without incurring the danger of stagnation. Pure selection as regards promotion from the lower grades would not answer, for many officers are slow in developing their military qualities, and few subalterns have an opportunity of showing what they are made of. Besides, many officers begin ill, and after a time settle down to their work and turn out eventually well. We would, therefore, suggest that the majority of second lieutenants should be promoted to the rank of lieutenant by seniority, unless they should prove not quite up to the mark. With regard to the promotion to the rank of captain, we advocate a large measure of selection, for after from eight to twelve years' service, an officer's qualifications are pretty well known, and fitness for the higher rank, and the command of a company or troop is one of considerable importance in these days. Still, there are many lieutenants who are solid, if not brilliant, and not likely, at all events, to do any harm if placed in command of a company. Probably, the object in view—namely, the efficiency of the Service, combined with a stimulus to zeal—could be best effected by promoting by selection one in three of the second lieutenants, and two in three of the lieutenants. When, however, the rank of captain has been attained, all promotion should be by selection. A major, even in peace time, is frequently called upon to exercise the command of a regiment or wing, and in the field he is, of course, still more liable to be placed in that important and responsible position. This is especially the case in the little wars which we are so frequently waging, and it is obvious that the incapacity of an officer commanding four companies, a couple of squadrons, or a battery of artillery may bring about a signal disaster. The argument in favour of invariably promoting by selection to the command of a regiment is even stronger. Few men are fit for the post, which requires an unusual combination of qualities and qualifications. On the capacity of the colonel depends not only the happiness, but the efficiency of the regiment; and the mischief which a bad commanding officer causes, it takes some time to repair. It has been suggested to quicken the flow by giving the colonel's rank after three years' command, and making that the term instead of five years; but we do not advocate the measure as at present advised. Going a step higher, we cannot conceive any impartial person advocating promotion to the rank of major-general by mere seniority. A man may be a very good commander of a regiment, and yet quite unfit for the position of a major-general. It would seem, however, as if the contrary were the case, and the result is that we have a bloated list of Generals, a large proportion of whom are both unfit for employment and, in many cases, unwilling to accept it. Of course, the Commander-in-Chief is at liberty to select for appointment those whom he considers best qualified, but what is the object of having a long list of so-called "Active Generals," if, practically, only a small proportion are really available? The effect of the system suggested as above would be that in each rank there would be annually a large number of voluntary retirements, and that only the capable and zealous would attain to the rank of major-general. It would be, in fact, a system of automatic elimination. When an officer found that he was being passed over, he would, as in the German Army, take the hint and retire. Thus only the extremely capable would survive. It would be literally the survival of the fittest. Not only would such a plan stimulate zeal, and provide us with the best officers for the highest grades, but it would promote voluntary retirement to such an extent as to render compulsory retirement, save in the case of Generals on being superannuated, exceptional. The objection made by the Authorities to any system of selection is, that in time of peace it is impossible to discover who are the best men, and on that of the Army at large, that selection means simply favouritism. These two objections can, however, be easily disposed of. In every regiment public opinion is quite clear as to the merits of different officers, and the colonel is insensibly, to a certain extent, influenced by that public opinion in forming his own estimates. The general is also, to a certain extent, guided by the colonel, and not only is there one colonel and general, but generally several colonels and generals who have recorded their opinion of each officer's qualifications. It is, therefore, idle to pretend that it is impossible for the Commander-in-Chief to approximate pretty closely to the truth in comparing the merits of officers. If it really is impossible, then the whole system of annual reports is a sham. As to selection and favouritism being synonymous, the answer is, that in these days of close watching by Parliament and the Press, a Commander-in-Chief greatly addicted to favouritism would soon find his position untenable. Besides, we can scarcely imagine that colonels, Generals of Districts, and the Commander-in-Chief would all be in a conspiracy against merit. The system of promotion by selection has worked well abroad, why should it not answer in England? The question is whether, on the whole, it would not work better than the one which now prevails, and which certainly furnishes little stimulus to zeal, and does not facilitate the rapid promotion of the best men.

As at present arranged, we believe it is the intention of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh to proceed to Ireland next week, to inspect the Naval Reserve.

It is with regret that we learn of the death of Manthorp Bey, of the Imperial Ottoman Navy, at Constantinople, on the 9th inst. Captain Charles Manthorp, who retired from the Royal Navy, October 1, 1873, surrendered his commission in 1877 rather than give up his appointment in the Turkish Fleet. He reconnoitred the Toultcha barrier during the late war, and led an expedition against a small Russian force on shore, having manned and armed his boats and landed to attack the enemy. When second mate in the Miranda, in 1854, he was highly spoken of for his able assistance in the Kola river, and in Litscha Fiord.

The introduction of new breech-loading ordnance for service afloat will necessitate a considerable alteration in the present pattern of gun-carriage, and experiments are to be immediately undertaken to test the capabilities of a carriage which has been designed.

Rear-Admiral Hood, C.B., with the Channel Squadron under his command, will to-day leave Lisbon for Gibraltar, and will arrive there on the 27th; leaving that place on April 10, reaching Madeira on the 15th; leave on the 22nd, and be at Gibraltar again on April 27.

Portsmouth is, we are glad to hear, endeavouring to raise a battery or two of Naval Artillery Volunteers, which will, unless the movement at Portsmouth assumes large dimensions, be attached to the London Brigade.

The extension of the family circle afloat progresses, and the latest domestic residence under the pendant is the Hibernia, as we hear their Lordships have granted the application of Commander Sir Francis Blackwood that he might be permitted to have his family on board. Former captains of home ships, who were compelled to land their belongings under the Order of 1869, now begin to think that the inconvenience they suffered "for the good of the Service" almost gives them a claim for compensation.

Her Majesty the Queen will, according to present arrangements, embark on board the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert at Portsmouth on Thursday, and will at once proceed for Cherbourg. The Royal yacht will be accompanied across the Channel by the Alberta, Enchantress, and Galatea.

Commander Lord Charles Beresford is at Curraghmore, on electioneering business, and it is confidently expected that he will again be returned for County Waterford. Captain Colomb, R.M.A., has been asked to stand, in the Conservative interest, for Youghal. He is spoken of by the local press as "a well-known, popular landlord, likely to be acceptable to all classes." Captain Verney and Rear-Admiral Carr Glyn are working on the other side, and hope to represent Portsmouth and Chatham respectively. Captain Bedford Pim retires from the representation of Gravesend, for which place Captain Champion. R.M.L.I., has consented to stand, in the Conservative interest. We wish him success, more especially as his corps never, to our knowledge, was represented in Parliament by one of its own body.

The long-wished for depôt for naval stores at Monte Video is at last to be established, the Government of Uruguay having consented to Monte Video being made the head-quarters of the British squadron on the Brazils station. As a consequence, the depôt which has for years existed at Rio Janeiro will be abolished.

The survey of the Sea of Marmora has not yet been completed, and the Fawn has been ordered from Malta to continue this duty. Captain Wharton has been reappointed on promotion, although, as far as we are aware, the Admiralty have never publicly notified this reappointment, but it will be readily acknowledged a better officer for the work could not be found.

The Thunderer has been ordered to Italian waters, and it is not improbable that Captain Colomb will thus be given an opportunity of witnessing some of the trials of the Duilio and her guns, and thus supplement the services of Captain Nicholson and Mr. Barnaby. The Thunderer has orders to sail from Malta for Naples to-day.

The Nordenfeldt gun, with which the accident happened on board the Northampton, is expected to arrive in England next week, and steps will then be taken to introduce modifications in this type of gun which, it is hoped, will prevent the possibility of a recurrence of such an accident. Meanwhile, the Admiralty has issued instructions for certain precautions to be taken in the use of this gun in rapid firing.

Vice-Admiral Robert Coote, C.B., was at Singapore in the Vigilant on February 17, and was about to visit Sarawak, Sooloo, and Manila.

The Dragon has been ordered to Madagascar, to protect British interests.

Mr. W. P. Hooper, one of the principal clerks in the Accountant-General's Department, has recently been paying a round of visits to ships paying off at the home ports, for the purpose of reporting to the Admiralty upon the working of the system of payment. It was this duty which called for his presence at the paying-off of the Sirius, and not on account of the absence of the paymaster, as reported.

In consequence of the Arrow having been removed from Greenwich, where she formerly did duty in surveying instruction, orders have been given for the Wildfire or Trent to proceed to Greenwich every Wednesday up to the end of the present term, to fulfil those duties.

An addition has been made to our Surveying Service by the employment of a schooner, called the Meda, in service on the coast of Western Australia. The command has been given to Staff Commander Archdeacon, who was appointed to the Commodore's ship in Australia in August, 1875, for surveying duties.

Captain Bedford Pim is under the impression that his promotion to retired flag rank has been improperly withheld, and we presume that he must have some good reason for entertaining this view. The First Lord of the Admiralty, on the other hand, declares that the Orders in Council have been carried out with great exactitude, and that Captain Pim has no right to this step in rank. As it is a matter of opinion, it has been asked on behalf of the petitioning officers that the case might be referred to the law officers, but this, Mr. Smith says, he does not think "would be right." How happy a Navy we should have, if the Admiralty never did anything more wrong!

The Condor has been despatched from Salonica to Catterina, to communicate with the Consul-General, and to place in his hands the ransom required by the brigands for the release of Colonel Synge. The Invincible, which was ordered to Salonica, relative to this matter, has returned to Malta, as she could be of no service.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., intends to leave Malta this week in the Helicon, for a visit to Sir Henry Layard, at Constantinople.

The good days have gone by for those officers who have managed to draw special-duty allowances for lengthened periods, thus obtaining a very considerable addition to their pay, for the attention of the Admiralty has been drawn to this matter, and it is now directed that should the service on which an officer may be employed entitle him to subsistence-allowance for more than fourteen nights consecutively at the same place, a reduction of one-third shall be made in the allowance during any further stay at that place. The reduction will, however, not take place in the case of officers not drawing subsistence-allowance under the circumstances stated, until there either be a change in the particular service on which they may be employed, or until six months have elapsed from the issue of this order.

The Vega may be expected at Portsmouth on Monday, when Professor Nordenskiöld and the officers of the expedition will be received by Captain Sir George Nares, K.C.B., Commander Beaumont, of the Excellent, Lieutenant May, of the Vesuvius, and Lieutenant Conybeare, of the Vernon, and other officers who served in the Alert and Discovery in 1875-76. On Wednesday, the officers of the Vega expedition will dine with the Royal Geographical Society, at Willis's Rooms. The committee of the proposed Arctic ballooning exploration is anxious to have the counsel of Professor Nordenskiöld, although the equipment of Commander Cheyne's expedition will not be completed so soon as was intended, it having been decided last Saturday that May, 1881, shall be the date of departure, the general election having made it improbable that the funds needed could be collected in time for the expedition to start this spring.

The new Naval breech-loading guns which are being constructed are after a pattern approaching that of the French system.

The late crew of the Alexandra, Sir Geoffrey Hornby's flagship, are now homeward bound in the Inconstant, which was ordered to leave Malta for Portsmouth on Thursday last.

It is now believed that the remains of the officer lately discovered in the sands at Manukau Heads, New Zealand, are those of the late Lieutenant William T. Mudge, who was lost with the Orpheus; and the Secretary of the Admiralty will be glad to hear from the relatives of that officer, with the view to satisfactorily identifying the remains. Particulars of the finding of the body and a description of the remains will be found under the head "A Relic of the Orpheus," in the Army and Navy Gazette of January 17 and 24.

Although the Boxer was ordered home from the North America station as a precaution, it being feared that she had not been properly disinfected after yellow fever, we hear that the report upon this subject which was called for from Captain Alington has been considered quite satisfactory.

The Coquette was despatched by telegraphic orders on Thursday from the Piræus to Smyrna, for the protection of British interests, there being reason to apprehend disturbances between the Mussulmans and Christians.

A Coastguard pension of the first class has become vacant, by the death of Commander James B. Kinsman, and an officer will be advanced from the second-class list. The list of Coastguard pensions is only open to officers appointed to the Coastguard before 1860, and the date of the last award is May 17, 1875.

By the death of Admiral Westphal, the Navy has, we believe, lost its oldest officer. An account of the services of this gallant veteran will be found in the "Obituary" column.

In consequence of the death of Commander Kennett, the Governor of the Naval Knights of Windsor, a vacancy has arisen on the list of Naval Knights. The Naval Knights take precedence according to their seniority as Lieutenants, and are appointed under the will of the late Samuel Travers, Esq., by which they "are to be superannuated or disabled lieutenants of English men-of-war," and shall be "single men," without children, inclined to lead a virtuous, studious, and devout life, to be removed if they give occasion for scandal. The deceased officer entered the Navy in 1826, and was promoted to lieutenant Nov. 1839, and, with the exception of a few months at the commencement of 1841, was employed from 1839 until 1846 in the Satellite and Pique, on the North America station. He held command of a station in the Coastguard at Woodbridge Haven from 1847, and afterwards at Christchurch, Hants, and at East Cowes, until promoted to retired commander Jan. 1866. He was appointed Naval Knight of Windsor Nov. 29, 1867, and Governor, August 15, 1873.

The decision of the Admiralty that the pay and allowances of the Army and the Royal Marines cannot be assimilated does not give satisfaction to the corps, and we have received letters from non-commissioned officers taking objection to our agreement with the view that the conditions of the two Services differ so much, that no true comparison can be made between them, and now that the scale of pensions has been assimilated, the Marine is as well off as the soldier. Having been informed in a letter that "we, the Royal Marines, feel confident that you cannot be in possession of the real facts of the case," we have taken the opinion of both Marine and Army officers on a comparative statement of the pay, &c., of the two Services which was enclosed, and the verdict is that it is one-sided, the Marines having overlooked the question of stoppages in the Line, and having made no allowance for the saving which a Marine is enabled to effect when embarked and given free rations, and the advantages of having stationary head-quarters, instead of being bucketed about with wife and family, and being put to unavoidable expenses on each move made by a regiment. It is very difficult to make an exact comparison of the two Services, but if the correspondents in the Royal Marines who have written to us will take an opportunity of talking the matter over with some of their brethren in the Line, we believe they will find much food for comfort in so doing. In the matter of lodging-money, the Marine appears to be at a disadvantage, as this allowance ceases when he embarks; but the fact of all stoppages then ceasing, there being no abatement for rations, has doubtless been considered as an equivalent. As regards promotion from the ranks, the Marines are at a decided disadvantage. The only possible commission attainable is that of quartermaster, and there have been but seven quartermasters available during eleven years. In the Army there are are more outlets from the ranks, commissions being attainable as adjutants, quartermasters, sub-lieutenants, sub-assistant-commissaries, and conductors (warrant rank). It would be well if some additional chances of promotion could be found for deserving non-commissioned officers of the Royal Marines.

The increase to the German Army is portentous. Whilst we are peddling about our short-service, and tinkering our wretched Reserve, the German War Minister adds 11 regiments, or 44 battalions and 40 batteries, or 320 guns, to the prodigious force which is already available. According to the Pall Mall Gazette, he will then be in a position to put 20 Army Corps on the frontier in a week, and the Ersatz Reserve in three years will furnish 150,000, or the making of six more Army Corps. The Landwehr is to be increased, so as to furnish 12 more Army Corps, equal in all to 38 corps complete; and over and beyond and behind them, there will still be 100,000 men of the Second Reserve, and 500,000 of the Landsturm. And yet Germany is not so very much more populous than the British Empire.

"Colonel the O'Gorman Mahon," we read of, in the papers. Why? The gallant Member was Captain in the 90th Regiment in the Crimea, the climate of which did not agree with him, and his name does not appear in the Index of the Army List as Colonel.

There is no use in publishing irritating revelations of what might have been, but was not. The statement that Russia proposed an anti-German alliance to France last year is best read by the light of to-day's news, that Prince Orloff is recalled, and that General Chanzy is leaving St. Petersburg, for his usual "vacance."

The attempt to affix on General Roberts the odium of cruel execution and unjustifiable severity appears to us to have signally failed. We trust the endeavour to shake his hold of Cabul which is imminent may be equally unsuccessful. There is a suspicious absence of news from Stewart's force and the British Afghan camp.

Viscount Melgund has made a smart attack on Mr. A. Forbes, in the Nineteenth Century, or more correctly speaking, he has delivered a brisk riposte to an article in which the special correspondent of the Daily News criticised the new rules for the regulation of correspondents in the field, which have been just "let drop like a hot potato." Lord Melgund, who was one of the order, and who wrote, if we mistake not, for the Morning Post, says a great deal that is very true, but much of what he says is true of the Press itself. "There's the rub." The most useful information which the Russians received during the war of 1854-5 was derived from the "Shipping Intelligence" of the English papers, which noted the departure, cargo, crew, equipment, &c., of every ship that sailed, as well as the preparations at the ports. It is not so much the writings of correspondents, if they be men of experience and discretion, which do harm, as the licence of the Press; and in war-time there is certainly a necessity for the control of all news relating to intended movements, or to the position and strength of forces, by sea or land.

In a despatch dated January 2, Sir Garnet Wolseley alludes to the services of Captain Macleod, the political agent with the Swazi King, in his expedition against Sekukuni, but we have not noticed any recognition of those services. Sir G. Wolseley wrote on December 20, "I attribute much of the successful result achieved by us in our dealings with these Swazis, to the good-sense with which they were managed by Captain Macleod, late 79th Highlanders, who was the special commissioner attached to them, and who accompanied them throughout the campaign. I have, therefore, great pleasure in recommending his services to your most favourable consideration." And what then?

In the despatch in which Major-General Crealock expresses his "regret that he has no brilliant victory like Gingihlovo, Kambula, or Ulundi to record," he mentions in terms of praise Commodore Richards; Captain Campbell, of the Active; Captain Brackenbury, of the Shah; and Captain Romilly, of the Boadicea, in connection with the services of the Navy and Naval Brigade; Colonel Pemberton (60th) and Colonel Clarke (57th), and his Brigade-major, Captain Hant (31st); Brigadier Pearson, and his Brigade-major, Captain MacGregor (29th); Colonel Rowlands, Lieutenant-Colonel Parnell (3rd), Lieutenant-Colonel Lambert (88th), Lieutenant-Colonel Welman (99th), Major Tredennick (57th), Captain Tufnell (60th), Lieutenant-Colonel Bruce (91st), Major Duncan (R.A.), Major Ellaby (R.A.), Lieutenant Lloyd (R.A.), Major Barrow (19th Hussars), Major Barton (7th), Commandant Nettleton, Lieutenant-Colonel Walker (99th), Captain Cardew (82nd), Deputy-Commissary Gordon (Ordnance), Assistant-Commissary-General Healy, Dr. Tarrant, Captain (now Major) Byng, Captain Hutton (60th), Lieutenant Colesworth (naval A.D.C.), Dr. Birdwood, Captain Addison (N.V.G.), Captain Rawlins (90th), Lieutenant Courtenay (20th Hussars), Captain Lord Gifford (57th), Captain the Hon. W. Elliot (93rd), Captains Lumley (formerly of the Prussian service), Hixon, and Gordon (of Lonsdale's Horse), Captain de Burgh and Captain Cook (N.H.), the Chief Iantzi, all the Chaplains, Captain Poole (R.A.), Captain Bally (R.A.), and he specially alludes to the service and assistance he received from Colonel Reilly, R.A., after he joined the Column.

It is proposed, we hear, that three clasps should be given with the South African war medal, one for the Kaffir war, one for the Zulu campaign, and one for the operations against Sekukuni, and it is not yet known whether a separate clasp will be granted for the defence of Rorke's Drift. It is generally thought, however, that this would be a fitting form of acknowledgment of the important services rendered by the company of the 24th Regiment, who certainly had far heavier fighting than the men engaged in the Sekukuni campaign.

We do not think it necessary now to reproduce the forecast of the report of Lord Airey's commission which has appeared in a contemporary. Already there is an uneasy feeling that the most valuable of the recommendations will not be carried, because of the expense, but "something must be done." It will be time when the elections are over to see what the War Office thinks the "something" ought to be.

The distinguished-service reward vacant by the death of Lieutenant-General T. E. Lacy has been awarded to Major-General Sir J. C. M'Leod, K.C.B.; and that left vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-General J. R. Stuart, C.B., to the colonelcy of the 54th Foot, to Lieutenant-General R. Bruce. Sir John M'Leod entered the Army April 21, 1846, and served the Crimean, Indian Mutiny, and Ashantee campaigns. General Bruce obtained his first commission June 9, 1838, and served in the Kaffir war of 1851-53.

To the list of Service candidates who seek election to the new Parliament have now to be added Lieutenant-Colonel. J. B. Sterling, Coldstream Guards, who contests East Devon as a Liberal; and Lieutenant H. G. Leigh, 1st Life Guards, who has come forward as Conservative candidate for Tamworth.

Captain H. W. Griffith, 23rd Foot, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Major-General H. D'O. Torrens, C.B., commanding the Belfast District.

Lieutenant F. T. Miles. 18th Hussars, extra Aide-de-Camp, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Lieutenant-General Sir Patrick M'Dougall, K.C.M.G., commanding the troops in British North America, vice Captain the Hon. W. FitzW. Elliot, 93rd Highlanders, resigned.

There is no truth in the statement of a society paper that Brevet Major W. F. Butler, C.B., half-pay, late 69th Regiment, is to succeed Colonel C. F. T. Daniell, half-pay, late 28th Regiment, as Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General of the Northern District,—indeed, the appointment has already been offered to another officer, Colonel G. P. Prevost, at present commanding the 1st Battalion 23rd Fusiliers.

We understand that Colonel W. P. Collingwood, who commanded the 2nd Battalion 21st Fusiliers in Zululand, and to whose case we have several times referred, was recommended to the Colonial Office by the Horse Guards for a C.M.G., but that the Colonial Office refused to submit his name to her Majesty. We trust, however, that Colonel Collingwood's services will not be allowed to pass altogether without recognition.

As the rain clouds are forming to let fall a shower of honours on those engaged in the recent South African campaigns, it is not inexpedient to direct attention to the claims of the volunteers and of the local troops to Imperial recognition. The rewards for the Zulu war have been copious; indeed, there has been nothing like them for fullness and scope since the Coomassie deluge, although there have been some remarkable instances of neglect, but exceptions prove the rule. Some partial distribution of honours has taken place, but it would seem as if the authorities had overlooked the services of those who were engaged in the Gaika and Galika operations, and above all, the officers and men employed in putting down the rising in Griqualand West. On July 28, 1879, a resolution was passed by the Legislative Council of the province in the following terms:—"That the thanks of this House be given to His Excellency, Colonel Lanyon, C.B., C.M.G., Administrator and Commander-in-Chief, and to Lieutenant-Colonel Warren, R.E., C.M.G., and the Volunteer Forces of this province, for their gallant, constant, and eminent services in the field, by which the late general rising of the native tribes, both within and without our border, has been suppressed." This resolution, prettily picked out in colours on a piece of paper, has been received, we believe, by Colonel Lanyon and Lieutenant-Colonel Warren; but there has been no recognition, as far as we are aware, on the part of the Government of the sacrifices, bravery, and endurance of the officers and men of the Volunteer Force. And the Griqualand West war, which had neither an Isandula nor a Kambula, seems to have been left out in the cold.

Sir H. Hoare, once the fashionable Radical Member for Chelsea, takes the chair at a meeting for securing the return of the First Lord of the Admiralty and of the gallant Sir Charles Russell for Westminster. Lord Beaumont joins the Carlton Club, abandoning the traditions of his house. The head of the Weld-Blundells marches over to the Conservatives. On the other hand, Lord Derby has pronounced definitively for the Liberals, and more secessions are spoken of. What allies Liberalism has abroad may be judged from the correspondence between M. Pyat and the incorrigible Garibaldi, if, indeed, it be genuine. Let it be remembered that Hartmann is accused of a crime in which cowardice, atrocity, and cruelty contend for pre-eminence. Garibaldi, brave and humane, is represented as declaring that "Hartmann is a brave young fellow, deserving the esteem and gratitude of all honourable men," and as holding up for "the admiration of the people" such villains as Hödel, Nobiling, and the like. No one but a madman or a dangerous miscreant could write,—"All rulers, from the mightiest king down to the more insignificant president of a Republic, must be done away with, whether it be by peaceful means or by violence," Such are the words attributed to Felix Pyat, writing from London on March 1. Does he include the Queen?

There is no doubt that the real friends of the Volunteer force are those who, like Lieutenant-Colonel Malet, strive to eliminate the civilian element as much as possible in favour of the more purely military; and the War Office would do well to listen to these true friends, in preference to the half-hearted admirers who have shrugged their shoulders at the idea of changes in the direction of those which the "soldier Volunteers" suggest, and which, one by one, have been carried out. Colonel Malet hopes, and here we agree with him, that more might be made of the Volunteers, that the material is good, and is capable of being converted into a feeder to the Regular Army, in case of necessity. So most officers think who, like Colonel Malet, have had experience of both Services; and we shall yet hope to learn that the War Office has taken the subject into consideration. Doubtless, Lord Airey's Committee will have something to say on the point. If it does not, it would be a wise thing to assemble a mixed Committee to go thoroughly into the matter, for whilst our neighbours are doing their very utmost to bring every available man under arms, we cannot afford to rest on our laurels.

Cavalry officers are asking one another "where are the despatches of the Cavalry action fought before Cabul on December 11th,—some three months and a week ago?" If these despatches were forthcoming, the Army and the public would know who really gave the order for the cavalry to charge. It is all very well making a scape-goat of General Massy. Some-one, of course, is to blame, but common justice demands that censure should rest on the right person. It is unfortunate that these despatches have not been called for in the House. Now all the Members are busy canvassing and full of the coming election, but the matter should not be allowed to rest. General Massy, we understand, is on his way home, and his reputation as a soldier rests on his being proved incompetent to command a cavalry brigade. Those who have been under his command at Cabul—and who should know better?—speak of him as having been "cruelly treated." But the Duke is not one to allow a brave soldier—and, as his subordinates will have it, a "dashing and most able leader"—to be permanently ruined for life, at the caprice of those to whom he may have given offence.

The following special telegram is published by the Pioneer:—"Gen. Travers has declined the Madras command, which Sir Donald Stewart has accepted. Sir Neville Chamberlain remains till he has been relieved."

With reference to the subject of the amalgamation of the British and the Indian Medical Services, a Calcutta paper hears that a proposal has been made by the present Surgeon-General, Indian Medical Department, to separate the Army from the Civil Medical Department; and that in the event of the proposal being sanctioned by the Home Government, Dr. Beatson will probably remain in charge of the Civil Medical Department until the tenure of his office expires, in November next.

The Cabul correspondent of the Times telegraphs on the 14th inst.:—"The troops at Cabul are about to be rein forced by four additional regiments of native infantry—the 22nd, 24th, 27th, and 45th. This will bring up the infantry to the strength of 16 battalions. Two divisions will be formed, each to consist of two brigades. The present Reserve Division will cease to exist under that name, and its present commander, General J. Ross, C.B., will take command of one of the Cabul Divisions; while General Roberts will command the other, as well as the whole of the troops in Northern Afghanistan. General Bright will command the troops holding the line of communications from Butkhak, the march from Cabul to Jamrud, one march from Peshawur. This arrangement will relieve General Roberts of much anxiety and the disposal of many matters of detail, which, added to his duties as military and political chief, at present harass him."

The Standard says:—"Major-Gen. Sir Francis Roberts, V.C., K.C.B., will come to England for a short time, on vacating the command of the Cabul Field Force, but will return to India to take up a permanent appointment on the Staff of the Indian Army."

We (Times of India) believe that the Government of India has approved of the concentration of the Bombay reserve division, as originally suggested by the Bombay authorities, but no orders on the subject have yet been issued. According to the proposed arrangement the troops composing the reserve division will be concentrated as follows.—At Jacobabad, three native cavalry regiments; at Sukkur, 3rd Regt. Native Infantry; at Hyderabad, F-2 Royal Artillery, 24th Regt. Native Infantry; at Karachi, D-B Royal Horse Artillery, head-quarters 2-11th Regt., 15th Regt., 9th Regt. Native Infantry, 23rd Regt. Native Infantry; at Bombay, wing 2-11th Regt. All the troops named above have been, or will be, equipped for service, so that if the reserve division has to take the field during the forthcoming campaign, it can move forward at once.

Special passage for the families of the following officers have been provided in H.M.S. Serapis, which sailed from India on the 17th ult. for England:—Lieut.-Col. Davies, 16th B.N.I.; Lieut.-Col. Tanner, 2-8th Foot; Lieut.-Col. Campbell, 30th Punjab N.I.; Major Cruickshank, 32nd Pioneers; Major Webster, 30th Punjab N.I.; Capt. Blair, 1-18th Foot; Capt. Garnett, 66th Foot; Capt. Nares, 2-17th Foot; Capt. Chard, 2-7th Foot; Lieut. Sirr, R.E.; Lieut. Ruck, 2-8th Foot; Qrmr. Spencer, 2-8th Foot, to Malta; widow of Qrmr. Fuller, 9th Lancers; widow of Major Cock, Staff Corps; widow of Lieut. Rice, R.E. The following have been granted passages in H.M.S. INDIAN ARMY REORGANISATION.

The following are the principal recommendations of the Army Commission which has been sitting at Simla, as telegraphed by the Calcutta correspondent of the Times:—

"The Native Army is not to be reduced, but reorganised on the following strength:—Infantry regiments, eight companies, or 912 men; cavalry, four squadrons, or 600 men; two European officers to be added to the present complement. Four territorial army corps to be formed, one for employment in Bengal, Assam, the North-West Provinces, and Oude; the second for the Punjab, the Trans-Indus frontier, and advanced posts; the third for Bombay, the Central Provinces, Central India, Rajpootana, and Scinde; the fourth for Madras, Hyderabad, and Burmah. Each army corps is to be commanded by a lieutenant-general, with a complete staff, consisting of representatives of all arms, and a military secretary. The pay of the commandant of each army corps is to be 4,500 rupees monthly. He is to have full control of his territorial army, the administration of its affairs being decentralised. The commanders of the army corps are to be selected equally from the Indian and the British Army—in the former case, by the Commander-in-Chief in India, with the approval of the Viceroy; in the latter case, by the War Office or the Horse Guards. The Commander-in-Chief is to lose his seat in the Council, and to hold the same relative position in regard to the Military Secretariat of the Indian Government as the Duke of Cambridge to the War Department. The Viceroy to be the supreme head of the Army in India. The military member of the Council to be a Cabinet Minister in charge of the War Department. Garrisons to be rearranged, and several single-battalion stations to be abandoned. The commands at Julpigoree, Berhampore, Daka, Bhaugulpore, Segowlee, Gowhatty, Tezpore, Dibroghur, Jowai, and various Assam outposts, as also Hazareebagh, to be abandoned. As regards European troops in the North-West, Chunar, Goruckpore, Seetapore, Moradabad, Shahjehanpore, Mutra, Sepree, Lullutpore, and Jhanzi. In Bombay, Hyderabad, Scinde, Bhooj, Mehedpoor, Anjar, Deesa, Milligaum, Hoshungabad, and Dharwar to cease to exist as stations for troops; and possibly the British troops at Jubbulpore and Kamptee to be removed to Pachmaree. Troops to be be removed from Vellore, Quilon, Trichoor, Trivandrum, Pallamcottah, Merkara, French Rocks, and Vizianagram, in Madras, and British troops from Cannanore and Wellington. Arrangements to be so made that at any time an army corps consisting of 55,000 infantry, 12,600 cavalry, 240 field guns, 18 siege guns, and 21 companies of Sappers, may be immediately mobilised. Plans for mobilising the same, and for attack and defence, to be always ready in the Commander-in-Chief's office. The strength of the British Cavalry regiments in India to be four squadrons, or 586 men; of the British Infantry regiments to be eight companies, or 1,044 men; the Horse Artillery to be reduced by five batteries. The number of mountain batteries to be raised to eight, field batteries to 28, and heavy field batteries to 17. A new corps of sappers to be raised of three companies. A new guide corps to be formed; also two native pioneer regiments. Each army corps to have a reserve in the Native Army consisting of 200 per regiment, to be formed as the first reserve, and to consist of Sepoys with from 12 to 21 years' service, with pay at four rupees monthly. The reserve to be embodied at a regimental depôt for training by European officers every two years. These men after 20 years to be drafted to the second reserve, or pension list, on the same pay. They are only liable to garrison duty or to duty on an emergency up to 32 years' service, when they must permanently retire. There is to be no European or native cavalry reserve. No local army recommended, but the short-service system to be modified. European troops to be located on the hills as much as possible. Army commands to be divided into eight first-class districts, commanded by a general officer with pay at 3,500 rupee monthly; eight second-class districts, commanded by a general officer with pay at 2,500 rupees monthly: eight third-class districts, commanded by a general officer with pay at 2,000 rupees monthly. Besides these commands, six important garrisons to be given to colonels on the Staff, with Staff allowance of 800 rupees monthly, in addition to pay of rank. Minor station commands divided into two classes, first with 300 rupees added to pay of rank, second with 200 rupees added to pay of rank. Native regiments to be recruited at certain fixed recruiting grounds. Promotion to the rank of native officer to be made in Bengal and the Punjab by direct appointment, from among cadets of good family who have received a military education at a military school. In other army corps promotion to be by selection. Native States to be induced to reduce their armies gradually. Native contingents to be regarded as separate and purely local bodies. The troops of Native States to be forbidden to carry arms of precision. Their field artillery to be reduced to the smallest limits. Unnecessary interference with Scindia deprecated, but the Nizam is to be induced gradually to curtail his forces. The civil employment of military officers to be discontinued. Those choosing a civil career to resign their commissions, political employ being the exception. Staff Corps to be gradually abolished—first, by grouping three or four native infantry regiments into one regiment, and promoting officers in regiments so formed; secondly, by forming a general list of officers of each army corps, and making promotions in each list as vacancies occur in the army. The ranks for the native infantry to be one lieutenant-colonel, one major, three captains, and four lieutenants; for the native cavalry, one lieutenant-colonel, one major, four captains, and four lieutenants. Officers joining the Army hereafter to be promoted in Army rank in the list of the Army corps to which they may be posted. Regimental promotion to be according to regimental list. Officers who joined the Staff Corps before 1856 to be exceptionally dealt with. Officers now in civil employ to be kept on a separate list and promoted therein. Until they disappear, they will be considered non-effectives, unfit for regimental or departmental employ. Those whose appointments are abolished will, if of over 27 years' service, furlough counting as service, be granted the next grade of pension, plus annuity or bonus, under the retirement scheme of 1879. Those of from 30 to 38 years' service, pensions as above, with additional annuity or bonus. The system of colonel's allowances to be recast. For the future, these allowances to be considered as pensions, those succeeding to them being regarded as non-effectives. One thousand pounds fixed as colonel's allowance. Consolidated retirement after 32 years' service to be the rule. Future servants retiring before 32 years' service to be liable to recall to service in case of national emergency, or if required. Medical Department to be recast. The civil medical service to be separated from the military, and the latter amalgamated with the British Army Medical Department, forming one list. Netley Hospital to be abolished. Volunteering to be encouraged, but not made compulsory on Government servants as was proposed."

THE QUEEN ADELAIDE NAVAL FUND.

This fund, for the relief of necessitous daughters of deceased Naval and Marine officers, having as patron Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, K.G., and president, Admiral of the Fleet the Hon. Sir H. Keppel, G.C.B., is, we regret to hear, in want of assistance, as may be gathered from the following statements, issned by Sir H. Keppel, who says:—"Few know the sad struggles with poverty, sickness, and want, of some of the fatherless or entirely orphan unmarried daughters of deceased Naval and Marine officers. Brought up as gentlewomen, the ladies we refer to find themselves on the death of their parents left on the charity of friends, and as life advances, and their parent's friends fail, when health is lost and they are unable any longer to earn a subsistence, a compassionate allowance from the Admiralty gives them less than four or five shillings a week for board, lodging, clothing, and medical expenses. A committee of ladies residing in or near London has for nearly thirty years personally visited or otherwise sifted the many distressing cases of destitution brought before them. The recommendations of the ladies' committee have been further examined by a committee of gentlemen, who endeavour to raise funds for their relief. In this way many orphan daughters of Naval and Marine officers have had their more pressing necessities temporarily relieved by the very small grants which the Queen Adelaide Naval Fund has been able to bestow. Thus the Fund has assisted widowed mothers to give a useful education to their fatherless daughters; enabled unfriended young ladies to obtain the requisites in wardrobe and other expenses to enter suitable situations, afforded medical advice and needful nourishment in ill-health; and, when passed on to single life in advanced age, with greatly diminished powers for self-support, the Fund has added its little help to the four or five shillings a week granted from the Compassionate Fund. Pitiable indeed are many of the cases investigated by the ladies' committee, of aged ladies with faculties utterly worn out in the life-struggle for daily bread, and of others incapacitated in earlier years by incurable disease; yet the means at the disposal of the Queen Adelaide Fund will not admit of larger grants than from £3 to £10 a year being given to a few of these destitute gentlewomen, whilst the necessities of others are left wholly unrelieved. Delicacy forbids details being given publicly of some of the harrowing sufferings and struggles of delicately nurtured orphan daughters of former Naval and Marine officers investigated by these committees. The necessity for help has, we are assured, but to be more generally known, and friends will not fail to be forthcoming."

THE PROMOTION OF LIEUTENANT-COLONELS.

"Observer" writes:—"It appears unfair that the present warrant for promotion to Colonels in the Army gives no benefit to the lieutenant-colonel commanding a regiment, or to a lieutenant-colonel holding an appointment equivalent to a command; but a major and brevet lieutenant-colonel, of whom there are very many in the Service, obtains his seniority promotion in exactly the same time as a lieutenant-colonel commanding a regiment, so that, in the event of his being just senior by brevet to the lieutenant-colonel of his regiment, he would still keep the seniority, although he had none of the responsibilities and anxieties of the lieutenant-colonel during the five years he held the command. It would seem fairer that lieutenant-colonels commanding regiments should be promoted to the rank of full colonel in the Army after a service of three years, and lieutenant-colonels who held equivalent commands should be raised to that rank at the same time; but other brevet lieutenant-colonels should, as now, succeed to that rank after five years, of course obtaining equal advantages with lieutenant-colonels, if in actual command of a regiment, or an equivalent to it. This change would entail no expense to the country, and it would be much appreciated by those who think the present Warrant might be changed, more especially as so many lieutenant-colonels commanding regiments have in their day seen good service, and have lately been passed over by those who have been fortunate enough to have seen service in the last campaigns."

Stanford's new map of Kabul is a very useful and well-designed companion to the student of the interesting military operations in the surrounding country.

The Army.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Capt. Bellwood has been noted for appointment as adjutant of the Nottinghamshire Yeomanry Cavalry (Sherwood Rangers).

5th Dragoon Guards. Lieut. Hegan has been appointed to assist Major Wilkinson Shaw, garrison-instructor at Aldershot, until further orders.

3rd Hussars. Major Balders, who arrived home from the Cape lately, on vacating the paymastership of the King's Dragoon Guards, has been appointed paymaster.

8th Hussars. The colonelcy is vacant by the death of Lieut.-Gen. R. de Salis, C.B., which occurred at his residence in Ashley Place on Saturday last, aged 68. Gen. de Salis obtained his first commission as cornet in Dec. 1830, and became lieut. in June, 1833, capt. in July, 1838, and major in Feb. 1847. He served with the regt. in Turkey and the Crimea, from May, 1854, till the peace in 1856, including the battles of Alma, Balaklava, Inkerman, and Tchernaya, the affairs of Bulganak and M'Kenzie Farm. He commanded the regt. during the last part of the war, including the battle of Tchernaya and the fall of Sebastopol, and commanded the cavalry at the expedition and capture of Kertch (Medal with four clasps, Knight of the Legion of Honour, Sardinian and Turkish medals, and Fifth Class of the Medjidie). From 1857 to 1859 he served in command of the regiment in Rajpootana and Central India. He was present at the siege and capture of Kotah, reoccupation of Chundaree, battle of Kotah Keserai, capture of Gwalior and of Powree, battle of Sindwaho, and Koorwye, Koondrye, and Boordah; commanded brigades at Kotah, Sindwaho, and Koorwye; commanded troops at Boordah, and received the thanks of the Governor-General of India (C.B., and medal with clasps). He became lieut.-col. of the regiment in Nov 1854, and col. in 1858, and finally, in Feb. 1865, retired on half-pay. He was promoted to major-gen. in March, 1868, and lieut.-gen. in Oct. 1877. In Sept. 1875, he was appointed col. of the regiment, which had then become vacant by the death of Gen. Hope Gibson. The deceased was the eldest son of Jerome Count de Salis, the inheritor of the estates and next representative of Charles, last Viscount Fane, by his third wife, Henrietta, daughter of William Foster, D.D., Bishop of Kilmore, and married, in Nov. 1875, Augusta, widow of Gen. Derville, of the Indian Army.

15th Hussars. Lieut. Gavin, a probationer for the Indian Staff Corps, has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

A correspondent writes:—"The death of Major Ward-Ashton, which occurred at Woolwich on the 1st inst., was probably the greatest loss the garrison could have suffered. He was extremely popular, respected, and even beloved, and deservedly so. A gentleman in every sense, he made no enemies, and his friends were legion. As master of the Draghounds, he will be difficult to replace, for his courteous behavour, sporting character, and fearless riding went far towards conciliating the owners and tenants over whose land he rode; while it met with the warmest recognition from all those who followed the hounds. The funeral took place on the 5th, and many friends came from all parts of the country to testify to the great affection felt for him by all who had come in contact with him; and an illustrious lady at Chislehurst sent two members of her household to attend the mournful ceremony, and a violet cross to deck the tomb of him who had ever been the faithful friend of the exiled Imperial family, and under whose command its ill-fated Prince began his military service."

We (Pioneer) regret to learn that Capt. A. B. Stopford, D.A.Q.G., is very ill at Quetta, and that he is compelled to return to India at once. This officer has been with the Southern Afghan Force ever since hostilities commenced, and the hard work he has had to go through seems to have told upon him. Capt. Watling, D.A.Q.G. at Ahmedabad, has been ordered to proceed to Quetta immediately.

Major D. N. Shortland, 1st Brig., has been granted leave from India to England, to appear before a medical board.

The following officers have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee, viz., Brevet Major G. T. Pretyman, 11th Brig.; and Lieuts. A. C. Daniell, 2nd Brig.; C. H. L. Wilson, 1st Brig.; and G. B. Smith, 2nd Brig.

Major D. R. Cameron, C.M.G., commanding No. 16 Baty. 10th Brig., has been ordered from Malta to Newbridge, to join the Depôt Baty. 3rd Brig.

Major T. W. Roberts, 2nd Brig., Capt. C. R. W. Hervey, C Brig. R.H.A., Lieut. E. B. Coke, C Brig. R.H.A., and Qrmrs. R. Green and J. Gillard left India on the 17th ult. in H.M.S. Serapis for England; and Capt. J. W. Inge, A Brig. R.H.A., and Lieut. A. C. Bailward, on the 21st ult., in H.M.S. Crocodile.

Capt. W. J. Fowler, 8th Brig., arrived home from the Cape on Thursday in the mail steamer American.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The services of Lieut.-Col. J. G. Lindsay (late Bengal), engineer-in-chief of the Sukkur-Dadur line, has been warmly acknowledged by the Government of India. For rapidity of execution, the line is unexampled in the history of Indian railways. When the work was started, there was, says an official resolution on the subject, little permanent-way material in Scinde, and the bulk of it had to be drawn from the broad-gauge lines throughout India, and across nearly 100 miles of waterless country.

Brevet Lieut.-Col. St. John (late Bengal) left Candahar on the 16th ult. He has gone to Calcutta on special political duty, and will probably return to Candahar previous to the departure of Gen. Stewart's force.

The Pioneer says:—"Orders have been issued for 18 Royal Engineer officers to proceed at once to the front. We are unable to give the names as they are not yet out."

Lieut. D. A. Scott sailed from Bombay on the 17th ult. in H.M.S. Serapis for England.

3rd Buffs. The 1st Batn. having lately returned from foreign service, the officers were presented in a body to her Majesty by the colonel of the regiment, Gen. Napier, at the Levée on the 10th inst. Those present included Lieut.-Col. Morley; Majors Blaksley and Hobson; Capts. Kerr, Graham, Kane, Reeves, Kelly, Harley, Leslie, Ommanney, and Harris; Lieuts. Fergusson, Hind, Holme, Chippindall, Coles, and Porter; 2nd Lieuts. M'Lachlan, Brine, Ravenhill, Philips, and Bird; and Lieut. and Adjt. Kekewich. The following letter appeared a few evenings ago in the Globe:—"Seeing in your print of the 11th inst. that the officers of the gallant 1st Batn. of Buffs were presented in a body to her Majesty, and that that is the first occasion on which officers of any regiment have been so presented, I beg leave to state that my late regiment, the 9th Queen Adelaide's Royal Lancers, were presented in a body to Queen Adelaide at a levée, headed by their colonel, the Earl of Rosslyn, and his son in command, Lord Loughborough, Lieut.-Col., on the regiment being made Queen Adelaide's Royal Lancers, for the first time dressed in scarlet. There are but few left now to record this fact.—Yours, &c., Lewis Upton, late 9th Lancers."

4th King's Own. The 2nd Batn. embarked, under command of Col. Bray, C.B., on board H.M.S. Malabar, on Feb. 8 at Durban, Natal, en route to Bombay. The regiment embarked about 650 of all ranks, and about 190 men were transferred to the General Depôt at Pinetown for conveyance to England. Of this number, 86 were time-expired and short-service men who had served five years. About 60 were found medically unfit for India, and 40 men were left in the various hospitals in Natal and the Transvaal. Lieut. Ogilby has proceeded home to join the depôt. Major Middleton comes home on sick-leave when able to travel. Capt. MacCarthy and 2nd Lieut. Carter arrived home on Thursday in the mail steamer American.

7th Fusiliers. 2nd Lieut. De Trafford, 2nd Batn., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

8th King's. Capt. Lowry and Lieut. Orme, 2nd Batn., are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Serapis.

11th Regiment. The 1st Batn. has moved this week from Manchester to Preston.

12th Regiment. Major Marcon, 2nd Batn., will be retired after the 1st prox., when he will have completed seven years in the rank of major.

13th Light Infantry. Capt. Bateman (late 31st Foot), from the District Pay Office, Devonport, has been appointed paymaster of the 1st Batn., and Assist.-Pymr. Gleig has been posted to the District Pay Office at Devonport.

15th Regiment. Lieut. Hamilton, 2nd Batn., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

17th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Grant, 2nd Batn., has been granted an extension of leave from India to remain in England from Dec. 24, 1879, to Jan. 5, 1881. Lieuts. Lonsdale and Stewart-Savile, and 2nd Lieut. Griffith, 1st Batn., are en route to England from India in H.M.S. Serapis.

23rd Fusiliers. Cols. the Hon. S. Mostyn, 2nd Batn., and Prevost, 1st Batn., are both about to retire. Col. Prevost will most probably get a Staff appointment, indeed his name is already associated with a vacancy likely to occur shortly in the Northern District. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Shadwell, having completed seven years' service in the rank of major, will be retired after the 27th inst., in accordance with the terms of the Royal Warrant. Mr. G. Wildes, late lieutenant, died in the Fiji Islands on Dec. 23. Lieut. Evans, 1st Batn., who was employed on the heliograph signalling in Zululand, has since been in charge of the military telegraphs in the Transvaal. Heliograph signalling in Zululand was, we understand, a most perfect success.

24th Regiment. "Colours" writes:—"Having read with much interest a suggestion in your edition of last week, that the colours of the 24th Regt., saved from falling into the enemy's hands by the heroism of Lieuts. Melvill and Coghill, should be placed in the Cathedral of Cork, where a memorial window has been erected to Coghill, may I venture to encroach upon your valuable space to suggest that the colours should be deposited in the Harrow School Chapel, where Melvill sat as a boy, and where their custody, as a legacy from the departed hero, would be considered as a sacred trust. A more fitting resting-place for them could scarcely be found than in the aisle erected in memory of Melvill's 'school-fellows' who fell in the Crimea."

33rd Regiment. Lieut. Seton left India on the 21st ult. in H.M.S. Crocodile for England.

36th Regiment. Capt. R. B. C. Daubeny, late of the regiment, died at Southsea of congestion of the lungs on the 10th inst. The deceased entered the Army, Feb. 27, 1856; became lieut., Oct. 1, 1858; and capt., May 28, 1870. He retired upon half-pay, Oct. 31, 1871, and subsequently sold out, after being brought into the Black Watch.

43rd Light Infantry. Lieut. Widdicombe, officiating wing-officer 10th Bombay N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bombay S.C.

ROYAL MARINES.

The Admiralty have appointed Brevet Major J. Philips to be instructor of musketry at the Depôt at Deal, in succession to Capt. J. W. Scott.

A detachment, consisting of one officer (Capt. H. M. Clements), two serjeants, two corporals, and 51 privates of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, will take passage to Halfax, en route to Bermuda, for employment on the floating dock, in the Allan steamer, which will leave Liverpool on the 1st prox.

Medals for long-service and good-conduct have been awarded Musician A. Grinter and Private James Smith, Royal Marine Light Infantry.

50th Queen's Own have moved this week from Edinburgh to Colchester, having been conveyed in H.M.S. Himalaya. Brevet Major Falkner completes five years' service as adjutant of the 1st A.B. Surrey R.V. on the 1st prox.

53rd Regiment. The Examiner has the following:—"In spite of the reforms, of which so much has been made at the War Office, red-tapeism still rears its rampant head in that important State department, and a very forcible instance of what we assert occurred recently. The 53rd Regiment was ordered some time ago from Aldershot to Manchester. To most of the uninitiated it would seem that the shortest and most convenient way of getting from one to the other of these two places would be by train. The journey would occupy about nine hours, and the regiment would be fit for work on the following day. But this course was much too simple for the powers that be at the War Office, and they accordingly decided that the regiment in question should go by train from Aldershot to Portsmouth, should there embark in the troopship Assistance, and should be conveyed all round England to Liverpool, where it should disembark and proceed by train to Manchester. A delightful prospect for men, women, and children to be tossed about off the Land's End and the Longships in the month of March. This clever scheme is propounded on the score of economy, but even there it breaks down, for the third-class fare from Aldershot direct to Manchester is 16s. 2d., while that from Aldershot to Portsmouth is 4s. 2d., and that from Liverpool to Manchester is 3s. 2d. Therefore, though nominally 9s. a-head is saved in this regiment of 300 men, yet really far more than that sum is expended in the extra outlay involved by two embarkations and disembarkations, and the expenses of the troopship on the passage."

60th Rifles. Major Ashburnham becomes lieut.-col. and Capt. Crosbie major, in succession to Lieut.-Col. Pemberton, C.B., placed upon half-pay. Lieuts. Howden, Michell, Ward, and Thorne are about to obtain their companies. Lieut. Baynes, 2nd Batn., left India on the 17th ult. in H.M.S. Serapis for England.

66th Regiment. A correspondent writes to the Times of India from Deolalee:—"A visit to this depôt would startle a great number of persons, if they only saw the amount of work done. At one time some 5,000 souls were in camp, and had all to be provided for. The account of every soldier is to be certified at this depôt 'as correct' before he (or the officer in charge of his section) is allowed to proceed on board the troopship. The claims may be of old standing, with all their complications, necessitating endless correspondence with the head-quarters of the regiment, whose commanding officer has permitted his men to leave with claims unadjusted. The exposure of these discrepancies, as you may suppose, adds nothing to Col. Hogge's popularity, but we who know how valuable those services are to the State, and how conscientious are all his transactions, congratulate the late Commander-in-Chief on the selection he made when Col. Hogge was brought from the 66th Regiment to this depôt."

68th Light Infantry. Capt. Gordon is en route to England in H.M.S. Serapis.

70th Regiment. The Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs on the 14th inst.:—"From the Kurum come some further particulars of the murder of Lieut. Lumsden. He had gone to his tent about 11 at night. Next morning at 7 his servant, entering, found him lying across the foot of the bed, quite dead, with 17 dagger wounds, chiefly on the right side of the chest, five of them mortal. A number of things belonging to him were missing, including a bag containing 1,000 rupees in notes, his sword, pistol, boots, and clothes. The murder was evidently the work of a robber, who had managed to elude the sentries. From the position in which the body was found it is supposed that a struggle occurred in the tent. Apparently no sound was heard in the adjoining tents. Next morning a man carrying a heavy bundle asked a boy to watch it while he crossed the river to get help. As soon as he was out of sight the boy gave the alarm. The bundle was brought into the camp, and found to contain everything missing from Lumsden's tent. No trace of the murderer has yet been obtained."

71st Highland Light Infantry arrived at Portsmouth on Saturday last in H.M.S. Himalaya. The Himalaya afterwards sailed for Granton, where the regiment was disembarked, and took over quarters at Edinburgh.

72nd Highlanders. Capt. Tingcombe and Lieut. Fergusson are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Serapis.

78th Highlanders. Writing to the Times of India from Deolallee, a correspondent says:—"You recently announced the appointment of Capt. A. Murray, 78th Highlanders, to the adjutancy of the depôt, and a harder-working man it is impossible to imagine. The arrival at, and departure from, the camp of every person is personally superintended by him, while his daily routine of office work is astounding. But it is all done with the best of spirit and greatest courtesy, and this selection is a very judicious one, although his services may be a loss to the gallant old 'Rosshire Buffs.'"

MILITIA.

Worcester. A correspondent writes: "When the Brigade Depôt was established at Worcester, the Government acquired land to build the necessary barracks at Norton, about two miles distant from the county town. In addition to the barracks, it was necessary to acquire some contiguous land, with the view of encamping the Militia battalion during the annual training. The land adjoining the barracks was manifestly unfit for the purpose, for the followings reasons:—1. It was the stiffest bit of clay in the county of Worcester. 2. It was on a slope immediately below the barracks, and consequently received some of the surface-water from the large barrack parade-ground. 3. The drainage of the barracks went underneath the camp at a very little distance from the surface. 4. The ground was nearly an acre too small for the purpose, as the Royal Engineers seem to have forgotten, if they ever knew, that there were two battalions in the Worcestershire Regiment of Militia. However, it satisfied the Government, and the land was duly acquired from an influential local nobleman, who could make no use of it for farming purposes. The regiment has been encamped on this ground for two trainings. One was fine and warm, but the results from the barrack drainage, combined with the regimental latrines, which were compressed into too confined a space, made it eminently unhealthy, and caused a feeling of uneasiness not only amongst those occupying, but amongst those officials who visited the camp from time to time. The second training was somewhat stormy, and on some nights, in the lowest tents of the camp, the men were lying in mud and water. Through these circumstances, there were many men on the sick-list, from dysentery and rheumatism. If the long-expected hot summer is to visit us this year, I much fear that there will be numerous cases of dysentery and other incidental complaints amongst the men. I may mention another reason which renders the camp unsuitable for Militia—viz., its being too near and yet too far from the town of Worcester. The men, even the best characters, are constantly too late for 'roll-call,' and have to come before the commanding officer for exceeding their leave, or for absence without leave; the number of regimental defaulters, hitherto very small, has been thereby largely increased. Now, before the Worcestershire Militia come out for the annual training in July, it is a matter for grave consideration by the War Department whether it would not be better that each battalion shall get their clothing, &c., at the barracks, and then march to some healthy common in the neighbourhood of the Malvern Hills, where there are many suitable camping-grounds, and there go through the annual training. There is another course, which is to send this fine regiment to Aldershot, a course which would probably tend more to its efficiency than any other, as I may observe that this regiment is one of the best nurseries of recruiting in England, and deserves, therefore, to be treated with more than ordinary consideration by the authorities of the War Department."

THE VOLUNTEERS.

We are requested to state, for the information of the serjeants of those corps taking part in the Easter Monday Volunteer Review at Brighton, that the serjeants' mess of the 1st Sussex R.V., held at the Sussex Hotel, East Street, Brighton, will be open from Thursday, the 25th, until Tuesday, March 30 (inclusive), for the accommodation of serjeants being in Brighton between those dates. Newspapers and periodicals, latest telegrams, and writing materials will be supplied, and telegrams and letters may be addressed there. The whole will be free of charge, and the members of the serjeants' mess cordially invite the attendance of "all comers."

We have reason to believe that in the ensuing season Major-Gen. Higginson, C.B., commanding the Home District, will invite the Volunteer corps under his command to take part in the various divisional and brigade field-days of the Guards at selected sites near London. It is, of course, impossible to secure any large muster of the Metropolitan Volunteers during the hours when it is usual for the Household troops to do their work; but if a few Saturday afternoons are selected, a good attendance can be ensured, and the Volunteers would highly appreciate the privilege of drilling with the Regular troops.

"HELIOGRAPHY AND ARMY SIGNALLING GENERALLY."

Major A. S. Wynne, 51st Light Infantry, read a paper on this subject at the Royal United Service Institution on Monday. The lecturer pointed out that it is now nearly five years since a lecture on the heliograph, or sun-telegraph, was delivered at the Institution by Mr. Samuel Goode, who claimed for Mr. H. C. Mance, of the Government Persian Gulf Telegraph Department, the invention of this valuable instrument for signalling purposes. It was then explained that as early as the year 1869, Mr. Mance brought his heliograph to the notice of the Government of India. It was very favourably received, and subsequent reports testified to the success of experiments which had been tried to ranges of 50 miles without telescopes, one memorandum going so far as to state that with a six-inch or eight-inch mirror signals could be seen with the naked eye at a distance of 100 miles. Since then, the heliograph has fully realised the expectations of its supporters. The Government of India sanctioned its adoption in 1875, and each succeeding year its efficiency has been more and more generally recognised. It was used, for the first time on active service in India during the Jowaki-Affridi expedition of 1877-78, and in the campaigns of the last two years in Afghanistan and Zululand it has been put to every possible test, with such satisfactory results that it must soon become an established addition to the signalling equipment of all armies. The lecturer went on state that his experience of the heliograph had been mainly acquired in a practical way on service. He had nothing to add to the theoretical knowledge of sun-telegraphy, but as he had the honour and good-fortune to be placed in superintendence of the signalling operations with the Peshawur column of the Jowaki Expedition and of the Kuram column during the first phase of the Afghan campaign; he had decided to do what he could to explain the results obtained and the inferences to be drawn from the working of the heliograph during those campaigns. In conclusion, he said that army signalling is likely to play a much more important part in warfare than has hitherto been the case. However old the use of mirrors may be for flashing, their employment for conveying verbal intelligence is of quite recent date. We hear nothing of heliograph messages in the American Civil War, the Prusso-Austrian, the Abyssinian, the Franco-German, or the Turko-Russian campaigns, and we may, perhaps, accept this as sufficient proof that no such instrument was then in use. During the last two or three years, however, the heliograph has proved of such incalculable value, that its importance cannot be overrated. The subject is well deserving the serious attention of the authorities, in order that the Service may be provided with the best possible equipment, and Army signallers encouraged to make themselves proficient in the art of heliography.

In consequence of the disturbed state of Madagascar, we understand that the Foreign Office has considered it advisable that telegraphic orders should be sent to the station for the despatch of one of her Majesty's ships to the island for the protection of British interests.—Standard.

Victoria R.,—Whereas we consider it desirable to amend the regulations for the retirement of combatant officers of our Regular Forces, and to make certain other provisions as to the reckoning of their service, our will and pleasure is that Articles 87 to 90, 1,161, 1,163, and 1,165 to 1,167 of our Warrant of May 1, 1878, and Articles 87*a*, 117*a*, and 130*b*, added by our Warrant of Sept. 6, 1878, be cancelled, and that the following articles, together with the additional articles—viz., 23*A*, 88*a*, 88*b*, 90*a*, 90*b*, 1,175*a*, and 1,175*b*, which shall be administered and interpreted with our said Warrants of May 1 and Sept. 6, 1878, be the sole and standing authority on the matters herein treated of.

23*A*. A lieutenant-colonel who shall have been placed on half-pay, otherwise than for his own convenience, or on account of his demerit, and who shall subsequently be employed on full pay and complete the service qualifying him for the rank of colonel, shall have his commission as colonel so antedated that such half-pay service shall count towards the five years' service, under Article 23 (f), or the eight years' service under Article 23 (g), after which he would be eligible for the rank of colonel.

87. Full-pay service only shall reckon towards promotion and towards voluntary retirement, except in the cases of officers promoted from the ranks provided for in Articles 116, 120, 121, and 122, and as provided in Articles 88*a* and 88*b*.

87*a*. Time on half-pay shall not, in the case of an officer of our Royal (late Indian) Artillery, or our Royal (late Indian) Engineers, reckon towards the extra-annuity specified in Article 1,170*a*, except as provided in Articles 88*a* and 88*b*.

88. Half-pay service and leave of absence, with or without pay, shall reckon towards the period on completion of which an officer shall be liable to removal from a regiment or corps.

88*a*. An officer placed on half-pay on account of ill-health incurred in and by the Service, may reckon time on half-pay, not exceeding one year, as full-pay service towards voluntary retirement.

88*b*. An officer placed on half-pay, on the reduction of his regiment or corps, or an officer granted promotion to half-pay, may count any time on half-pay, not exceeding two years, as full-pay service towards voluntary retirement.

89. The service of an officer shall be reckoned from the date of his first permanent commission, except in the case of an officer promoted from the ranks. Service rendered before the age of 18 shall not, however, except as provided in Article 90, reckon towards the period qualifying an officer for retirement (other than on retired full-pay, under Article 116, or on half-pay under Article 120). Service before the age of 20, in whatever rank rendered, shall not reckon towards the period after which an officer shall be removed from his regiment, nor towards the period disqualifying an officer for promotion.

90. The one year's service granted to the garrisons which defended Lucknow and the Alumbagh respectively, prior to the advance of any portion of the forces under the late Field-Marshal Lord Clyde, shall reckon as actual service towards voluntary retirement; but it shall not reckon towards the period on the completion of which an officer shall be liable to removal from his regiment, nor towards the period disqualifying an officer for promotion.

90*a*. Service in our Militia after the age of 18, while embodied, shall, in the case of a combatant officer, who shall enter our Regular Forces after the date of this our Warrant, reckon towards voluntary retirement, and after the age of 20, towards the period after which he will be liable to removal from a regiment or corps, and towards the period disqualifying him for promotion, provided he was transferred directly from our Militia to our Regular Forces without break in the continuity of his service.

90*b*. Service in our Militia after the age of 18, while embodied, shall, in case of a combatant officer who entered our Regular Forces before the date of this our Warrant, reckon towards voluntary retirement, provided he was transferred directly from our Militia to our Regular Forces without break in the continuity of his service.

117*a*. An officer of our Royal (late Indian) Artillery, or our Royal (late Indian) Engineers, who shall retire on a pension under Indian retiring regulations after the following service, viz.:—

If a regimental colonel, five years' service in the rank;
If a regimental lieutenant-colonel, five years' service in the rank;
If a regimental major, seven years' service in the rank, and not less than twenty-seven years' service in all above the age of 18:
If a captain, seven years' service in the rank, and not less than twenty years' service in all above the age of 18; may be granted, in addition to such pension, the extra annuity specified in Article 1,170*a*.

The 19th, 20th, or 21st Hussars.
The 101st to the 109th Regiment, inclusive, may retire from his regiment upon half-pay after completing 20 years' service after the age of 18.

1,163. A captain permitted to retire from our Army under Article 99, or a major permitted to retire from our Army under Article 106, shall be granted:—

(a.) On retirement from our infantry of the Line, a pension not exceeding £259 a year, according to age, and subject to that limit, equal in value to £3,200 at the full Government commutation rate. In the case of an officer, whose service exceeded 25 years on Jan. 1, 1878, the limit of £259 a year shall not be enforced.
(b.) On retirement from our household cavalry or our cavalry of the Line, a gratuity equal to the regulation and over-regulation value of the commission he held on Oct. 31, 1871, less £1,600, and a pension—

1,167. A major of our Infantry of the Line permitted to retire from our Army under Article 105, or a lieutenant-colonel permitted to retire under Article 109, shall receive a gratuity equal to the sum of money to which he would be entitled on retirement on full pay after 30 years' service under the Regulation of the Forces Act, 1871, as over-regulation money or bonus, and a special pension at the following rate:—

,, 45, or upwards, a pension of ... 292 ,,

1,175*a*. In the case of an officer who has retired on a gratuity under our Warrant of Aug. 13, 1877, or under our Warrant of May 1, 1878, and whose gratuity would have been larger, or who would have become entitled to a pension had this our Warrant been in operation, the difference of gratuity shall be paid to him, or he shall be placed on pension from the date of his retirement on repaying the gratuity already issued to him. In the case of an officer who has retired under either of our said Warrants on an annuity or pension which would have been greater if this our Warrant had been in operation, his pension or annuity shall be made up to such greater sum from the date of this our Warrant.

(b.) That having already retired on pension or with a gratuity he might, had this our Warrant being in force, have retired at a date earlier than the date of his actual retirement.

Given at our Court of St. James's, this 5th day of February, 1880, in the 43rd year of our reign.

By Her Majesty's command,
Fred. Stanley.

COMMISSARY-GENERAL TATUM, C.B.

"A" says:—I think you have very properly drawn attention to the strong claims of Comy.-Gen. Tatum, C.B., to be promoted a K.C.B. I know Mr. Tatum as a most able and hardworking officer, who at the War Office did exceedingly good service, and, although in a very anomalous position, acquitted himself in the most admirable manner. An experienced and able Ordnance Store officer like Mr. Tatum is a most useful man at head-quarters, but it is a great mistake to make him either director or assistant-director of stores, to deal with war material and the accounts.

The opening dinner of the season of the members of the Navy Club took place on Tuesday evening at Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's. Admiral Sir Alexander Milne, G.C.B., presided; Gen. Lord Chelmsford, G.C.B., was the guest; and the following were present:—Admiral Hon. Arthur Duncombe, Admiral Lord Edward Russell, C.B., Admiral Erskine, Admiral D'Eyncourt, Admiral Hon. Sir Henry Keppel, G.C.B., Admiral Montgomery, Admiral Sir Claude Buckle, K.C.B., Admiral Hand, Admiral Blake, Admiral George St. Vincent King, K.C.B., Vice-Admiral Hon. J. W. Spencer, Rear-Admiral Seccombe, Rear-Admiral Murray Aynsley, C.B., Rear-Admiral Soady, Capt. Sir Lambton Loraine, Bart., Capt. Hippisley, Capt. Noel C. Hoare, Com. Sir J. Heron Maxwell, Bart., and Mr. H. J. Kelly, R.N., secretary.

Mr. Weil, of 14, St. George's Place, Albert Gate, has now Cigars of the Finest Brands for the coming Season, and his celebrated Belgrave Cigarettes were never better, for delicacy of flavour and aroma. The popularity of these cigarettes is now well established, both at home and in the colonies. Smokers who really understand good tobacco should lose no opportunity of inspecting Mr. Weil's cigarettes.

TIC-SANO.

IT is a FACT, positively and earnestly asserted, that medical men, after trying every remedy in vain, have at once relieved the agonising pains of the following disorders by the use of a VEGETABLE MEDICINE which has been brought to their notice, and testimonials have been received which prove this statement is not a false one, but can be easily verified. This medicine is and will effect a cure in a very short time. In chronic cases of many years' standing, it has, when taken regularly, effected a complete cure, even in persons of advanced age, when the case had been pronounced hopeless.

"Although I have, as a rule, a very great objection to all secret nostrums, still, for once, I must award due praise to a medicine which comes under that category. I find your Tic-Sano to be a very valuable remedy in neuralgia and rheumatic pains. I also find it most successful in many painful menstrual disorders, especially in dysmenorrhœa."

"I have now given your Tic-Sano a fair trial, and am satisfied that it is a most valuable remedy in all cases of a neuralgic nature, and one that I should not like to be without, as these complaints are very prevalent in this neighbourhood.

PORTABLE BOOT-TREE.

A want long felt has just been supplied by this most important invention. All sportsmen and military men know the great advantage of having both their long and short boots treed up every day, especially after they have been wet, but there is often great inconvenience in carrying about the boot-trees.

An officer in the 5th Lancers has lately hit upon the idea that an India-rubber tree, which, with ease, can be carried in the pocket, can, when put inside the boot, be inflated, filling out the boot tightly, and so making it an impossibility to shrink.

For officers on active service, autumn manœuvres, or whenever it is impossible to carry wooden trees, this invention will be invaluable.

This invention is patented for Great Britain and other countries.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MAJOR PARKER.—The recommendations of Lord Airey's Committee will, we think, meet many evils. The "shortcomings" of the present Army organisation are now admitted on all sides. Some of your suggestions are excellent. But can the men be got? And the money?

LEICESTER LODGE, TEDDINGTON.—Will you repeat the statement? Yours of March 9 was mislaid. We cannot answer your question yet.

PATHAN.—We understand the question of equipment is "under consideration." It certainly is not above it. But why call the arrangement the "Sam Browne Swordbelt?" It is very like what we saw in India 23 years ago.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1880.

CAPTAIN VERNEY has been trying to win his way into the hearts of the electors of the borough of Portsmouth by showing his disregard for the feelings of the Admiralty or the traditions of the Service, and he has shown his readiness to advocate any radical change which would, in his opinion, be popular. But it seems, after all, that the Service is inclined to try the Conservative side. This is the reason, we presume, why the Conservative candidates for Portsmouth were waited upon by a deputation of petty officers and seamen from the ships at the port, who are evidently ready enough to stick to the Conservative side if that side will stick to the Service, and if the Members returned by the Ports will do what they can to forward the interests of the Navy. The first question which was brought forward was the long-standing one of the Widows' Pension Fund, a movement which we have supported from the first, knowing that no effort on the part of the men could be more beneficial to the Service, as a whole, than the establishment of such a fund, assisted by the Crown as it might well be, by the proceeds of the sale of deserters' effects, mulcts for leave-breaking, and fines for drunkenness. It is mainly to a Conservative Member, Commander Price, who represents Devonport, that this question has been persistently brought before Parliament, and although there has been an unwillingness to rush headlong into establishing a fund which might prove more costly than was ever anticipated, yet the Admiralty has shown willingness to assist, if it is proved by the actuaries in whose hands the matter has been placed, that there is reasonable hope that in time it would become fairly self-supporting, and not constantly calling for supplementary grants. The strong desire of the men to put aside a certain sum monthly for the benefit of those they may leave behind them is worthy of all praise, and calls for hearty support. With a Navy largely composed of men ready and willing to deprive themselves of immediate comforts for the sake of their wives and families, it is not surprising that an opportunity should have been taken to impress upon Mr. Bruce and Sir Drummond Wolff that the Service felt very keenly the stigma that had been cast upon it by the statements made by Captain Pim in Parliament as to the amount of crime and punishment afloat, and the remark that this officer would no longer be a member was received with applause. There is no doubt that the Member for Gravesend has disappointed the Service, for much was expected from him, his promises were so great. But these expectations have not been fulfilled, and Captain Pim's last speech on the Navy Estimates has been looked upon by our seamen as a gratuitous insult. It is the wish of the men of the Fleet to uphold the high character which they now bear, and to do all in their power to improve the tone of the lower deck; and in their efforts in this direction they must win the sympathy of everyone. To this feeling is to be attributed the objection raised by the deputation relative to the sources from which some of the boys are recruited. The new plan of taking a certain number of boys from mercantile training-ships, instead of accepting none but those passed through the Royal training-ships, is objected to, for it is found that though the boys may be smart enough, and be fit for their work, they are not always of such good character as could be desired. This is a matter worth looking into attentively, for it is among the young hands that offences are rife. A boy who has never known influences of home life, but who may find his way from the gutter to a mercantile training-ship, and thence into the Royal Navy, is not so satisfactory a recruit as the lad who has to comply with the regulations for entry on board one of the Royal training ships. The saving effected by accepting these boys, taking into consideration the bounty paid to the ship which provides them, cannot be much, and the loss of character and tone to the Service generally by allowing doubtful boys to be entered cannot be lightly set aside. The petty officers drew attention to some disadvantages under which they laboured, in comparison to non-commissioned officers of Marines, with regard to pensions, and now that the question has been placed in the hands of the Conservative candidates for Portsmouth, we may hope that the attention of the Admiralty may be brought to this point. Mr. Smith has spoken of his desire to retain the services of men after their first ten years, and no surer method of doing this can be found than in giving them sufficient remuneration for their services. Altogether, the deputation expressed thorough satisfaction with the manner in which Mr. Bruce (who has taken much care to make himself acquainted thoroughly with the arguments respecting the Widows' Pension Fund) and his colleague met their views, and this quiet reception of the men "at home" is, after all, a more satisfactory way of doing things than going on the stump with "the lash" as a cry. It is, indeed, worthy of notice that the deputation volunteered the statement that although "the cat, fast becoming a thing of the past in the Navy, they thought its use should be retained," and one representative added that "no good seaman need be frightened of flogging." Such a straightforward statement from our seamen, without being prompted in any way, is convincing that flogging should not be entirely abolished; and Captain Verney must now be inclined to think that in his endeavour to raise a popular cry for a Naval constituency, he has managed to get on the wrong tack.

The publication of the essential parts of the Simla Report, before the document had been officially received at home, has given great offence, and will cause strict inquiry. The recommendations in reference to the armies of the Native States are calculated to create much excitement and agitation.

Captain C. W. B. Bell, 8th Hussars, who has been holding for some time past the adjutancy of the Yeomanry School at Aldershot—a position which he has filled with the greatest credit to himself—has been offered and has accepted the appointment of Professor of Hindustani at the Staff College, vacant by the promotion of Major F. Chenevix-Trench, 20th Hussars, to the lieutenant-colonelcy of his regiment.

Major J. K. Watson, 60th Rifles, has been appointed Chief Instructor at the School of Musketry, Hythe, vice Lieutenant-Colonel D. R. Barnes, half-pay, late 14th Foot, who is proceeding to the Cape as Deputy-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General.

Colonel R. Blundell-Hollinshead-Blundell, half-pay, late 3rd Hussars, takes up the appointment of Inspector of Yeomanry Cavalry at Aldershot, vice Colonel H. C. Wilkinson, appointed to the Staff in India. Colonel Blundell must certainly consider himself fortunate in having been so soon selected for employment, the more so as he has been provided for before more than one officer of his rank standing senior to him; but the fact of his being in possession of the Staff-College certificate, and never having held an appointment on the Staff, has been considered to give him a priority of claim.

It is generally understood that Colonel H. C. Wilkinson, on arrival in India, will join the Staff of the Cabul Expedition as Cavalry Brigadier, in the room of Colonel Dunham Massy.

Major-General J. B. Spurgin, C.B., C.S.I., has been appointed a Brigadier-General on the Staff of the Aldershot Division, to fill the vacancy caused by the transfer of Major-General T. H. Pakenham to the command of the Devonport District.

Captain H. G. Worsley, 25th Regiment, accompanies Major-General Pakenham from Aldershot to Devonport as aide-de-camp.

No officer has yet been recommended to her Majesty to fill the colonelcy of the 8th Hussars, vacant by the death of Lieutenant-General R. de Salis, C.B.; but the appointment will, it is believed, be conferred upon Lieutenant-General W. C. Forrest, C.B., formerly of the 7th Dragoon Guards, and for some time in command of a brigade in India.

Her Majesty has approved the appointment, which we some time since stated to have been recommended, of Colonel R. H. Buller, V.C., C.B., C.M.G., half-pay, late 60th Foot, as Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General in Scotland, vice Colonel St. G. M. Nugent, resigned, in consequence of ill-health.

Colonel Stracey, we hear, has been spending his leisure since he assumed command of the school in Birdcage Walk in arranging the battalion drill in the Field Exercise, so that the officers of the Militia and Volunteers who present themselves for instruction at Wellington Barracks might be able to comprehend it, and it is satisfactory to know that he has succeeded, for General Armstrong has lately approved the work, which we shall hope shortly to see made public.

Colonel Sir P. S. Lumsden, K.C.B., C.S.I., is placed on the paid establishment of Queen's Aides-de-Camp, to fill the vacancy caused by the promotion of Colonel R. Phayre, C.B., Bombay Staff Corps, to the rank of Major-General.

There will shortly be a considerable number of vacancies in the Commissariat and Transport Staff, in the grade of Deputy Assistant-Commissary-General, and for these there are many applicants. There is still uncertainty, however, as to the conditions of admission for those officers who have not passed through the Staff College. It is to be hoped that further regulations on this point will be issued without delay, as officers are in doubt whether to apply to have their names recorded as candidates for appointment, or not.

There are eighteen, and not seventeen, Lieutenant-Colonels, as Mr. Bass stated a few evenings ago in the House of Commons, still serving under the old system. Their names are as follows:—Colonels A. Nugent, 2nd Dragoons; A. G. Montgomery Moore, 4th Hussars; E. T. St. L. MccGwire, 1st Foot; W. Roberts, 5th Foot; G. H. Waller, 7th Foot; J. Davis, 20th Foot; Hon. S. Mostyn, C.B. and G. P. Prevost, 23rd Foot; R. T. Glyn, C.B., 24th Foot; J. A. Ruddell, 25th Foot; S. A. Madden, C.B., 51st Foot; H. de R. Pigott, 70th Foot; J. I. Macdonell, 71st Foot; H. Kent, 77th Foot; T. S. Brown, 83rd Foot; F. E. Appleyard, C.B., 85th Foot; N. Stevenson, 87th Foot; and H. E. T. Williams, 108th Foot. All these officers obtained their appointments prior to the abolition of Purchase —before October 31, 1871—and by the present regulations cannot be interfered with. Meanwhile, the Lieutenant-Colonels of all other Line regiments are being removed on completing five years in the rank. It will be seen how serious is the disadvantage under which the officers labour in the regiments which these "Purchase Colonels" command, and none will feel disposed to question the wisdom of Colonel Stanley's decision, to menace with a Warrant men who evidently had no intention of retiring voluntarily, and who have been blocking the way to all professional advancement in the case of their unfortunate subordinates.

The Brigade Depôt at York is about to be formed, the depôts of the 14th Regiment proceeding there from Bradford, where they have been for some time past provided with temporary quarters, and those of the 25th Regiment from Devonport. The Bradford Depôt will then be broken up, and the Staff will be amalgamated with that of the 6th Sub-District.

Consequent upon the reorganisation of the Commissariat and Transport Staff, the Secretary of State for War has approved of the following appointments:—Commissary-General Sir E. Strickland, K.C.B., to be senior Commissariat officer in Ireland; Deputy-Commissary-General A. W. Downes, C.B., to be Senior Commissariat officer, Southern District; Deputy-Commissary-General L. W. Blacker to be Senior Commissariat officer at Gibraltar; Assistant-Commissary-General H. J. Wilkinson, to be Senior Commissariat officer, Western District; Assistant-Commissary-General R. C. Healy, to be Senior Commissariat officer, Dublin District; Assistant-Commissary-General C. Foster to be Senior Commissariat officer, Cork District; Assistant-Commissary-General H. C. Lewis to be Senior Commissariat officer, Home District; Assistant-Commissary-General A. E. Petrie to be Senior Commissariat officer, Eastern District; Assistant-Commissary-General C. E. Wrench to be Senior Commissariat officer, Belfast District; Assistant-Commissary-General T. B. Prissick, at Cyprus, will return to England, being succeeded by Assistant-Commissary-General C. F. Leach.

Lieutenant-Colonel R. W. Wood, half-pay, late 3rd Buffs, Staff Officer of Pensioners, at Manchester, retires on the 1st prox., on full-pay pension, and will be succeeded in his appointment by Brevet Major E. Rogers, half-pay, late 3rd West India Regiment, from Chester. The latter officer will hand over the pension duties of the district to Major Robbins and the officers of the 18th Brigade.

One Commissary-General, two Deputy-Commissaries-General, seventeen Assistant-Commissaries-General, and eight Deputy-Assistant-Commissaries-General would seem to be required to complete the establishment of the new Commissariat and Transport Staff Corps, and seven Assistant-Commissaries-General of Ordnance and twenty Deputy-Assistant-Commissaries-General of Ordnance to complete the new Ordnance Store Department.

The following officers of the Commissariat and Transport Department have been retired—many of them voluntarily—on the reorganisation of the Department, viz.:—Commissary-General J. Scott Robertson, C.B.; Deputy-Commissaries-General J. B. Lundy, H. Moore, and C. Palmer; Assistant-Commissaries-General C. R. Shervington, G. Bridgett, R. H. Dundee, and G. H. Phillips; Commissaries C. B. Knapp, R. G. D. Selby, W. H. Newland, S. R. Brown, P. G. F. Furse, C. W. Penrice, J. F. W. Des Barres, G. H. Telfer, and S. W. Rains; Deputy-Commissaries W. Bridgman, W. J. J. Warneford, R. S. B. Leech, C. W. Hawtayne, M. W. R. Rushton, C. H. Toller, W. J. Birnie, R. D. Noake, and M. S. J. Woollett; and Assistant-Commissaries J. Gallagher, J. Stephenson, H. N. Mitchell, H. Chipp, P. O'Leary, T. Hibbert, R. Croisdale, E. J. Dolton, W. J. B. Bampfield, J. A. Boyd, E. Gaussen, H. J. L. Harvest, F. S. Christian-Hart, H. G. Rice, E. J Pocock, J. Hunter, and H. T. Hayles.

Captain J. A. Fergusson, Rifle Brigade, does not proceed to Bombay with Sir James Fergusson, as stated by us last week, having been selected to succeed Major A. A. Godwin, 103rd Fusiliers, as Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General on the Staff of the Colonial Forces in South Australia.

Sir James Fergusson's Staff has now been completed. Lieutenant-Colonel H. H. D. Stracey, Scots Guards, will, as we stated a fortnight ago, accompany Sir James as Military Secretary. Lieutenants H. J. Fergusson, Rifle Brigade, and Hon. G. FitzRoy Somerset, Grenadier Guards, have been appointed aides-de-camp.

The post of Commandant of the School of Instruction for officers of the Auxiliary Forces at Wellington Barracks, vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-Colonel Stracey, Scots Guards, as Military Secretary to Sir James Fergusson, has been accepted by Lieutenant-Colonel W. E. Montgomery, Scots Guards, lately employed as Assistant-Quartermaster-General on the staff of General Newdigate's column at the Cape.

Colonel S. A. Madden, C.B., 51st Foot, has been offered, and has accepted, the command of the Brigade Depôt vacated by Colonel P. Robertson Ross, C.B.

Erratum.—A "little sun" was printed for a "little run" last week. The one is more easily enjoyed than the other.

Agincourt, Capt. A. Buller, C.B., flagship of Rear-Admiral Waddilove, second-in-command of the Channel Squadron, leaves Lisbon to-day for Gibraltar. The following account of the accident to her launch is given by a correspondent of the Standard, at Lisbon. The steamer Minho, one of the Royal Mail Steam Line, arrived here on Sunday, March 7, and brought the Southampton and seamen's mails for the squadron. On the arrival of any English steamer in the Tagus, she is immediately boarded by an officer from the ship having the guard, which ship is distinguished from the rest by flying a small Union Jack at the mizen-royal masthead. On Sunday it was the Agincourt's turn for this duty, and her steam launch proceeded, with a lieutenant, the officer of the guard, the midshipman of the boat, and the usual crew of stokers and blue-jackets, down the river to board the Minho. The tide was running out at a great pace, and as the steam pinnace got alongside the Minho it was noticed by the officer of the watch of the Minotaur that some accident had happened, and boats were immediately despatched from that ship and the Agincourt. After an interval of suspense the Minho steamed up the river, towing three boats; but no steam pinnace was visible, and a signal was made that she had been sunk and two men drowned. The Minho was to have sailed directly after coaling, but her master at once applied for an inquiry into the causes of the unfortunate accident, as he was naturally anxious that the evidence of himself and his officers should be taken at once, and while the matter was still fresh in their minds. The officer of the guard was equally anxious for an investigation, and so a court of inquiry was held early on Monday on board the Achilles, Capt. Heneage, of that ship, and Com. Patterson, of the Minotaur, sitting on it. The inquiry lasted for some hours, and a large number of witnesses were examined, and immediately it was over the Minho proceeded on her outward voyage to the Brazils. It appeared that the fluke of the Minho's bower anchor caught the gunwale of the steam pinnace and ripped her open. She sank immediately, and as the tide was running out very fast the boat's crew were swept away some distance before the Minho's boat could be lowered to go to their assistance, and one bluejacket and one stoker were drowned. The officer of the guard, embarrassed as he was with his clothes and his sword, made a noble effort to keep one of the unfortunate men afloat, but at last had to let him go, being almost exhausted himself. The opinion of the court of inquiry has not yet been made public.

Ajax, which was launched last week at Pembroke, is similar in construction to the Inflexible, but much smaller, being an attempt to reduce the size of ironclads. This reduction of size implies diminution in cost. The Ajax has a length of 280 ft., a breadth of 66 ft., and a displacement in tons of about 8,500. She will carry heavier armour than any other vessel in the Navy except the Inflexible, the two revolving turrets being plated with iron 1½ ft. thick. The turrets, which are placed en échelon, will contain each two 38-ton guns, each revolving. The watertight compartments, instead of being empty, are to be filled with cork, the object being to prevent her from sinking if struck below the water-line. The Ajax is built with a citadel or central compartment, which is kept afloat by the two unprotected ends of the vessel. Within the walls of this citadel are enclosed the magazines, engines, boilers, and ordnance, with its hydraulic loading gear. The armour which protects this citadel is 18 in. thick, and on the turrets is 16 in.; on the citadel it is, as in the Inflexible, of two thicknesses. The outer, or face armour will probably be of steel. This will be strengthened by vertical angle-iron girders 11 in. wide and 3 ft. apart, the space being filled with teak. Behind this backing and these girders will be riveted the rest of the armour, which will, in its turn, be backed by horizontal girders and another thickness of teak. The turrets are placed en échelon inside the citadel. The plan has this advantage—that by placing the turrets on each side of the keel, in a slanting position, all the guns can be used at once, or on either beam, or in pairs, in any direction that may be required. In addition to the ordinary decks—the lower, middle, and upper—there is a superstructure, running lengthways with the keel, and erected above the upper deck, for the purpose of working the vessel. The protection of horizontal armour is largely used. This is no less than 3 in. thick on the upper deck, and on the lower decks, both before and in the rear of the citadel, 6 ft. under water, the same thickness of plating is used.

Alberta, Staff Com. Balliston, is to be ready to accompany the Queen in the Victoria and Albert to Cherbourg on Thursday.

Bacchante, Capt. Lord Chas. Scott, having on board the Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales, arrived at Jamaica on the 12th inst., and was to sail on Monday.

Britomart, Lieut.-Com. W. E. Atkinson. A Guernsey paper says, in reference to the recall of the Britomart, "It had been anticipated that she would have been stationed here permanently, owing to the great success which has attended her mission, and it is thought, even now that her order to depart has been given, that if the matter were laid before the Admiralty, showing how great a thing it is to raise nearly fifty men in a small place like Guernsey, an order might be made out to make this her permanent station. The unanimity which has existed between the Registrar at the Custom House (H. Hallett, Esq.) and the commander of the vessel (Lieut. Atkinson), and the earnestness which has been exhibited by both officials, have brought about the great results, which when compared, or rather contrasted, with the ill-success of the Bruiser in Jersey, is something to be proud of. The men of the Britomart have conducted themselves in an admirable manner, and nothing has occurred to mar the pleasantness of the visit of the gunboat to our island."

Cherub, Lieut.-Com. A. G. Fullerton. A court-martial has been held on board the Duncan for the trial of Mr. Edward Baggs, boatswain of the Cherub, on a charge of scandalous and oppressive behaviour on February 16, for that he, whilst in the execution of his duty, did strike George Thomas Stevens, a domestic of the second class, serving on board the Cherub. Capt. Sulivan, of the Duncan, was president of the court, and Mr. H. G. Barlow, R.N., officiated as Deputy Judge Advocate. Capt. Brown, of the Penelope, prosecuted. Evidence was given by Lieut. A. G. Fullerton, of the Cherub, and others. The prisoner pleaded "Not guilty," but the court found him guilty of striking Stevens, and sentenced him to be dismissed his ship.

Comus, Capt. East, which reached Simon's Bay on Feb. 29, has by her performances (says the Times) justified the Admiralty in building the "C" class of ships. The Comus left Plymouth on Dec. 24, and arrived under sail at Ascension Jan. 25, having made an excellent passage and proved herself a capital sailer. The Comus called in at Tristan d'Acunha on Feb. 8, the expectations of the captain to make the whole distance under canvas not having been fulfilled; for as the wind fell light, it was found necessary to get up steam. The object of the ship's calling at the island was to present, in the name of the President of the United States, the senior resident, Peter Green, with a gold chronometer watch, the next in rank with a binocular glass, and the rest of the settlers with £40 in money for their having been the means of saving the lives of an American shipwrecked crew. The Comus did not anchor off the island, but the captain, with nearly all the officers, went on shore and were met on the beach with great rejoicings by the inhabitants, who were very anxious to sell them provisions. The settlers number, all told, 105 persons, who seemed very healthy and comfortable. Indeed, disease is well-nigh unknown on the island. The Comus arrived at Simon's Bay on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 14, after having experienced squalls and much bad weather, and the crew had the pleasure of hearing that the mails which they had missed at Madeira had been forwarded to the Cape. After visiting the Crozet Islands in search of a supposed shipwrecked crew, the Comus would proceed to Singapore and China.

Crocodile, Capt. Doughty, passed Gibraltar bound for Portsmouth on Wednesday.

Decoy, Lieut.-Com. Von Donop, has been ordered to St. Helena and Ascension, returning to Accra about May 8.

Dido, Capt. Compton E. Domvile, which arrived at Simon's Bay on Feb. 29, is to remain there as senior officer until the return of the Boadicea.

Dryad, Com. J. Hext. Lieut. Hugh Talbot, who was promoted in December last, and is now serving in the Dryad, has invented a contrivance for indicating the course run by a vessel, and it has been submitted to the Admiralty, for their Lordships' consideration. Of course it is not the first tell-tale of its kind that has been brought under notice, but it is very creditable to a young officer to have brought forward a simplification of the systems already made known.—Hampshire Telegraph.

Dwarf, Com. W. St. Clair, after completing her refit at Ascension, will probably visit the Congo.

Euphrates, Capt. C. J. Brownrigg, sailed from Portsmouth March 16, with drafts. A court-martial assembled on board the Victory, on Saturday, for the trial of Mr. James Lyons, assistant-paymaster, of the Euphrates. First, for that he did on Feb. 25 wilfully disobey the lawful command of Capt. Brownrigg, in that he did leave the ship without permission; and secondly, for that on Feb. 25 he was absent from the ship without leave. Lieut. Cotton, of the Euphrates, stated that he remembered that on Aug. 21 last, when the ship was at Simon's Bay, Capt. Brownrigg sent for the prisoner, and gave him an order relative to leave. The order was that he was not to go on shore without the captain's permission, and without also obtaining leave from the paymaster. Witness considered that order as binding, both at home and abroad. The prisoner served at the time as assistant-paymaster on board the Euphrates. The order extended to Mr. Inch, assistant-paymaster, as well as to the prisoner, but only so far as the paymaster's leave was concerned. On the date of the order, however, Mr. Inch had to obtain the captain's leave as well, but that order only applied to the time the ship was away. In cross-examination, witness said that when the captain gave the order to the prisoner, he did not say, "You will not leave the ship without my permission, while we are abroad." He was aware that Mr. Inch had slept out of the ship several times since the ship had arrived at Portsmouth, but that was with his permission, the captain being away. It was customary for officers to use the "leave-board" to obtain leave, so as to save trouble, but the use of the leave-board did not extend to the prisoner. He could not undertake to say that the leave-board was not frequently used by the prisoner. He was not aware of any fault having been found with the prisoner for using the leave-board. While the captain was away on Admiralty leave, witness did not find fault with the prisoner for going on shore by means of the leave-board. He was aware that the prisoner had a wife and family residing at this port. The prisoner was under punishment on Feb. 24. Witness, as a messmate of the prisoner, was aware that he went on shore occasionally to see his wife and family. Re-examined by the prosecutor: The order as to the stoppage of Mr. Inch's leave applied only to Simon's Bay. Mr. Herbert, paymaster of the Euphrates, gave corroborative evidence. Lieut. Harris deposed that on the evening of Feb. 25 he was doing duty as senior lieut. About six o'clock Capt. Brownrigg directed him to send for the prisoner. He did so, but the prisoner could not be found. The prisoner had not obtained his leave to go on shore. On the following morning the prisoner came on board, and witness asked him who had given him leave to go on shore. The prisoner replied that he did not think it necessary to obtain leave. Witness told him that an officer of his standing must know that it was necessary to obtain the permission of the senior lieut., and that he would see the captain during the morning. The captain subsequently saw the prisoner, who offered nothing in defence of his conduct, and the captain placed him under arrest. In cross-examination, witness said the prisoner told the captain he thought his order only applied to abroad. Mr. Inch, assist.-pymr. of the Euphrates, deposed to seeing prisoner return on board at 8 o'clock on the morning of the 26th ult. The prisoner, in his defence, submitted that the order given by the captain only applied to foreign parts, and that he honestly thought he had a right to use the leave-board. The court found both charges proved, and adjudged him to be dismissed her Majesty's Service.

Euryalus, Capt. Richard King. A report has been received from Malta of the result of the inquiry into the defects of the Euryalus, and the causes thereof; and it is hinted that the disablement of the ship's screw, and the defects developed in her rudder, are not so clearly avoidable accidents as their Lordships would have wished. As a consequence, the Engineer Department is likely to hear something not entirely to its advantage.—Hampshire Telegraph.

Fawn, Capt. Wharton, has been ordered from Malta to complete the surveys she is making in the Sea of Marmora.

Firefly, Lieut.-Com. Hughes-Hallett, was at Accra on Feb. 18, and is ordered to the Cape, and will go thence to the South Sub-division.

Flirt, Com. Brackenbury. The Flirt has received orders to leave to-day for the West Coast of Africa, and among her first duties will be a visit to the Gambia. Com. Brackenbury has, says the Hampshire Telegraph, done his best to make things comfortable on board his ship, and but for the station on which she is first to be employed, she bids fair to be "happy." If any one has cause to regret being ordered to the Coast of Africa, it is the Commander himself, for he has only been married a week or two. There are some, however, who will rejoice at the arrival of the Flirt, for her presence on the West Coast will relieve the Forester, which was commissioned in January, 1878.

Forester, Lieut.-Com. Sydney Smith, was at Quittah, on Feb. 18, and was to leave for the Brass River, making Accra her head-quarters until relieved by Decoy.

Himalaya, Capt. H. Brent, arrived at Spithead on Saturday with invalids, about 200 in number, from the Cape. The men are mostly those who were wounded at Ulundi, the serious character of their injuries having prevented them leaving before for England. They will go on to Netley Royal Hospital. The Himalaya also brings the 71st Regiment from Gibraltar, and will proceed with them to Granton.

Industry, Staff Com. W. T. Tregidgo, is ordered to the Cape, calling at the South Coast ports.

Invincible, Capt. the Hon. Edmund Fremantle, C.B., has arrived at Malta from the Piræus.

Jackal, Lieut. the Hon. R. Bingham, has been directed to proceed to Devonport about March 20 to be docked, and have defects made good. She is to be ready to resume her duties at the Hebrides about the middle of May.

Minotaur, Capt. Harry Rawson, flagship of Rear-Admiral Hood. A correspondent, writing from Lisbon, says:—"The Minotaur has a very powerful eleven amongst her ship's company, notably a very good wicket-keeper; and in a match, 'Officers versus Men,' the men were successful, and handsomely beat their officers, which is worthy of record, as showing that Jack can do other things as well as cross upper yards. On Tuesday the two five-masters, the Minotaur and Agincourt, had an exciting game with the three-masters, the Northumberland and Achilles, and on the first innings the five-masters just pulled it off by four runs only. As there was not time to play it out, victory rested with the two flagships, but the other ships are thirsting for their revenge."

Newcastle, Capt. Kelly, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Thursday, from Lisbon, and will probably proceed to the eastward to refit.

Northampton, Capt. J. A. Fisher, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir J. McClintock, was to visit St. Kitt's and Jamaica, and to be at Bermuda to-day.

Orion returned to Chatham Dockyard on Tuesday, after having made a trial of her engines at the measured-mile off the Maplin Sands. The trial was perfectly satisfactory, and the vessel has been placed in the repairing basin, to be brought forward for commission.

Osborne, Com. Lord Charles Beresford, M.P., is ordered to be ready for sea, if needed, to accompany the Victoria and Albert to Cherbourg on Thursday.

Pilot has been ordered to be commissioned at Devonport on the 23rd inst., instead of the 9th prox., by Lieut. John Giles, of the Royal Adelaide, as tender to the Impregnable.

Pioneer, Lieut.-Com. H. C. Carre, having refitted after her expedition up the Niger, is to accompany the Boadicea to the Cape.

Rifleman, Com. Inglis, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Thursday, from the East Indies. She has made a passage of four months from Zanzibar, viâ the Suez Canal. The Rifleman was commissioned at Chatham in March, 1873, and recommissioned at Bombay in April, 1876. She has left for Sheerness and Chatham to pay off.

Rupert, Capt. Edward J. Pollard, was to leave Malta for Cyprus on the 18th inst.

Temeraire, Capt. the Hon. W. Carpenter, was to leave Malta on March 15, for a ten days' cruise. The Hampshire Telegraph states that a letter from the Admiralty has been received on board the Temeraire, in which their Lordships express their opinion that it reflects much credit upon Mr. William Castle, the chief engineer, and engine-room staff of the ship, that during the two and a half years she has been in commission there have been no defects of any consequence in the machinery. The engines are by Humphry and Tennant, and they are evidently good work, and have been well used and looked after.

Turquoise, Capt. B. Medlycott. For being absent without leave for two days, Mr. Gough, engineer of the Turquoise (to which ship he was only appointed in September, 1879), has been tried by court-martial, and has been severely reprimanded and deprived of one year's seniority.

Tyne, Com. J. E. Stokes, arrived at Trincomalee on Sunday, and was to leave for England last Thursday.

Valorous, Capt. G. D. Morant, went into harbour at Devonport on Saturday morning to refit.

Victoria and Albert, Capt. Frank T. Thomson. The Royal yacht at Portsmouth will embark her Majesty on Thursday, for passage to Cherbourg.

Wivern, Com. J. G. Jones, left Plymouth Sound on Saturday morning for Hong Kong, viâ the Suez Canal. She was off Cape St. Vincent, all well, on Wednesday.

Woodlark, Com. P. C. Johnstone, was commissioned on Tuesday, with a complement of 90, for service on the East Indies station.

The under-mentioned men have been awarded the medal for long-service and good-conduct:—George Preston, leading stoker, of the Urgent; William Triggs, ship's corporal, first-class, of the Vernon; John H. Montgomery, gunner's mate, of the Excellent; Alfred Burton, leading stoker, of the Duke of Wellington; John Halloran, sailmaker's mate, of the Revenge; Thomas G. Carey, torpedo artisan, of the Northampton; William Tuck, chief boatman in charge; Joseph Records, chief boatman; William Goffin, commissioned boatman; John Taylor and Alfred Tucker, boatmen, of the Coastguard.

The statement of the Berlin correspondent of the Standard that, "at the request of the Russian Government, nearly all the ironclads of the Italian fleet are being equipped for a cruise in Turkish waters during the spring and summer," is contradicted.

The German Imperial yacht Hohenzollern is being got ready for a cruise. It is said that in the latter part of the summer the Crown Prince and Crown Princess propose to embark in her in order to meet their son, Prince Henry, on his return from a voyage round the world.

The Admiralty having received a memorial from a society of Odd Fellows, pointing out the inconvenience occasioned by the refusal of Naval surgeons to give certificates of sickness and recovery to members of the society, their Lordships have replied that they have been pleased to give directions that, when applied to, medical officers of the Royal Navy may in future certify to the secretaries of established friendly societies the nature of the illness from which any officer or man being a member of such society is suffering.

NAVAL ARCHITECTS.

The Institution of Naval Architects commenced its annual meetings on Wednesday in the hall of the Society of Arts. After the report, which showed that the affairs of the society were prosperous, had been read, 23 new members were elected. The president, Lord Hampton, who has held office for 21 years, retired, and the Earl of Ravensworth was unanimously chosen to take his place. In accepting the appointment, he expressed his high sense of the honour which had been done to him, and referred to the valuable services of the institution in bringing to bear on a great national industry all the talent the nation can command and in assisting the Admiralty with their combined experience. Lord Hampton, in his address, said they would have most implicit confidence in the abilities and competence of his successor. He alluded to the explosion of the large gun on board the Thunderer, remarking that it had formed a subject of discussion at their last meeting, and it was satisfactory now to find that their conclusions at that time that breech-loading guns were best suited for naval purposes were about to be acted on by the Admiralty. Afterward she drew attention to the use of steel for facing armour plates and for other purposes in shipbuilding, and he commended the proposal to employ mercantile vessels in time of war as cruisers. A paper was then read by Mr. B. Martell, chief surveyor of Lloyd's Register of Shipping, on "Causes of Unseaworthiness in Merchant Steamers." The first obvious cause was structural weakness, but from his experience, he said, he could deny that recent losses were due to this source of unseaworthiness. Deterioration of materials in the structures led to loss, but this danger was rapidly diminishing through the practice of cementing the insides of iron ships. The arrangements for the security of the sea-cocks and for pumping facilities were now much improved, but still required attention. No danger was to be feared from water-ballast tanks provided they were suitably arranged and formed in regard to the design of the ship. In the discussion which followed, Mr. Merrifield, F.R.S., deprecated the common running of steamers with too small margins of stability. Sufficient money, he considered, was not spent in obtaining calculations of the stability of merchant ships. Mr. J. Scott Russell, F.R.S., objected to double bottoms, holding them to be a great source of danger. He commended longitudinal central bulkheads, urging that no serious objections could brought against them. Admiral Sir Spencer Robinson thought that water ballast contributed to the stability of a ship, and this, he said, was the opinion of every one with whom he had spoken. It was stated by other speakers that water-ballast tanks fitted in the holds of vessels had been tried, but, the ballast being higher up, more water had to be carried, and the excessive quantity was in danger of breaking adrift.

On Thursday morning the day's proceedings commenced with a paper by Mr. N. Barnaby, C.B., on "The Nelson Class," in which the author at the commencement dealt with the steaming powers of the Nelson and Northampton as well as the two types of engines presented by those vessels. The real question, he said, concerning the Nelson class was, now that they were completed, were they fit for their proposed service? The ships might be looked at from two points of view. They might be regarded as armoured ships, having to meet armoured ships, or as protected cruisers. Comparing these vessels with the Bellerophon, he claimed that they were both better armed and better protected and their coal capacity was greatly superior. The Nelson is a 14-knot ship without the use of the steam blast; and her sister ship, the Northampton, is at present only a $13\frac{1}{4}$-knot ship with the use of the steam blast; the Nelson is 12 feet out of water, the Northampton $11\frac{1}{2}$ feet. The difference in the draft of water, computed as that realised by the vessel, was excused on the ground that the introduction of newly-devised sources of warlike efficiency was preferable to a strict adherence to a particular computation. The armour in the Nelson is reduced in extent compared to the Bellerophon; but the thickness is 7·28 inches instead of 5·28 inches, with 60 tons of fuel per day. She should make a speed in smooth water of $10\frac{1}{2}$ knots, and should steam 5,000 knots. Admiral Sir Spencer Robinson complimented the designer of the type, asserting that no war-ships belonging to other Powers were able to carry so much coal. It was his opinion, however, that under sail they would not be of much service, seeing they carried two screws. He closed his remarks by deeply lamenting the slow speed of our smaller class of ironclads. Mr. A. C. Kirk, of the firm which built the Northampton, and who designed the Nelson's engines, considered that the lesser speed of the Northampton was due to the different position of her propellers and the non-compounding of her engines. It was pointed out by Mr. J. Scott Russell, F.R.S., that the Nelson had eight unprotected guns in addition to four protected, which would be of the greatest advantage in delivering a broadside at close quarters. These could be fired by electricity, but he did not think our seamen would skulk behind the armour should they be required to work the unarmoured guns. Mr. A. C. Kirk, M.I.C.E., a member of the institution, contributed a paper on "A Method of Analysing the Forms of Ships and Determining the Lengths and Angle of Entrance." Mr. J. A. Normand, a member of the council, read a paper on "The Steam Trial of Her Majesty's ship Iris, and the Resistance of Screw Propellers." Mr. J. Scott Russell, F.R.S., vice-president, contributed the principal paper for the morning's consideration. It was entitled, "On the True Nature of the Resistance of Armour to Shot." Mr. Scott Russell concluded his paper in the following rather striking terms;—The armour, which has hitherto been fastened on by bolts and nuts over the outside, shall no longer be so fastened, because these bolts are not only in themselves weak places, but each of them forms a centre of radial cracks, and assists in extending the cracks of the others. I, therefore, strongly urge that all ships-of-war should be so built, that the armour-plates should be on the inside skin of the ship instead of on the outside. This can be easily and conveniently accomplished in the original design, and it might be so arranged that the ship and its machinery might be thoroughly complete and fit for use without the armour, and that when the convenient time arrives the armour could be at once placed in the cells of the cellular side which had been made to receive them. In this case each plate of armour would preserve its integrity, and in the case of an engagement the steel plating might be split, and even broken in fragments, without being displaced, or the replacement of injured armour could be rendered easy and convenient. The above, with the discussion consequent on each paper, concluded the morning's programme. At the evening's sitting—Lord Houghton in the chair—the following papers were read:—"Twenty Minutes with Passenger Steamers on the Long Ferry," by Mr. J. R. Ravenhill; "The Stability of Yachts," by Mr. Dixon Kemp; "On a Wave Line Form of Midship Section," by Mr. J. Scott Russell, F.R.S., vice-president. The proceedings of the session closed after the reading of some papers, with the presentation of an address to Lord Houghton from the members and associates of the Institution.

ROYAL NATIONAL LIFEBOAT INSTITUTION

On Tuesday, the annual general meeting was held at Willis's Room's, the Duke of Northumberland in the chair. The annual report stated that since the last meeting twelve new lifeboats had been placed on the coast. During 1879, the lifeboats had saved 637 persons, nearly the whole of them when ordinary boats could not have been employed without great risk of life; and had helped last year to rescue 21 vessels. 25 silver medals and votes of thanks inscribed on vellum, and £2,250 had been granted by the Institution. Although the boats had been manned during the past twenty-eight months by about 30,000 persons, only four lives had been lost. The number of lives saved since the establishment of the Institution, either by its lifeboats or by special exertions for which it had granted rewards, was 26,906. For these services it had voted 93 gold and 902 silver medals, besides pecuniary rewards to the amount of £59,800. The total amount of the donations, subscriptions, and dividends received during that period had been £30,125, of which sum £5,081 were special gifts to defray the cost of eight lifeboats. The expenditure had amounted to £36,546. The committee appealed with renewed assurance and confidence to their fellow-countrymen at large to help them, not only to maintain the great life-saving fleet which the toil and anxiety of many years had produced, but also to assist them to perpetuate the great work, and to extend it as opportunities are presented.

In Callao Bay, on January 21 and 22, says the Panama Star, the jolly tars of old England, composing the officers and crew of H.M.S. Triumph, Shannon, Turquoise, and Pelican, indulged in a regatta. Sailing and rowing races were the order of the day afloat, in which the honours of victory were about equally devided. On board of the Triumph and the Shannon a number of Callao and Lima ladies and gentlemen witnessed the exciting contests, and in the intervals wiled away the hours in dancing to the music of the splendid bands of the ships. The following officers composed the committee:—Capt. John D'Arcy, Staff Com. J. J. Covey, Lieut. F. Coddington, Triumph; Lieut. W. H. Madan, Shannon; Lieut. H. N. Dudding, Turquoise; Lieut. W. T. Bourke, Pelican. Capt. A. H. Markham, judge; Lieut. F. Coddington, starter; Staff Com. J. J. Covey, treasurer.

Consolation Stakes.—For any boat that has pulled, and not won a prize. Prize £2.—Three Entries. 1st, Admiral's galley, Triumph.

Of the sailing matches, the third race, the Admiral's Cup, produced the most interest, there being no less than 18 entries. The Triumph's pinnace, coming in first, was sailed by Com. Acland; the Triumph's launch, second, by Sub-Lieut. Willson; and the Admiral's barge, Triumph, third, by Flag Lieut. Moore. The two former boats were "De Horsey" rigged, with spinnakers, &c., for running. In the race for the cup presented by Mr. Grace, the officers of the Turquoise came in a good first, but the race would have been closer had the Triumph's and Shannon's gigs not fouled in rounding the buoy. On Wednesday, C D'Arcy and officers entertained on board the Shannon, and the following day, Rear-Admiral Stirling, Capt. Markham, and officers, on board the Triumph.

Allen and Hanburys' "Perfected" Cod Liver Oil is not only freer from taste and smell than any oil ever before offered to the public, but it does not give rise to the nausea and eructations which render the use of ordinary oil, even of the finest quality, so repulsive. It is the pure Oil, made at Allen and Hanbury's own factory in Norway, and prepared by an entirely new and special process, and presents in the most effective condition all the invaluable properties of the remedy. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "Perfected" Oil. ADJUTANTS OF AUXILIARY FORCES.

"Adjutant of Volunteers" writes:—I cannot allow the remarks of "Umtagati," of March 6, to pass by unchallenged. He says a Volunteer adjutant's fixed pay is £321 6s. 9d. per annum, less income-duty; in this sum, I presume horse and stable allowance is included. I make my pay, all told, to be £314 17s. 11d. Items as follows:—Daily pay, 11s. 7d.; fuel and light, 6d.; servant's allowance, 1s.; lodging allowance, 2s. 3d.; horse allowance, 1s. 6d.; and stable allowance, 9d. The cheapest way of keeping a horse in London is at livery; this costs at the very least £75 a year. The cheapest lodging to be obtained, including light, fuel, and attendance, is 25s. a week, or £75 a year. I do not say what I give myself, I merely mention what I think to be a reasonable price. These two sums make a total of £150 a year, which, taken from the above amount, leaves a little over £164; I am deducting income-duty, which I put at about £5 a year. "Umtagati" says the fixed income of a Militia adjutant is £248 6s. 9d.; but, of course, as he has quarters and stabling allowed him at the brigade depôt, he has only to feed his horse; he has also quarters for himself, and the advantages of a soldier servant. Therefore, I think it will be not far under the mark when I say his horse-keep will not amount to more than £48 a year. This would leave him £200, as against the £164; and add to this the £25 he gets for recruits, and it will leave him £61 to the good in the year. He says Volunteer adjutants are allowed to recruit; so they are, but they never get a chance of obtaining any men, and as a matter of fact, this source of income is entirely closed to them. He says a Volunteer adjutant attends an evening drill of each corps in his district twice or thrice a quarter, and six days' battalion drill in the year. An adjutant of Volunteers is on parade four nights a week for at least eight months in the year, and for the rest, when not on leave, from two to three nights a week. This is putting it, I think, below the mark. The amount of correspondence he also questions; yet, as almost all information is imparted to Volunteers (who live all over the place) in this way, it is necessarily very great. I could show that "Umtagati" is wrong on almost every point, and I can agree with him only in what he says in the last few lines of his letter, which applies equally to the appointments of adjutants of Volunteers.

The iniquity of their Lordships' order depriving assistant-paymasters of eight years' seniority of the recently-granted second stripe, has been brought to the notice of the Board by more than one Commander-in-Chief, so that there can be no excuse for persisting in doing this injustice to a class of officers who are already most unfortunately circumstanced with respect to position and promotion. The evil of allowing assistant-paymasters this distinctive lace could not have been very great, seeing that the order for them to wear it remained in force for two years, and even now has only been cancelled in a half-hearted way, no General Order having been issued. The change only became known by the issue of the new book on Naval uniforms, and although that was dated May last, no steps were taken to have this change in uniform made known. It has been allowed to slip out in a most unusual manner, and their Lordships do not appear to care much whether the change is made or not. Some assistant-paymasters have already taken off the second stripe, while others are waiting to see how the wind blows, and are inclined to take the usual grace allowed when a change of uniform is ordered.—Hampshire Telegraph.

An alteration is to be made in the engine-room complement of the composite gun-vessels of the Forward and Forester class, and instead of carrying an assistant-engineer as well as an engineer, as at present, the place of the junior engineer officer will be filled by a chief engine-room artificer. This is an arrangement which the Service at large would be glad to see extended to the furthest possible limits, nor does the Hampshire Telegraph think the branch itself would object to see a reduction in the numbers borne on the lists of the officers of the steam branch. It would be for the benefit of the cloth, especially as regards their position as officers, if there were not so many juniors as at present, who are called upon to do the minor duties of the engine-room and stoke-hold, and there can be no doubt that promotion would be accelerated if the junior lists were not so out of proportion to the absorbent qualities of the senior lists.

Obituary.

Admiral Philip Westphal died on Tuesday, at Ryde, at the advanced age of 98 years. The deceased was born in the year 1782, and entered the Navy in 1794 as a first- class volunteer on board L'Oiseau, and after serving for about 12 months on the coast of North America and in the West Indies, joined the Albatross and the Shannon, on the home station. He soon afterwards joined the Asia, and was again employed in North America until the end of 1800. He then became master's mate on board the Blanche, and in that ship took part in the action of Copenhagen on April 2, 1801. Three days after that event he was promoted to a lieutenancy, and transferred to the Defiance, flagship of Sir Thomas Graves. His next appointment was to the Amazon, in which vessel he saw some active service in the Mediterranean. He shortly afterwards accompanied Lord Nelson to the West Indies and back in search of the combined fleets of France and Spain. In 1806, Lieut. Westphal took part in a long running fight, which ended in the capture of two of the enemy's vessels. He was subsequently employed on the coast of France and on the north coast of Spain. In 1812 he was appointed first lieutenant on board the Junon, on the North American station, where he saw much service, and contributed to the capture of several vessels. In January, 1815, he was transferred to the Albion, bearing the flag of Sir George Cockburn, and shortly afterwards, on his return to England, he was promoted to the rank of commander. His last appointments were to the Warspite and Kent. He was advanced to captain in 1830. He attained his flag-rank in 1855, and became an Admiral on the Retired List in 1866.

Com. James B. Kinsman died on the 11th inst. in his 71st year. The deceased officer obtained his commission as lieutenant, Jan. 21, 1846, and from the following March until Feb. 1847, served in the Wanderer, 12, Capt. Philip H. Somerville, on the African station. He subsequently was attached to the Tortoise, store-ship, at Ascension, from Feb. 1847 until compelled to invalide Jan. 19, 1848, and was employed in the Coastguard service at Porthpean, Cornwall, from March 6, 1851, until promoted to the rank of retired commander, March 31, 1866. He was awarded a Coastguard pension, May 7, 1872.

The following questions were put by Mr. A. M. Sullivan (for Mr. O'Shaughnessy) to the First Lord of the Admiralty, in the House on Thursday:—"If Mr. Marcus Allen, Act.-Staff-Surg. of H.M.S. Albatross, with seniority as Surgeon of November, 1870, was admitted as a patient into Haslar Hospital in November, 1878, and after remaining some time under treatment was reported by Dr. Watt Reid (now Medical Director-General of the Navy) as suffering from incurable disease and a fit object for survey, with a view to his being invalided out of the Service; whether it was true that such survey was not granted by the late Medical Director-General; whether Mr. Allen was subsequently discharged 'as relieved,' not cured, and detailed for service afloat; whether on his applying to the Admiralty for permission to be surveyed at Haslar as to his fitness for duty, he was surveyed at the office of the then Medical Director, and being pronounced fit to serve he proceeded to take up the appointment, when his health completely failed, and he tendered his resignation in consequence; and whether he would be given any compensation for his services, or whether his case would be referred back to Dr. Watt Reid, the present Medical Director-General?" Mr. W. H. Smith, in reply, said: "Mr. Marcus Allen, while a patient in Haslar Hospital, in 1878, was recommended for survey by Dr. Watt Reid, on the ground that he was suffering from an incurable disease, but one which, nevertheless, was not beyond remedial measures. This survey, however, was not then ordered by the Medical Director-General. On Mr. Allen's discharge from hospital, he was appointed to a Coastguard cruiser. In accordance with the practice of the Service, he was medically surveyed in London, and not at Haslar, as he had requested, and was reported fit for active service. On this he requested permission to resign, as not equal to the responsibilities of the position, either mentally or physically. His resignation was accepted, and he never joined his ship. It is not customary to give compensation to officers who resign, nor to reconsider their cases with a view to their readmission into the Service, for which an Order in Council would be required."

THE NEW BOOT POLISH.—An entirely new idea for polishing boots has just been introduced which does away with the laborious method hitherto in use. Propert's Ebony Blacking polishes instantly without brushing, is of an oily nature, and, being waterproof, retains its lustre in all weathers. One application upon ladies', gentlemen's, or children's boots lasts a week.—Of Bootmakers, price 1s.—Wholesale of J. PROPERT, Battersea Park Road, London.

Amusements.

Until the electioneering excitement has abated, our London lessees well know that novelties of the stage have small chance of attracting attention, and at most theatres the run of the pieces already fixed in public favour will be prolonged to the latest possible date.

Mr. Tom Taylor's comic drama of "Still Waters Run Deep," originally produced at the Olympic under Alfred Wigan's management in May, 1855, is likely to have a renewed career of prosperity at the ST. JAMES'S, where the play has been brought out with remarkable attention to scenic accessories. When first represented, a quarter of a century ago, the stage decoration of this piece was thought to be more than usually perfect, but the art of building-up substantial interiors, and aiding the illusion of the scene by costly upholstery, was then quite in its infancy. The drama was founded on a novelette written by the late Charles de Bernard, called "Le Gendre," and published only two months before Mr. Tom Taylor constructed his clever adaptation. The original cast included Mr. Alfred Wigan, Mr. George Vining, and Mr. Emery, whose characters of John Mildmay, Captain Hawksley, and old Potter are now admirably filled by Mr. Kendal, Mr. Terriss, and Mr. Hare. The self-willed aunt, Mrs. Sternhold, and the erring wife, Mrs. Mildmay, first played by Mrs. Melfort and Miss Maskell, are now much more effectively portrayed by Mrs. Kendal and Miss Grahame, the former character being raised into a prominence never before attained. The subordinate personages in the piece are excellently illustrated by Mr. Wenman, Mr. Brandon, Mr. Draycott, and Mr. Denny, and the whole performance is at once perfectly artistic and thoroughly enjoyable.

A four-act play, called "The Battle of the Heart," has been produced at the DUKE'S THEATRE by Mr. Clarance Holt, who sustains the principal character of Gilbert Greystone, the pirate, his original part when the piece was first acted in the provinces thirty years ago. The author, John Wilkins, died during the autumn of 1853, in his thirty-third year. The melodrama, which has some striking situations, is now adequately supported by Miss Fanny Brough, Miss Laura Darrell, Mr. G. F. Leicester, and Mr. E. Major. Mr. Burnand's extravaganza of "Paris," in which Miss Lisa Weber and her burlesque troop perform, has been revived as a lively after-piece.

A new and original comedy, in three acts, called "Cobwebs," and written by Mr. Charles Wills, whose name has not yet been made familiar to playgoers, will be produced at the VAUDEVILLE next Saturday evening.

"Ninon" will be performed at the ADELPHI till the middle of April, when Mr. Dion Boucicault will appear in his own drama of "The Shaughraun." At the close of Mr. Boucicault's engagement, "The Corsican Brothers" will be revived, with entirely novel ghostly illusions. Mr. Henry Neville is now appointed stage-manager.

The subscription list for the eight weeks' performances of French plays at the GAIETY, commencing on May 24, already reaches the sum of £15,000.

"The Merchant of Venice," at the LYCEUM, will probably run to the close of the season. "The Corsican Brothers" is, however, ready for production at a week's notice. The version is the one Mr. Boucicault prepared for the Princess's, Mr. Henry Irving having purchased the right of representation from Mrs. Charles Kean.

A new comedy, by Mr. G. R. Douglas, called "Rival Candidates," has been tentatively produced at the FOLLY for a morning performance. It is only fair to the author to defer criticism until the novelty takes its place in the evening programme.

The well-known amateur company, known as "The Irrationals," gave a special entertainment at ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place, on Saturday night, under distinguished patronage, and in aid of the Irish Relief Fund. In the comedietta of "The Little Sentinel," Miss Ellen de Vere, Miss Hester, Capt. E. C. Johnson, Col. Rideout, R.H.A., and Mr. G. H. Phillips delighted the aristocratic audience assembled.

A HINT TO CANDIDATES AT THE COMING ELECTION.—Many a good speech is spoilt by inability on the part of the speaker to give clear utterance to his words, and there is no greater cause of indistinctness of speech than imperfect teeth. A man who aspires to oratorical honours should preserve his teeth, and how can he do this so effectually as by using ROWLAND'S ODONTO, which prevents decay, and at the same time sweetens the breath. Its unprecedented success for the last 50 years shows the favour in which it is held, while the fact of its containing no acid or mineral ingredients, renders it the safest tooth-powder that can be used.

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.

The PUREST. The MOST PALATABLE. The MOST DIGESTIBLE. The MOST EFFICACIOUS.
Incontestably proved by Thirty Years' Medical Experience to be
GENERAL DEBILITY, WASTING DISEASES of CHILDREN,
RICKETS, and ALL SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—A REMEDY FOR BILIOUS AND LIVER COMPLAINTS.—Those who suffer from bile and liver complaints should try the effects of this most valuable remedy, a few doses of which will make the sufferer feel elastic and vigorous, remove all impurities, give a healthy action to the liver, and strengthen the stomach. If bilious attacks be allowed to continue without using such a preventive, more serious casualties may arise, and the sufferer be consigned to a bed of sickness. Holloway's Pills are an extraordinary remedy, acting immediately in the removal of acidity of the stomach, indigestion, debility, and nausea; preparing the food thoroughly for assimilation, rendering each tributary organ perfect in its function, and stimulating the kidneys.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to purchase, as a going concern, the business now carried on by Mr. H. P. Truefitt, in Old Bond Street and the Burlington Arcade, London, together with Branches of the same at Brighton, Aldershot, Sandhurst, and at the Westminster Palace and Langham Hotels.

Mr. Truefitt was the original founder of The Toilet Club, a title since freely appropriated by Hair Dressers throughout the kingdom. The number of Subscribers is over 3,000, and the annual return for Hair Cutting, Washing, &c., irrespective of all sales in the Perfumery Department, exceeds £7,000 per annum, and in spite of the general depression in all retail trades, the gross return has been and is steadily increasing.

Among other advantages to Shareholders (both Ladies and Gentlemen), it is proposed that they shall be entitled to a DISCOUNT OF 20 PER CENT. on the ANNUAL TICKETS for Hair Cutting, Washing, &c., 25 PER CENT. upon all Articles manufactured by the Company, and 15 PER CENT. upon all other goods purchased for Cash at any of the Establishments, thus introducing into the business the TRUE principle of CO-OPERATION.

From a careful investigation into the past working of the business, and on a moderate estimate of the profits to be derived by the further development of the highly remunerative department referred to above, and by the addition of others, it is calculated that a dividend of from 12 to 15 PER CENT. may fairly be anticipated.

The only Contract which has been entered into is dated 26th day of February, 1880, between Mr. H. P. Truefitt and Robert Richard Edward.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares may be obtained at the London and County Bank, 21 Hanover Square, or any of its Branches; and of the Secretary, at the Offices of the Company in Old Bond Street.

These two old-established Family Hotels, from their especially advantageous position, both overlooking the Thames Embankment, combine light, air, and perfect quiet, although in the centre of London. They are now under one management, and are conducted on the principle of a fixed charge of SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE PER DAY, which includes a good Bedroom, Breakfast of hot and cold meats, Luncheon, Dinner of six courses, and Tea and Coffee in the evening; also the use of large, well-appointed Sitting-rooms, including an ELEGANTLY-APPOINTED DRAWING-ROOM.

These Hotels, containing upwards of 200 Rooms, have been for many years largely patronised by Members of Parliament, the Clergy, and by Military and Naval Officers and their Families, by reason of their central, but retired localities, affording all the comforts and luxuries of high-class Hotels.

THE reporters seem to have been putting some curious remarks into the mouth of the Duke of Cambridge. His Royal Highness has, in the course of the year, to make many after-dinner speeches on a familiar theme, and few men can speak more to the point than the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, when he is returning thanks for "The Army." But we are fairly puzzled to reconcile one part of his speech with another, at the Civil Engineers' dinner. It is clear, if words have any sense, that the illustrations used by the Duke of Cambridge to indicate the superiority of experienced men to raw lads implied that his Royal Highness thought long service was better than short service, that he liked long service and did not like short service, and that he considered the experienced soldier better than the inexperienced soldier. But why not say so? The Times did not report the speech at all, and the Observer plainly mistook what the Duke said, but the morning papers generally coincide in the sense of the versions they gave. "There has been a great controversy going on—some people holding the opinion that you cannot have soldiers serve too long; whilst, on the other hand, the new-fashioned opinion is that a soldier serves too short a period. I appear amongst you to-day as a neutral, and I wish to remain perfectly neutral between these two opinions."—Morning Advertiser. "There has been a great controversy going on, some old-fashioned people holding the opinion that you cannot have soldiers serve too long; whilst, on the other hand, there are new-fashioned people whose opinion is that a soldier cannot serve too short a period."—Morning Post. The Daily Telegraph agrees in sense. Why should one in the commanding position of the Duke of Cambridge have no opinions on the vital question which lies at the very root of our Army Organisation, and why should he abstain from declaring the faith that is in him, or decline to express an opinion, except by implication and inference? All allowance must be made for the difficulty and delicacy of the Royal Duke's position. The Commander-in-Chief is now the subaltern of a Parliamentary Chief, who is the representative of the varying and variable policy of the party which may be in power; but whatever may be the mischiefs to the Army from such changes as are, it would seem, inevitable in dealing with our military institutions, they are immensely aggravated if there be no fixed military policy, no opinion at all, at the Horse Guards. It may be necessary for the representative of the Queen at the head of her Army to abstain in public from opposition to the military policy of the Government of the day. He may be deterred from resigning his high office by motives of the most elevated character when he disapproves of what is done, and yet be obliged to hold his tongue when he is addressing his fellow-countrymen; just as he must, on all occasions, maintain that the Army is efficient, and eulogise the courage and devotion, which, thank God, no one can doubt. But on such a question as that of short service, or what we may call no service, as compared with full service, surely the Commander-in-Chief, if he has to speak at all, may speak out, with the courage of his convictions. His Royal Highness, however, is represented as having told the intelligent assemblage that he stood before them as a neutral between the two opinions. We take it from the context of his remarks that the Duke of Cambridge expressed his preference for long over short-service. Having announced what his position was, and having alluded to some sharp criticism on the Army somewhere or other, the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief referred to the recent experience of Lord Chelmsford, "who could say more on the point of" [long and short service] "than he could pretend to do;" and then put it to his hearers to say whether they would not prefer to have workmen of some experience in what they undertook rather than boys, to prove the proposition that a certain length of service is necessary to make a good soldier. Here is a distinct avowal for which the Duke of Cambridge, as a soldier, need feel no shame or sorrow; and the illustration with which he followed up his successful sortie from the neutral ground he had professed to occupy was perfectly happy and just:—"You find in your workmen that there is a certain happy medium of age, when all a man's physical energy is developed, without his losing any of the dash and spirit of youth. And as such a man would be most useful to you in your great undertakings, so it is with us in the Army. What we want to determine is, up to what period of life a man should remain in the Service, so that the country should not lose the benefit of this combination. We have not yet decided this point, but I hope we shall soon do so."—Amen!

In the Parliament which has just been dissolved, there were no fewer than 123 officers or ex-officers of the Navy, Army, and Auxiliary Forces. Judging from the number of naval and military candidates, there will be no lack of M.P.'s connected more or less with the Services in the new House of Commons. Several of the military Members will be officers on full pay, and they will bring into the House an amount of fresh and practical knowledge much needed. The Authorities do not approve of officers on full pay being in Parliament, and there is no doubt much to be said on their side of the question. In the first place, their Parliamentary duties, with their incidents, must take such Members a good deal away from their military duties. In the second place, they are in rather a false position, for if they are outspoken as Members, it may happen that they are obliged to criticise or blame their military superiors, especially the Horse Guards. Considerations of the general public advantage ought, however, to override mere departmental objections, and it is of the utmost importance, especially in these days, when great military questions are so often discussed in Parliament, and the House virtually constitutes itself a military censor, that there should be among the Members men qualified, both by past experience and present knowledge, to speak with authority on matters connected with the Army. Unfortunately, all Liberals have what may be termed a congenital dislike to soldiers; and those among them who, either as officials or as mere amateurs, are fond of trying their hands at tinkering the Army, dislike the exposure of their theories which military Members occasionally indulge in. Besides, soldiers are generally Conservatives. Hence there is on this point a consensus of opinion, on the part of both Liberals and the Horse Guards, that full-pay officers ought not to sit in the House. Happily, not even Mr. Gladstone or Lord Cardwell have ventured to propose a Bill rendering full-pay officers ineligible for seats in the Lower House. The day, however, may come when such a step will be taken. We trust to the good-sense of the House to render it abortive. The arguments in its favour would, we suppose, be,—firstly, that an M.P. cannot perform satisfactorily both his parliamentary and his military duties; secondly, that if an officer contemplates a parliamentary career, it is no great sacrifice to retire or go on half-pay; thirdly, that there are sufficient retired and half-pay officers to instruct the House on military matters, without the aid of officers actually serving. If an officer were certain that he had many years of continuous parliamentary life before him he would not, in all probability, hesitate to quit the Service, as soon as he was elected. As a matter of fact, however, the tenure of a seat is very uncertain, and an officer really fond of his profession would not care to resign his commission, in exchange for, perhaps, only a few months at St. Stephen's. As to the third argument, Members with military titles abound, but comparatively few of them possess much military knowledge of a useful description, and still fewer are able to impart their knowledge in an impressive, attractive manner. Some of the so-called Military Members owe their titles only to a connection—a connection more or less slight—with the Yeomanry, Militia, or Volunteers, and are greater authorities on agriculture than on soldiering. Others, though they have, at one time or another, served in the Regular Army, are in reality, no greater authorities than their comrades of the Auxiliary Forces. What military knowledge, save that part of it relating to finance, does Sir George Balfour possess? Sir Arthur Hayter only served as a subaltern in the Guards, and has been out of the Army for years. Of the remainder, many have either served solely in the Guards, and therefore do not possess a knowledge of the general requirements of the Cavalry and the Line, or are Artillery and Engineer officers, animated by that particularism which so strongly prevails among members of the Ordnance Corps, though we must say a word for the good work done by Major Arbuthnot and Major Nolan. If Sir William Codrington is elected for Lewes, we shall have in him a soldier, full of knowledge of and sympathy with every branch of the Army, but he has been for some time out of harness, and is a Codrington. Colonel Mure and Sir Charles Russell are good military representatives, but their personal experiences are not fresh. Sir Alexander Gordon is a bundle of crochets and cranks; Sir Henry Havelock has abundance of knowledge, ability, and experience, but is given a little to "fads." There are none others who strike us as worthy of mention, for Colonel Barttelot is only a politician, though he dabbles in military matters. There, therefore, is urgent need for an addition of full-pay officers, and we only regret that the number of those who are candidates is so small.

The ninth Brighton Volunteer Review, to be held on Monday, will not be the large gathering which had been anticipated, and in this respect will not bear comparison with those of previous occasions. This may, in some measure, be accounted for by the vacillation of the Government in first sanctioning, then postponing (which really meant abandoning), and finally, resanctioning, the display; but besides this, there are not wanting other evidences which prove that there is considerably less of interest in the event than was formerly shown, not only by the Volunteers themselves, but also by the general public. There is a natural charm in the idea of a "review" to the Volunteers, whose opportunities of working in divisions and brigades are, unfortunately, too few; and for this reason, as well as the very laudable one of giving the brigade commands to officers of the Regular Army who have a direct interest in the regiments under their leadership, the field-day will serve a useful purpose. With all the preparations at the War Office and the Horse Guards, however, combined with the energy of the Volunteer commanding officers, we are afraid that the result, viewed practically, will not be very beneficial. Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar has prepared an "idea," which, according to the plans we have inspected, appears to be about the best that could be conceived, considering the limited area of the ground to be manœuvred over and other restrictions. The physical powers of the Volunteers will undoubtedly be taxed, and their general efficiency tested in scaling the steep and rough down-land. Some of them will have to parade as early as half-past three in the morning, travel upwards of 100 miles, march 15 miles or more, and be under arms 20 hours. All this is useful, demonstrating as it does what they would be capable of, if required. The transit to the coast in a few hours of many thousands of men, should also be reckoned among the lessons to be acquired. There is nothing to be said against all this, but much against the farce which will be enacted on the Downs, with all the seriousness of a divisional field-day at Aldershot. The field-battery of the Honourable Artillery Company having now withdrawn, the artillery will be represented by 30 guns of position, horsed and equipped, most of the 18-pounder muzzle-loaders and 40-pounder Armstrongs having to be conveyed from London for the purpose. To our mind, the best part of the Easter programme is that which has been sketched out by the Volunteers who propose performing the journey to Brighton by march route. Some 5,000 officers and men will adopt this useful method of learning the work of soldiers. The marches will be conducted as if passing through an enemy's territory; outpost and picquet duties will be practised, and guards mounted at the halting-places during the nights. Ambulance and commissariat waggons will accompany the columns, some of which will have to cover between fifty and sixty miles of ground. A feature in the distribution of the forces arranged at the War Office is, that four of the brigadiers will lead the brigades they have the actual command of. These are Colonel Burnaby, Grenadier Guards (the City Brigade), Colonel Lyon-Fremantle, Coldstream Guards (the Victorias, St. George's, Irish, Paddington, and Bloomsbury corps), Colonel Sprot (Surrey Brigade), and Colonel Gipps, Scots Guards (the Grey Brigade, composed on this occasion of the South Middlesex, the London Scottish, Queen's, Inns of Court, and Artists'), Colonels Waller, R.A., and Brendon, R.A., have very judiciously been appointed to the Artillery commands. Most of the Staff appointments have already appeared in our columns, and we would only now further mention that the two vacant Volunteer commands have been offered to and accepted by Lieutenant-Colonel Davis (1st Essex) and Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon Ives (36th Middlesex), formerly of the Coldstream Guards. The corrected list of the distribution of the forces shows that the probable attendance will not exceed 19,000 of all arms.

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, Admiral Superintendent of Naval Reserves, arrived at Queenstown in the Lively on Wednesday, and will proceed on a tour of inspection of the Coastguard on the Irish coast, and will take the opportunity of visiting the distressed districts on the west coast.

Navigating-Lieutenant Jarrad, who has been borne on the books of the flagship in the East Indies since 1874 for employment in the marine survey of British India, has resigned his appointment, in consequence of a junior being placed over him. It appears that the other officers engaged in the survey are also much dissatisfied with the manner in which the Department has been administered by the civil official who has been unwarrantably placed over them in the absence of the superintendent. This official is Mr. Carrington, who was formerly employed as a draughtsman in the Hydrographic Department at the Admiralty, and without being duly gazetted to act for the superintendent, he has taken upon himself to address orders to Mr. Jarrad on matters relating to his professional duties. The Government has supported Mr. Carrington in his assumption of authority over his seniors, although it is difficult to see how his former appointment at the Admiralty as a draughtsman, or his more recent office at Calcutta, as head of the drawing branch, can have enabled him to become an authority in matters connected with the duties of a Naval surveying officer.

Captain John Moresby, who has now nearly reached the head of his List, and has seen so many preferred before him in the award of honours, has at last been remembered, the First Lord of the Admiralty having awarded him the good-service pension vacant by the promotion of Rear-Admiral Herbert. Captain Moresby has done good service, some of an exceptional kind, and has been several times under fire, and has been "mentioned" and specially promoted, although he has not yet been rewarded with the C.B. As Gunnery Lieutenant of the Thetis, he commanded her small-arm men in an expedition against Vancouver-Island Indians in 1853; and as Senior Lieutenant of the Driver, in 1854, he was at the capture of Bomarsund; in action with gunboats and batteries off Aboo, and other operations against the Russians. In the Hawke, in 1855, he was engaged with the batteries and gunboats off Riga; and when Commander of the Snake, in China, in 1861, was in charge of a force of Chinese troops defending Shanghai from an attack of Taepings; was actively employed against Chinese pirates, and captured or destroyed fourteen piratical junks, manned by 240 men. He commanded the Argus during the operations in Japan, when opening the inland sea, and was gazetted and promoted for services in the action at Simono-seki. As Captain of the Basilisk, he surveyed and explored the shores of S.E. New Guinea; discovered a new and shorter route between Eastern Australia and China, and placed on the chart over 400 miles of coast line, more than 140 islands (25 of which were inhabited), and many valuable harbours, anchorages, and rivers which were previously unknown.

In the United States Navy the hammock is being superseded, so far as the midshipmen are concerned, and the young officers are being provided with "steerage berths of bird's-eye maple and black walnut," while the ports are large enough to get out of. Writing-tables, lockers, permanent wash-stands, supplied from tanks, and an inlaid deck, are a few of the fittings now to be seen in the latest addition to the United States Navy, the Galena.

Out of a much larger number of applicants, many of whom were disqualified from not having sufficient service, the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have been pleased to submit the names of three officers of the Royal Marine Artillery and twenty of the Light Infantry for admission into the Indian Staff Corps, viz.:—Artillery—Lieutenants J. B. Woon, J. B. R. Butler, and W. F. Trotter. Light Infantry—Lieutenants G. Skipwith, C. H. Hayes, E. T. Paul, W. W. Taylor, C. V. W. Williamson, E. V. Goldsmid, C. H. Powell, H. C. Powell, R. Baillie, H. M. Abud, W. V. Quintin, F. G. Atkinson, C. H. Edge, A. Hatton, A. G. Cochran, W. J. Langford, J. M. Plumbe, J. B. Stevens, D. J. Kysh, and J. F. Daniell.

The position of those retired Rear-Admirals who were barred from any rise in rank, owing to the existence of the service qualification for Vice-Admirals, has been more than once referred to by us, and we have urged the fairness of giving them a step in rank, now that the service clause has been abolished. We believe the Admiralty has seen that it will be but just to these officers to remove the disqualification in their case, as well as in the case of officers on the Active List, and we have reason to hope that before long retired Rear-Admirals, who would have been qualified had they remained on the Active List, will be given a step on the Retired List. Perhaps their Lordships will also give attention to the grievance as to rank under which the Captains on the H I K List have so long suffered?

It is with surprise that we learn that the proposal of a Naval officer to commute, he being at the time bankrupt, has been favourably entertained by the Admiralty. We imagine that there is no law by which it becomes compulsory that a bankrupt should be compelled to commute any pension of which he may be in receipt, although he can be compelled to set aside a portion of that income for the benefit of his creditors. But to permit an officer, who is in financial difficulties, to commute his retired pay, is to aid and abet him in becoming a pauper and bringing the Service into disrepute.

An assurance from the First Lord of the Admiralty, that come what may, in regard to the amalgamation of the Royal Marine Artillery and Light Infantry, the claims and interests of those now serving will be carefully guarded, has been received by the corps with much satisfaction. The suspicion that some hard fate might be in store for the Marine Artillery arose mainly from the extreme reticence observed as to the subjects under discussion by the Committee. And when Mr. Smith said in the House that he did not think it advisable to make known what questions were under consideration, it was naturally feared that some most unpopular scheme was about to be smuggled through, if possible.

Gunnery officers of Coastguard ships and the gunners of drill-ships of the Royal Naval Reserve are in future to attend annually on board one of the gunnery-ships, in order that they may be put through a short course, with the view of becoming acquainted with any alterations in drill or matériel which may have been introduced.

The bursting of the Duilio's Armstrong gun has been a "nut" of the finest flavour for Messieurs the "Metallurgists," and they have been working their organs over it vigorously. They demand the surrender of Woolwich to them, and the capitulation of the Government garrison, but they bring up a very odd siege-train to bear on the official defences. There are all sorts, sizes, shapes, and systems, and ammunition to match; and "Sir Joseph," "Sir William" (No. 2), Mr. Parsons, &c., are lugging up their pet pieces, armed with tables of conclusive experiments and learned formulæ. Would it not be as well for the metallurgists to agree as to the gun of the future before they combine to oust the Woolwich makers, as a preliminary to a fight when they gain the position among themselves? The Gun Factories are busily engaged just now in manufacturing long breech-loading guns to meet the new requirements especially, of the Navy; and if these fail, it will be time enough to let in the "metallurgists," who cannot even calculate the force of the causes which destroyed the Tay Bridge, and who have certainly no standard gun to introduce at the present writing.

It is highly satisfactory to find that after six days' trial the case against Mr. James Dunn, Assistant-Constructor at the Admiralty, has broken down, and a verdict has been given in his favour. It would have been a lamentable thing for the credit of the Admiralty Office had an official of such standing not been able to clear himself of the charge of taking a commission of £500 when arranging for the purchase of a vessel by the Government. Although the First Lord of the Admiralty was constrained to take up the prosecution, the evidence given by him, by the Controller of the Navy, and others high in office at the Admiralty, tended to show that Mr. Dunn stood well in the estimation of those in authority at Whitehall.

In notifying last week that Captain Colomb, R.M.A., and Captain Champion, R.M.L.I., were candidates for Parliament at the coming election, we observed that the Corps of Royal Marines had never, to our knowledge, been represented in Parliament. We find, however, that these officers are not the first candidates who have presented themselves from the Marines, and that about the year 1832, Lieutenant-Colonel Robert Torrens was Member for Ashburton, and had been so for several years.

From information which reaches us, it might be advisable if the Commander-in-Chief on the China station were to issue a memorandum calling attention to the necessity of strict compliance with the station order against taking in water from the shore. It will be remembered that last year cholera appeared on board some of the ships on the Japan division of the station, and in the opinion of the medical officers, it was caused by water which had been allowed to be taken in. It was alleged that it was only intended for washing purposes, but seeing that water can be condensed without great cost, and that the station orders and the opinion of the medical officers were against this water from the shore being admitted on board, it is evident that there are commanding officers who go out of their way to run counter to orders and the opinions of others than themselves. The ships of the United States Navy in Japanese waters are very strict on this point, and no water is allowed to be fetched from the shore on any pretext whatever, for it is well known that wells and cesspits are mingled together, regardless of the consequences of contamination.

Professor Nordenskiöld's sentimental idea that some of the credit of the circumnavigation of Asia and Europe would be lost to him, if he left the Vega and came homewards overland from Naples or Lisbon, has, combined with strong easterly winds, upset the arrangements for his reception in this country. Every preparation had been made by his countrymen, members of the Scandinavian Club, to fête him at the Freemasons' Hall on Tuesday night, and the Royal Geographical Society intended to dine him at Willis's Rooms on the following evening. But the Vega, well fitted as she was for Arctic work, is a slow steamer, having small engines with much stowage for coal, and the unfavourable winds have put her "nowhere" on her passage from Lisbon, as she did not arrive at Falmouth until Thursday night.

The command of the Rapid has fallen vacant by the promotion of Commander Fitzgerald, who has been in command for two years. Captain Fitzgerald has worked his way well up to the head of the Commanders' List, and has reached the senior grade at an age that gives him but little time to spare if he is to attain the highest rank in the Service.

After passing over Lieutenant Haye some fifty times their Lordships have at last come to the same conclusion as was held by all who knew this officer, namely, that he ought to be promoted. Of course, the delay that has taken place in giving this step to Commander Haye will ever be felt by him in his future career, because it is impossible to recall those long years which have been spent by him on the Lieutenants' List after he had reached a position on the List from which he might have hoped to have been advanced. And Commander William Hope, who is also in this week's gazette, was becoming quite the old lieutenant before the Admiralty awakened to his merits. Not so, however, the remaining two new Commanders, for one has been promoted from his place as eighty-fifth on the List, and the other from the one-hundred-and-fifteenth place. Commander Lang should be considerably younger than Commanders Haye or Hope, for instead of having been largely promoted over, he has had the good-fortune of twice passing over the heads of many seniors, his arrival on the Lieutenants' List being materially hastened by his promotion out of the Royal yacht. Commander George Atkinson is even a greater success at getting through the Service by leaps and bounds, but his having passed over more than a hundred sub-lieutenants was due to his distinguishing himself in the Abyssinian operations, and for the same reason, we presume, he has now gone over more than a hundred lieutenants. The Service is by no means averse to seeing war services or any special work well recognised, and when a sub-lieutenant makes his mark, he deserves something more than getting his advancement to the Lieutenants' List a little hastened, for it is much more easy to get on than to get off the Lieutenants' List. At the same time, their Lordships should be able to give the most satisfactory reasons for promoting a lieutenant who is more than a hundred from the head of his List, and should be able to state with a clear conscience that no equally distinguished officer has been passed over. As it happens, there are, or rather were, above Commander Atkinson, one or two officers who have also gained special approbation and even early promotion for their services; and our reason for drawing attention to this matter, and making remarks which may appear a little ungracious, is that they may be remembered when future vacancies arise, for the officers to whom we allude have already been long enough serving as Lieutenants.

When the Admiralty altered its mind, or what passes for that in a collective body, and deprived certain officers of the second gold stripe on their cuffs, we did not hesitate to speak plainly against the Board thus playing with her Majesty's Order in Council of October, 1877, which gave Assistant-Paymasters over eight years' seniority, relative rank with Lieutenants under eight years. This Order in Council was published in the Navy List, and the Admiralty authority for wearing two rows of distinction lace, remained in force, and in the Navy List, until January last. But in the face of that, the Uniform Regulations, bearing date May, 1879, deprived these officers of their second stripe, and gave them a bit of narrow braid instead. Such a very unjust order, actually depriving officers of their stripes, and thus disrating them in the eyes of the Service, could not be allowed to pass without strong protest; and we have reason to hope that their Lordships have now seen the consequences of their thoughtless order. At all events, the obnoxious order has been partially rescinded, and there will be no "disrating," as those who were entitled to the second row at the date of the issue of the cancelling order will be permitted to retain it; but the privilege will not be accorded to those attaining the required seniority after the issue of the regulations. Needless meddling usually ends in muddling.

The officers of the African branch of the Commissariat Staff have reason to feel that they have been very unfairly treated with regard to the new Warrant. Not only are they debarred from all the privileges of the Warrant, but no steps have been taken to open to them any prospect, and they are doomed to serve on, apparently with no future before them. Promotion has remained for some time past in a stagnant condition, and so it will continue unless means are devised for helping them on. It would not surely be too much to offer them transfer to the General List after a given term of service. Considering the nature of the climate in which they are employed, it would be but an act of common justice to extend to them the advantages which have accrued to their brethren under the new regulations, and we trust that the War Office may be induced to take a favourable view of their case, which is admitted on all hands to be a very hard one.

There is no excuse for confounding two very distinct identities, and so we shall try not to invent one, but "Major O'Gorman" and "Colonel the O'Gorman Mahon" were confounded in our columns. The "Colonel" never was in the 90th Regiment or in the Crimea. The "Major" was in both.

We have had placed in our hands an interesting set of figures showing the inferior value of Staff-Corps pensions when compared with those granted to officers lately in the Indian Service, but now in the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers and the new Line regiments of cavalry and infantry. A captain of 20 years in the latter branches receives respectively £341 12s. and £350 a year as pension, while the Staff-Corps captain of 20 years' service receives only £191 12s. Majors in the above branches of 24 and 20 years' service have a pension of £482 and £500, as compared with only £292 a year for Staff-Corps majors of 24 years' service. Lieutenant-colonels, late Indian Artillery and Engineers, of 28 years' service have a pension of £595 a year, those of only 20 years' service in the new Line regiments receiving £600 for cavalry and £575 for infantry, while the Staff Corps man of 28 years' service is allowed £365 a year. Again, all absence on leave counts as service for pension, excepting in the Staff Corps, where all absence exceeding sixty days in any one year counts against service for pension. These facts are sufficient to show that the Staff-Corps officers are by no means as fortunate as the public generally supposes, and that there is a necessity for a large increase to be effected, if not in their pay, at least in their pensions.

The last Blue-book on South African affairs contains an "animated" discussion between Sir Bartle Frere and Sir Garnet Wolseley, which went on last September and October in reference to Pondoland politics. Sir Bartle applied for troops "to preserve the peace" and smash Umquikela, whom he called a "besotted chief," because his Excellency said his people stole cattle. Sir Garnet refused, very tersely, and said he thought the troubles needed police interference alone. There is evidently a good deal of polite official heat in the correspondence. The same Blue-book contains Colonel Bayly's despatch about the capture of Morosi's mountain, whom Sir Bartle calls an "old freebooter." We are told the "schanzen were stormed after a desperate resistance," but we see there was only one man (a native) killed, two men dangerously and two slightly wounded, and several "slight contusions" from stones and other missiles. So the desperation was not very destructive, at all events.

The following touching statement by Sékukuni (sic) appears in the Parliamentary Blue-book, March 10:—Further Correspondence, &c. (c. 2,505), sent by Sir Garnet Wolseley:—"I left my kraal before the fighting commenced, and was high up in the mountain in a cave, watching. The Swazis killed lots of people going down, and cleared out many of the caves. The one in which I was, they overlooked. After they had passed down, we went out to see who had been killed. I saw my brothers, Muriwani and Simpupuru, dead—the first shot, the other assegaied. I saw my two sons lying dead, assegaied by the Swazis. I saw six other children of mine dead, killed by the Swazis. I am childless and alone now. My wife and the two girls with me are all that are left."

The announcement of the desires, rather than intentions, of the Indian Government in regard to the armies of the great native Indian States, such as Gwalior and Hyderabad, must be regarded as very unadvisable and impolitic. In fact, it seems to be a great blunder. But Scindia, and Sir Salar Jung representing the ruler of the Hyderabad State, will probably be informed that there is no reason to apprehend any violent infraction of their treaty rights. It is very likely that if Scindia got back the Rock of Gwalior, and Sir Salar could secure the restitution of the Berars, they would gladly enter into an arrangement for a large reduction of their objectionable military establishments.

There does not seem to have been any reason for placing the discipline of the forces in South Africa and in Afghanistan on the same level, but Colonel Stanley spoke of them in the same breath. From all we can hear, the regiments in Afghanistan have behaved so well that there has been little need, if any, of the lash. The regiments in Afghanistan are not all constituted in the same way in which some of the South African corps were composed, and the average age of the non-commissioned officers and men is considerably greater in the former than in the latter. Besides which, they were under no demoralising influences. In fact, according to the accounts we have received, the punishment-roll in Afghanistan has been as light as it has been the reverse in South Africa.

Those of our readers who are looking out for employment in civil life will be interested in learning that the Governorship of Clerkenwell Prison has fallen vacant, by the death of Captain Todd, who held the appointment since 1861.

It may be interesting to readers to learn that the pay of officers of the Austrian Army is as follows, according to the Estimates for the present year, viz.:—Field-marshals, £1,050; generals, £840; lieutenant-generals, £630; major-generals, £420; colonels, £300; lieutenant-colonels, £210; majors, £168; 1st captains, £120; 2nd captains, £90; 1st lieutenants, £72; lieutenants, £60. But then no officer in any army has anything like the expenses to bear which are cast by the State on the unfortunate British officers.

It appears from the new Austrian Army and Navy Lists that there are in the Austrian Army 1 Field-Marshal (Archduke Albrecht), 24 feldzeugmeister and generals of cavalry, 77 lieutenant field-marshals, 129 major-generals, and 310 colonels on active service. On half-pay are 17 feldzeugmeister and generals of cavalry, 18 brevet feldzeugmeister and generals of cavalry, 81 lieutenant field-marshals, 63 brevet lieutenant field-marshals, 127 major-generals, 109 brevet major-generals, 356 colonels, and 135 brevet colonels. The general staff numbers 45 lieutenant-colonels, 44 majors, and 154 captains. The Infantry, the rifles, and the regiment of pioneers number 150 lieutenant-colonels, 362 majors, 2,316 captains, 2,578 senior lieutenants, 6,066 lieutenants, and 1,068 cadets. The cavalry has 42 lieutenant-colonels, 63 majors, 378 captains, 725 senior lieutenants, 906 lieutenants, and 111 cadets. The Artillery, 30 lieutenant-colonels, 72 majors, 422 captains, 596 senior lieutenants, 1,208 lieutenants, and 124 cadets. The Engineers, 28 lieutenant-colonels, 24 majors, 175 captains, 161 senior lieutenants, 285 lieutenants, and 8 cadets. The Train, 3 lieutenant-colonels, 6 majors, 57 captains, 55 senior lieutenants, 260 lieutenants, and 42 cadets. The Navy has 2 vice-admirals, 8 contre-admirals, and 17 captains of the first class, on active service; on half-pay, are 3 vice-admirals, 9 contre-admirals, and 8 captains of the first class.

In each succeeding Gazette notices appear of promotions which have been accorded to and decorations conferred upon members of the several administrative departments of the Army, in recognition of services performed during the recent campaigns at the Cape. We still look in vain, however, for any acknowledgment of the services of one department—the Veterinary—which seems to the official mind to be undeserving of the slightest encouragement, and altogether beneath notice. Have the Horse Guards no power to obtain justice for a body of officers whose one and only fault is that they are unpossessed of influence? In the interests of the Service, it is most desirable that something should be done to remove the discontent which at present exists by reason of the great and, as all will allow, most unjustifiable, indignities which are being heaped upon a body of most deserving officers.

Colonel Godfrey Clerk, Rifle Brigade, has, we learn, received the offer of the Adjutant-Generalship of the Madras Army, vacant by the death of Colonel F. W. Jebb, half-pay, late 67th Regiment.

On December 24, Sir Garnet Wolseley sent a dispatch to the Colonial Office, to bring to favourable notice the names of the officers who had "cordially assisted" him in operations since his arrival in South Africa, for such marks of favour as the Queen may see fit to bestow, and announced his intention of sending a supplemental dispatch with other names for notice. In the highest terms he mentions Sir G. Colley, Sir H. Bulwer, Colonel Lanyon, Mr. Herbert (his private secretary), John Dunn, Mr. Osborn, Bishop Schreuder, Mr. Shepstone, Lieutenant-Colonel Brackenbury (now in India, as secretary to Lord Lytton), and Captain M. Clarke, R.A. On February 28, Sir M. Hicks-Beach writes that he notes with pleasure the testimony Sir G. Wolseley bore to the ability, &c., "though I regret," he adds, "that where so many have served with distinction, it will be impossible to signify the Queen's appreciation of their services by any mark of royal favour, except in the case of a very small proportion of the whole number." That is very like irony, but it is only the expression of an official difficulty. On December 27, Sir Bartle Frere, forwarding a despatch from Colonel Lanyon to the Colonial Office, alludes to the sense he has expressed of the great services rendered by Colonel Lanyon and Lieutenant-Colonel Warren.

Colonel D. S. Greene, C.B., R.H.A., we understand, stands next to Colonel W. B. Saunders, R.H.A., on the Seniority List of regimental colonels for foreign service. Both these officers are likely to retire, unless the terms of a recent Circular from the Horse Guards are set aside.

From what we have heard, it would be as well for the public who are interested in the subject to suspend the formation of any opinion on the merits of General Massy's case till further information has been received here. We are inclined to think that on the particular occasion which has been made the pretext for depriving him of his command, General Massy has a right to be heard, and that there is a good deal to say. A very legitimate decision may be vitiated, if the cause assigned for it be destitute of foundation.

Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Selby Smyth, K.C.M.G., may shortly be looked for in England, on vacating his appointment at the head of the Canadian Militia. No man could have worked more zealously than Sir Edward Smyth, and he will leave the Dominion regretted by all. General Smyth has not confined his energies altogether to the Militia forces under his command. He has foreseen the necessity of sterner armaments than the excellent and well-trained Militia under his control. His desire has been to lift Canadian people one step, as it were, out of the Militia stage, and to induce them to form a few regiments of Regular troops for Imperial as well as Colonial defence. In this he has not proved successful, though there is no doubt his wishes will ultimately be realised. He, however, will leave the Canadian defences in a very different condition to that in which he found them, and if ever an officer deserved recognition on resigning a command he does, for the devotion with which he has from the first stuck to the post, notwithstanding repeated disappointments and much official discouragement.

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel C. W. Robinson, Rifle Brigade, is about to return to duty at Aldershot as deputy-assistant-adjutant and quartermaster-general, vice Captain W. F. Gatacre, 77th Regiment. Colonel Robinson held the appointment previous to his departure on special service to the Cape.

Colonel T. S. Brown, 83rd Regiment, who has been officiating for some time past as a Brigadier-General on the Bombay establishment, has been confirmed in that appointment, in succession to Colonel Howard Vyse, half-pay, late 3rd Hussars, resigned.

The Vote for the Militia in the Army Estimates for 1880-81 shows on paper an increase of some 1,555 men, of which it would appear the Artillery absorb 618, and the Infantry 935. Part of this increase is, no doubt, due to the praiseworthy efforts of the 2nd Surrey, and 1st and 6th West York in raising 2nd Battalions.

It may interest our readers at this season to know that it is now nineteen years since the first Easter Monday review was held at Brighton, when Lord Ranelagh, then, as now, at the head of the South Middlesex Rifles, had about 7,000 men under his command, General Sir James Scarlett watching the operations on behalf of the War Office. In 1862, about 17,000 of all arms were present, under Lord Clyde; and in 1863, nearly 15,000, under General Lord William Paulet. In 1864 the site was changed to Farley Heath, near Guildford, where upwards of 16,000 Volunteers assembled, under General Sir J. Pennefather, but this affair was not so satisfactory as its predecessors, and in 1865 Brighton was again the locale. Upwards of 20,000 were then assembled under General Sir Robert Walpole, and as many in the following year, when the operations were conducted by General Sir Robert Garrett, and witnessed by the Prince and Princess of Wales. In 1867, the site was again changed, Dover being selected, and General M'Cleverty had upwards of 23,000 men under his command; and in 1868 Portsmouth was for the first time visited, the force of 28,000 being under General Sir George Buller. In 1869, nearly 24,000 were again at Dover, this time under General Sir Hope Grant, the Commander-in-Chief and Prince Arthur being also present. This was the occasion of the memorable storm, which necessitated the dismissal of the men by Sir Hope Grant, and the fortunate revocation of the order by the Duke of Cambridge, when he arrived on the scene. In 1870, General Sir James Scarlett had nearly 26,000 men under his command at Brighton; and as many were present in the following year, when Sir Hope Grant directed, and subsequently made the report which has been so frequently referred to as an argument in opposition to these large field-days. The last Brighton field-day came off in the following year, under General Ellice, and was very favourably reported upon.

Assistant-Commissaries J. A. Boyd, E. Gaussen, H. A. L. Harvest, F. S. Christian-Hare, H. C. Rice, and E. I. Pocock, of the late Commissariat and Transport Department, are to be brought into the new Commissariat and Transport Staff as deputy-assistant-commissaries-general, as vacancies occur.

Lieutenant-Colonel H. F. Saunders, late 3rd West India Regiment (commuted pension), was installed on Saturday as a Military Knight of Windsor, Lower Foundation, to fill the vacancy in succession to Captain P. M'Innes, deceased. Colonel Saunders served at Sierra Leone and the Gambia from 1836 to 1841; was present with the expeditionary force in the interior in 1837; employed on a special mission to convey despatches to the French at Senegal in 1838; commanded the troops at a riot at the Gambia in 1838, and whilst at night patrolling captured a gun. Served in the Indian mutiny, and was mentioned in despatches as having distinguished himself, and for most devoted and gallant conduct (Brevet of Major and medal). After his retirement he served for some time in the Royal Body Guard.

The Vote for the Channel Islands Militia has been raised from £5,560 to £8,250; the increase being under the head of pay, &c., of the Permanent Staff. We trust this betokens a desire on the part of the authorities to place the Militia of these islands on a more satisfactory footing. As now constituted, it is difficult to see what possible use the force would be in war time.

We learn that Lieutenant H. H. Harward, 80th Regiment, has been placed under arrest, and will be brought to trial for cowardice in face of the enemy in the surprise at the Intombe River, where Captain Moriarty and a number of men of the 80th Regiment lost their lives. The officer commanding the 80th Regiment lately recommended Colour-Serjeant Anthony Booth for the Victoria Cross, "For his gallant conduct on March 12th, 1879, during the Zulu attack on the Intombe River, in having, when considerably outnumbered of the enemy, rallied a few men on the south bank of the river, and covered the retreat of fifty soldiers and others for a distance of three miles, and by his coolness saved the lives of the whole party, when it must otherwise have been killed by the enemy." It turned out that Lieutenant Harward was in command after Captain Moriarty fell, but that he had mounted a horse and made away to give an alarm, leaving his men under command of the serjeant. Captain Carey having been tried by court-martial, there was no alternative but to try Lieutenant Harward also.

The Secretary of State for War has finally decided to retire the seventeen lieutenant-colonels of regiments, still commanding, who obtained their rank previous to the abolition of Purchase in 1871. On the abolition of Purchase, all regiments should have been placed on an equal footing, and every colonel compelled to vacate his command after five years' tenure of office. Had this been done, the senior majors and captains of all regiments in the Service would have been promoted either previous to or in 1876, and next year the junior majors and second captains would be looking forward to their steps. As it is, even if the colonels be retired at once, ten years must elapse before, in the ordinary course of events, the senior captains of these seventeen unfortunate regiments could obtain command; but as their average total service exceeds twenty-three years, and their average service in the rank of captain sixteen, it is evident that length of service will prevent more than two or three ever attaining that position. It is said the colonels are to be allowed a reasonable time to retire on half-pay, and receive Staff appointments; and that, should the majority be willing to go, no Warrant will be issued. We cannot see what the majority has to do with the matter. Why should a gross injustice be done to one regiment any more than to sixteen? Many of these colonels have, we believe, been frequently offered brigade depôts, and refused them; so unless compulsory steps be taken, it is nearly certain that all will not go. Officers are quite satisfied with the regimental system, and never grumble at seeing juniors promoted in other regiments; but in the present case, the majors and captains of these seventeen regiments feel they have a strong grievance, as they think, and with reason, that they are unfairly treated.

With reference to the letter which we printed recently from Colonel Ross, of the Highland Rifle Militia, remarking that his regiment had been inadvertently included among those we had mentioned as not objecting to the change of uniform to red, our authority was based on the questions sent to commanding officers of Militia regiments, August 1, 1876:—"Do you see any objection to the clothing of a Militia regiment being assimilated to that of the Line battalions of the sub-district to which it belongs? Answer: "No, except the expense to the officers, which in this regiment would be considerable, it being a rifle regiment." We are afraid if individual interests are always to be considered, as is now the fashion, no reforms of any kind can be effected, and our military organisation will remain a curiosity to the Continental Powers.

A correspondent writes from India by last mail:—"The Commander-in-Chief is at last going up towards the front. The horses leave Calcutta to-day, and the Chief and Staff will follow in another week or so. You will, of course, have heard by telegram of this move, but you may not have heard that Sir Frederick Haines has not been permitted to take over the charge of military operations into his own hands, which he has for a long time been wishing to do. The Viceroy, however, is obdurate, and will not sanction Sir Frederick's leaving India, and sent him a few days ago from the Foreign Office a voluminous budget of 'political' reasons. What these may be has not transpired, and I cannot even guess at their nature, as it is difficult to perceive how the political aspect of affairs can be affected by the assumption by the Commander-in-Chief of the conduct of operations. So Peshawur is at present the chief's destination, but all the Head-quarter Staff are eager to move on, and, with a man like General Greaves to second him, it will not be long, I imagine, before Sir Frederick finds some pretext for the necessity of his presence on the other side. It has been doubtful for some time as to whether the troops now on their way from Bombay to Southern Afghanistan were intended as a relief to General Stewart, or a reinforcement. The former was the generally accepted idea, as the Kandahar Force have now been out in the field a long time, and have never apparently had much to do. The Bombay troops are indeed a 'relief,' but the Bengal troops, on the Quetta and Kandahar line, relieved by them, will not return direct to India, but go further on afield. General Stewart is to march upon Ghazni, and when that citadel is in our hands there will not be much more in the way of fighting to be done, as far as Afghanistan is concerned. It will then only remain to carry out the provisions of the Government for the future administration of the country, whatever these may be, and retire whatever troops are not required to India; General Stewart's force probably taking the Gomal route, with a view to punishing the Waziris on their way. To Ghazni General Stewart's force have about 220 miles of lofty climbing on bad roads to get over, and they will not do it in less than six weeks; but by the beginning of May affairs should begin to assume a settled aspect; at least, by that time we ought to have some indication of what the future policy is to be. The Government are at length profiting by experience, and have formed on paper a second Reserve Division, which is to be at once embodied, should that which is now under the command of General John Ross at Peshawur have to be pushed forward. Everybody has been warned, and as no more troops are forthcoming from Madras, the civil authorities are prepared to augment the police force, with a view to taking over some of the garrison duties in Bengal."

We learn from St. Petersburg that Colonel Charles MacCarty, of the United States Army, has arrived in that capital, to offer to the Russian Government the exclusive right to his new species of rocket, and his system of transporting dynamite and other explosives on the field of battle. It is stated that the Russian Government invited him to visit St. Petersburg, to explain his appliances to the military authorities.

The Italian army, according to the Annuario Militare, numbers 2 generals, 46 lieutenant-generals, 84 major-generals, 282 colonels, 304 lieutenant-colonels, 731 majors, 2,002 captains, 3,493 premier lieutenants, and 4,770 sub-lieutenants. The number of military cadets is 2,025.

The Army.

1st Life Guards. Lieut. Leigh has not accepted the invitation to stand as a Conservative candidate for Tamworth.

2nd Life Guards. At the service at Holy Trinity Church, Windsor, on Easter Sunday, the music, including "The Hymn of Praise" and "The Silver Trumpets," will be played by the full band of the regiment, the sermon being preached by the Rev. Arthur Robins. The following correspondence will be read with satisfaction by the whole of the troops of the Household Brigade:—"Holy Trinity Rectory, Windsor, March, 1880.—My Lord Archbishop,—In page 40 of 'The Memoirs of Catharine and Cranfurd Tait,' your Grace writes, 'on every side were evident signs of the vice and misery which a garrison is apt to spread around its neighbourhood.' This must be taken to mean that the military element is 'apt' to demoralise all that comes within its reach. I have long had relations with the soldiers here, and that there are no such signs of 'vice and misery' reflected from this garrison I am in a position to affirm. An experience of many years in close association with the Brigade of Guards at Windsor has not made me acquainted with that 'vice and misery' which your Grace seems almost to believe is inseparable even from a peaceful military occupation. On the contrary, there is no more vice of any sort, amongst soldiers, than is to be found amongst civilians. Moreover, whenever they are led away by any of the infirmities of the flesh, they are not unfrequently more sinned against than sinning. When I came here, some years ago, there was urgent need of another church in a very poor district of my large parish. I went straight to the Guards, and told them what I wanted to build. Their answer was, 'Go and build, and we will do what we can to see you through it.' To a very great extent, by their liberality it came to pass that the church was built, and by their continued support of my work many a stronghold of vice and misery in this town has been shaken. The Household Troops have been most zealous in helping me to deal vigorously with the vicious and miserable. Officers and men alike have all done their best to strengthen my hands. I am confident your Grace will be gratified to hear that all garrison towns are not apt to be sources of contamination to their neighbourhood, and that the influence of the soldiers in Windsor is an influence for good.—I have the honour to remain, my Lord Archbishop, your Grace's very faithful servant, Arthur Robins, M.A., Chaplain to the Queen, Rector of Holy Trinity, and Chaplain to H.M.'s Household Troops at Windsor. To his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury."—"Lambeth Palace, March, 1880.—My Dear Sir,—I have to thank you for your letter. I am glad that your experience has enabled you to form so favourable an opinion of the influence of the military element in a garrison town.—Yours very truly, A. C. Cantuar. The Rev. Arthur Robins."

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). The Prince and Princess of Wales and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud visited Regent's Park Barracks on Tuesday morning, and were present at some "rides" in the school, and at an exhibition of swordsmanship by non-commissioned officers and troopers. Their Royal Highnesses afterwards lunched with Lieut.-Col. Ives and the officers of the regiment.

1st (King's) Dragoon Guards. Lieut. Dewar arrived home from the Cape on Wednesday in the mail steamer African.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Brevet Major Stewart has been appointed to act as military secretary and chief of the staff to Gen. Sir Garnet Wolseley, at the Cape.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers). When we heard from Afghanistan head-quarters, two squadrons were doing duty with the Jellalabad garrison, one squadron being attached to the movable column. We (Lahore paper) hear from Simla "that Major Goldie, of the Carabiniers, assistant-adjutant-general at Simla, has received orders to join army head-quarters in Calcutta at once, to act as military secretary to Sir Frederick Haines, vice Col. Preston, proceeding home." In a subsequent issue we read:—"The report we mentioned last week as to the officer to be appointed military secretary to the commander-in-chief is confirmed. Major Goldie is already en route for Calcutta, and will releive Col. Preston at once.

5th Lancers. A telegram to the Times, published on Monday, says:—"The majority of the Indian papers express much sympathy with Gen. Massy. They argue that the censure passed upon him by the Government and the Commander-in Chief for his conduct on the day the guns were lost was too severe, if not wholly unmerited, and they devote considerable space to the defence of him."

6th Dragogns. The Lahore paper of the 4th inst. says:—"Capt. McKean, of the Inniskillings, has proceeded to join his appointment as aide-de-camp to Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. F. Maude, K.C.B., V.C., commanding the Rawal Pindi division."

8th Hussars. The funeral of Lieut.-Gen. De Salis, colonel of the regiment, took place at Harlington Church, near Hillingdon, on the 18th inst. Cols. Mussenden and Montague and Capt. Field were amongst the mourners. The coffin-plate bore the following inscription:—"Gen. Rodolph de Salis, Count of the Germanic Empire, C.B., and colonel of the 8th Regt. of Hussars. Died, March 13, 1880, aged 68 years."

9th Lancers. When we heard from India, Capt. Lord W. Beresford, V.C., had returned from Cabul. Lord W. Beresford is said to have made the journey from Cabul to Calcutta in a very little over nine days, thus, in the phraseology of the sporting press, having performed the journey in the shortest time on record. The Indian Daily News protests against "the recall of so admirable a troop-leader as Lord W. Beresford from Cabul, where men of his stamp are so much wanted. Nothing can be more unfair and more destructive of true military spirit than the system which prevails, of allowing officers on staff employment to go galloping about the world wherever there is a chance of distinction, and to get the cream of the fighting and the cream of the rewards." Capt. Chisholme assumes command of the depôt at Canterbury, where Lieut. Trower also takes up duty, vice Evans.

11th Hussars. The Bombay Gazette has the following:—"The London Gazette of the 30th ult. announces that Capt. Rivett-Carnac, the assiduous military secretary to his Excellency the Governor, has been honoured with a brevet majority 'for services rendered in India.' These services are very various and valuable. Major Rivett-Carnac, who has been 23 years in the Army, did arduous and perilous work during the Mutiny, for which he has not perhaps received all the credit which was deserved. Recently, as military secretary to the Governor, it was his fortune to contribute, by his exertions, to the prompt and satisfactory despatch of the Malta expedition, and again in Sind and in Beloochistan, he ably and efficiently seconded the successful efforts of his chief to surmount the difficulties of transport which at one moment seemed insuperable. We are glad that this recognition, which many will probably consider inadequate of the services of this energetic and self-denying officer, has been made before his Excellency the Governor leaves office."

14th Hussars. Capt. the Hon. H. G. Gough, who is at home on leave from India, has been attached to the staff of the Dublin District for one month for staff work, preliminary to his being examined for admission to the Staff College.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

A special troop train, conveying Nos. 14 and 15 Batys. 9th Brig., under command respectively of Majors Crawford and Arbuckle, arrived in Bombay on Feb. 23 from Deolalee. Both batteries were originally ordered to Aden, but the orders were countermanded, and they were ordered to the front. Soon after the arrival of the train in Bombay, the men of the 14th Baty. were embarked on board the transport Chilka. The men of the F-2 Baty. were also embarked on the Chilka. The following are the names of the officers who embarked:—F-2, Major Dewar, Capt. Blakeley, and Lieut. Bunbury; 14-9, Major Crawford, Capt. Buckle, Lieuts. Calder and Ogilvie.

B Brig., at Canterbury, will be relieved by E Baty. C Brig., from Woolwich; K Baty. B Brig. will be removed from Canterbury to Ballincollig, in relief of I Baty. B Brig.

Capt. A. J. Bigge started last week for the Cape, to make preparations for the inland journey of the Empress Eugénie; and Lieut. F. G. Slade sailed on Thursday in the suite of the Empress. Capt. Bigge and Lieut. Slade were intimate friends of the Prince Imperial, who was attached to the battery of artillery to which these young officers belonged, at the autumn manœuvres. They both behaved with signal courage in the recent campaign, and were mentioned in the despatches narrating the victory of Kambula. At Ulundi, also, they distinguished themselves by their coolness and bravery.

The following appointments have been made by the Government of India:—"No. 2 Field Baty., Hyderabad Contingent.—Lieut. G. R. Moore, R.A., subaltern, No. 4 Field Baty., to be subaltern, vice Capt. S. G. F. Selfe, R.A., who vacates on promotion. No. 4 Field Baty.—Lieut. A. H. P. Turner, R.A., officiating subaltern, No. 2 Field Baty., to be subaltern, vice Lieut. Moore."

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Indian Gazette contains the following:—"Major T. F. Dowden, R.E. (late Bombay), will officiate as superintending engineer in Beloochistan and secretary to the agent to the Governor-General, vice Lieut.-Col. R. de Bourbel (late Bombay), who, on relief, will join his permanent appointment as consulting engineer to the Government of India for State Railways."

It is announced in the Gazette of India that Sir A. Clarke, K.C.M.G., C.B., has been granted "leave of absence on medical certificate for a period of four months."

The services of Capt. G. M. Cruickshank (late Bombay) have been placed at the disposal of the Military Department in India for employment as field engineer at Candahar.

It is reported from Meerut, on very good authority, that Major B. Blood, who was so long associated with the Bengal Sappers and Miners, will assume command of the corps, vice Major E. T. Thackeray, V.C. (late Bengal), whose wound, it is said, will compel him to come home for a time.

The Standard says:—"The report of the acceptance by Col. Gordon—'Chinese Gordon'—of employment under the Chinese Government is devoid of any foundation, as Col. Gordon, on return from Egypt, has been restored to the effective establishment of the Royal Engineers, and will shortly resume duty."

Capt. F. I. Edwards, extra Groom-in-Waiting, has been appointed Groom-in-Waiting-in-Ordinary to the Queen, in the room of Lieut.-Col. A. Pickard, V.C., C.B., deceased.

The Jellalabad correspondent of the Times telegraphs on March 1:—"Lieut.-Col. St. John has resigned the Astrabad Consulship, and returns to Candahar as Political Agent in independent charge after Gen. Stewart's departure. He left Calcutta on Wednesday, carrying a letter and presents from the Viceroy to Sirdar Shere Ali. The Indian Government is to be congratulated on having succeeded in retaining the services of an officer who is eminently fitted for this delicate and responsible position, and who, as Gen. Stewart's political assistant, has already had no small share in securing the order and prosperity which have prevailed in Candahar during our occupation."

Major G. S. Hills has been appointed commanding R.E. to the Reserve Division, Cabul Field Force.

D. Shipley, commanding the 40th Regt.:—"Camp, Shahjahanpur, Feb. 28, 1880.—No. 357.—On the departure of Capt. Kelly from the 40th Regt., the officer commanding begs to express the extreme regret he feels at losing such an excellent officer, and to thank Capt. Kelly most heartily for the admirable service he has done in the many posts he has held in the regiment. Lieut.-Col. Shipley feels that in losing him he loses one of the very best officers in her Majesty's Service—one who, with a complete knowledge of his duties, combined a zeal and capacity for hard work, rarely found, and one, too, who looked after the interests of the men in the most admirable manner. In saying good-bye to Capt. Kelly, the officer commanding assures him that he carries the best wishes of the officers and men of the 40th Regt. for his future prosperity, and their very sincere regret that he should so soon be lost to the regiment.—By order (signed), H. K. Cavaye, Lieut.-Adjt., 40th Regt."

44th Regiment. Lieut. Carter is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed officiating wing-officer, 1st Punjab Infantry, on probation.

ROYAL MARINES.

Serjt. George Miller (lately invalided from the Marine Band at Plymouth) has been presented by his comrades with a writing desk as a mark of their regard and esteem. The presentation was made by the bandmaster (Mr. Froehnert).

50th Queen's Own. The regiment has arrived at Colchester from Edinburgh, and taken over quarters. Lieut. Brock is expected to obtain the company vacant by the retirement of Brevet Major Clarke.

51st Light Infantry. By later accounts from Afghanistan, head-quarters and four companies were at Pezwan, where Col. Acton was commanding, and four companies at Kotal. Major and Brevet Col. Acton succeeds to the command, vacant by the retirement of Col. Madden, C.B.; Brevet Major Chatfield, from the Indian Staff, becoming major.

57th Regiment. Capt. Weigall, a candidate for the Army Pay Department, has proceeded from Dublin to London, to complete the period of his probation at the War Office. Capt. Lord Gifford, V.C., proceeded to Windsor on Tuesday in the evening, and had the honour of being included in her Majesty's dinner-party.

60th Rifles. Lieut. Bewicke, 4th Batn., has joined the staff of Sir Ashley Eden in India, as aide-de-camp. Capt. Croft, 4th Batn., is about to retire from the Service.

63rd Regiment. Information has reached England of the death of Lieut.-Col- W. F. F. Gordon, commanding the regiment, which occurred on the 17th inst., at the age of 42 years. Col. Gordon, who was eldest son of the late Brigdr.-Gen. Gordon, H.E.I.C.S., joined the Army May 1, 1855; became major in the 20th Foot, Jan. 24, 1873; exchanged to the 63rd March 26 of the same year, and succeeded to the command of the regiment as lieut.-col. Aug. 6, 1879. By Col. Gordon's death Major Auchinleck, who exchanged to it from the 53rd in Aug., 1876, will most probably become lieut.-col., and Capt. Gwynne major.

64th Regiment. The Standard states that Capt. Dugmore is announced as Home-rule candidate for Athlone.

66th Regiment. We learn from Sibi on Feb. 26:—"The 66th Regt. leaves at noon to-day for Quetta."

70th Regiment. Major A. O. Rutherfurd, late of the regiment, died in London on the 19th inst.; aged 59 years.

78th Highlanders. Two companies have moved from Poona to Baroda. Lieut. Christopher has been appointed acting aide-de-camp to the Governor of Bombay.

80th Regiment. The regiment arrived at Maritzburg on the 12th ult. This is the regiment which was detained at Potchestroom on account of the expected excitement in connection with the arrest of Pretorius. The plan of sending them overland to the Cape had to be abandoned, as there was no probability of obtaining sufficient stores en route. On the arrival of the regiment, Lieut. Harward, who was in command of that unfortunate Intombi affair, was arrested, and is to be tried by court-martial. This step seems most peculiar, as the mistake of which Lieut. Harward was guilty, or is supposed to be guilty, occurred in March last, and he has been allowed to retain his position for nearly twelve months. The correspondent of the Natal Witness writes from Newcastle on Jan. 30:—"Our old friends, the gallant 80th Regt., arrived here on Wednesday, having completed a 21 miles' march that morning without any apparent fatigue or weariness; as the men were soon seen dispersed over the town looking up old friends, for both officers and men have made friends of the colonists wherever they have visited, the officers by their obliging, affable, and social agreeableness, and the men by their good behaviour. The regiment has not, like some other corps, disgusted the colonists by rowdy ruffianism or thefts. Their conduct both in camp and field while in South Africa is deserving of special favours from the British and colonial publics. This regiment, after marching over more ground in South Africa than any other corps ever has done, looks better in health and physique than when they first arrived, and has lost fewer men by sickness than any other regiment. The 80th Regiment deserves great credit for their coolness on the night of July 3, when their bivouac was rushed by the native irregulars of Newdigate's column during one of the periodical scares, and without creating any alarm they drove the intruders back, restored order, and turned in again with the greatest coolness. The whole affair passed off with so little noise that although I was sleeping only a few yards off, it did not disturb me, and although the 80th drove back the frightened kaffirs with bayonets, there was no serious casualty, and the eve of the battle of Ulundi passed without further trouble. The regiment started at 2 a.m. this morning. Col. Tucker will rejoin them at Ladysmith; he left here yesterday to visit Rorke's Drift and Isandhlwana. It is to be hoped that the enthusiasm of the British public, which has been so warmly expressed on the return of the first batch of heroes, will not be so far cooled down as to neglect those whose duties detained them longer in South Africa." 2nd Lieut. Williams arrived home from the Cape in the mail steamer African.

83rd Regiment. Two companies, under Capts. Bond and Bell and 2nd Lieuts. Harris, Barnett, and Kettlewell, have proceeded to Satara from Belgaum. The Lieut.-Colonelcy is about to fallvacant, Col. Brown having been confirmed in his brigade command in India, and being about to be placed upon half-pay.

85th Light Infantry. Capt. Hon. C. Dutton has temporarily vacated his Staff appointment in India, and proceeded on field-service to Afghanistan. The Lahore paper says:—"Capt. Welman passed through Lahore the other day, to join his regiment in the Kurum. Capt. Welman left England when hostilities recommenced in September, but had to return from Malta suffering from a sunstroke. He brought out drafts of about 300 men for the 72nd Highlanders and the 100th Regiment." A draft, under command of Capt. Ives, reached Thull on Feb. 20.

91st Highlanders. The Mauritius Commercial Gazette thus announces the death of Major Gurney:—"With deep regret we have to announce the death of Major W. S. Gurney, commanding the detachment in Mauritius of H.M.'s 91st Highlanders, who died on Jan. 27, at 8 o'clock, at the Villa, Moko. But a few days ago Major Gurney was apparently well and strong, taking an active part in the athletic sports of his regiment and in various regimental amusements, notably in the performance of the Garrison Dramatic Club, of which he was president. He was foremost in promoting the social and moral welfare of the soldiers under his command, and more than one of his men has spoken to us of him as 'the soldier's friend,'—a proud and distinctive title, not enjoyed by many commanding officers. The deceased had done good service in the late Zulu war, and it is believed that the privations and hardships he there underwent must have enfeebled his constitution, so as to have rendered him susceptible to the prevalent fever of this island. Major Gurney was one of the most popular officers that has ever been stationed in this colony, beloved alike by his officers and by his men, and his death has cast a gloom over military and social circles here, which time alone can dispel. In him, his brother officers have lost an example which they may well be proud to imitate, and his men a lenient and just commanding officer, a ready and true counsellor, and, as we said before, a real friend. The funeral of the deceased officer took place on the 28th inst., at 5 p.m., with military honours, at Beau Bassin."

92nd Highlanders. At Sherpur arrangements are being made for mounted infantry, 60 men, to be chosen from the 67th, 72nd, and 92nd Regts. Major White, of the 92nd, is mentioned as the probable commandant.

94th Regiment. Lieut. Cowper arrived home from the Cape on Wednesday in the mail steamer African.

104th Fusiliers. The regt. has moved from Belfast to Dublin and taken over quarters, relieving the 82nd. Col. C. E. H. Græme, who was placed upon half-pay a few weeks ago from command of the regt., under the five years' system, died at Madeley Manor, Staffordshire, on the 18th inst., aged 51 years. Col. Græme served in the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1857-59, as interpreter to the 2nd Batn. Rifle Brigade, and as assist.-comy.-gen. to Sir Hope Grant's and Sir Alfred Horsford's divisions, and was present at the final siege of Lucknow (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp). He joined the Army, Feb. 20, 1847; became capt., June 17, 1858; major, March 2, 1868; lieut.-col., Feb. 25, 1875; and col., Feb. 25, 1880.

2nd West India Regiment. Lieut. Salmon, a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed officiating wing-officer, 30th Bengal N.I., on probation.

Commissariat and Transport Department. Deputy-Comy. W. T. C. Wilton, on the Retired List, died at Ramsgate on the 22nd inst., aged 46 years. The deceased, who was a son of the late Rev. E. Wilton, M.A., of West Lavington, Wilts., entered the War Office as temporary clerk in March, 1855; was appointed purveyor's clerk in 1857; served at the capture of Canton and throughout the Crimean campaign as secretary to the principal medical officer (medal, with clasps). He was appointed deputy-comy., June 23, 1870, and lately retired.

Ordnance Store Department. The Natal Mercury has the following:—"Although from the nature of their duties—viz., the custody and distribution of all military equipment, ammunition, and general army stores (food alone excepted)—the officers of the Ordnance Department do not usually come under fire in action, nevertheless, judging by the experience of the recent operations in South Africa, the strain imposed upon them would appear to be nearly as fatal in its results as the fire of an enemy, as may be seen by the following illustrations:—The two Ordnance officers who, under the instructions of Comy.-Gen. W. F. Wright, performed all the duty devolving upon their department with the army during the late Gaika-Galeka campaign—Comy. Hillier and Assist.-Comy. Hunt—died at Kingwilliamstown shortly after the conclusion of that war. During the progress of the Zulu war, Deputy-Comy. Phillimore, the Ordnance officer attached to Col. Wood's column, died at Utrecht from exhaustion. Assist.-Comy. Hobbs, attached to Col. Glyn's column, after lying stricken with fever for a long time at Helpmakaar, was invalided to England. Assist.-Comy. Wainwright, attached to Col. Pearson's column, and in charge of the great depot of ordnance stores on the Lower Tugela, was invalided to England on the evacuation of Fort Pearson, after having suffered from dysentery and coast fever for many months previously. Assist.-Comy. Barrett, stationed at Port Durnford, and afterwards at St. Paul's, was also invalided from the same causes; and now we learn that Assist.-Com. de Ricci, who had sole charge of the ordnance depot at the base of operations from Sept., 1878, to August, 1879, is lying seriously ill at Durban. On the other hand, in the lists of promotions, decorations, and other rewards, published in the Gazette, we seek in vain for the names of any of the officers of the Ordnance Department. Entirely absorbed—from their most courteous and gallant chief down to the last subaltern—in the performance of their arduous and trying duties, the officers of this department appear to have been entirely lost sight of."

Pay Department. "Probationer" writes:—"The re-organisation of the Commissariat and Ordnance Store Departments being now an accomplished fact, it behoves the Army Pay Officers to look well to the position they now hold in comparison with the officers of those Departments. It will be seen that they now hold a subordinate place, for, at present, the highest rank that can be obtained by them is that of staff paymaster, with honorary rank of major; whereas in the sister Departments, there are no less than four grades, namely, commissary-general, ranking with major-general; deputy-commissary-general, ranking with colonel; assistant-commissary-general, after five years, ranking with lieutenant-colonel; deputy-assistant-commissary-general, ranking with captain. The highest rank a paymaster can rise to being that of major (no matter how long he serves), thus keeping him junior to an assistant-commissary-general of five years. This cannot be right. It must be borne in mind that before an officer can join the Army Pay Department, he must be a captain in the Army, he must forfeit all his commission-money, and 'what for!' Why, an increase of pay of a few shillings, with the very uncertain prospect of promotion (particularly for those who joined since April 1, 1878), more particularly for those now joining. They have not even now the privilege of drawing their allowances for either servants or lodging, notwithstanding the Royal Warrant issued on the formation of the Department. The boon (which certainly was great) has now been withdrawn, but at the time it was allowed was one of the inducements for officers to come forward at first, and who would otherwise not have thought of it. The department is now one of the most important branches of the Service, has to be composed of men upon whom the greatest trust must be placed, and upon whom the very great responsibility of the disbursement of large sums of public money rests. It is thus evident that their position must be improved if the authorities wish to obtain the services of the most efficient men."

Medical Department. We (Lahore paper) understand that the Government of India have made requisition on the home authorities for a considerable increase to the working strength of the Medical Department.

Veterinary Department. Inspecting Vet.-Surg. Steel was lately appointed to the charge at Dublin, vice Inspecting Vet.-Surg. Death, retired. The Veterinary Journal has the following:—"It cannot be concealed that perhaps never at any period in the history of the Army Veterinary Department has there been more dissatisfaction prevailing, to use the mildest term, than during the last month. As is well known, since the accession of the present principal to the head of the Veterinary Service, great changes have been made; more life has been infused into it; mere seniority has not been looked upon as a sufficient claim to promotion; the qualifications of candidates for admission to the department have been most carefully examined and rigidly tested; and we believe everything has been done that man can do, under the circumstances, to give this section of her Majesty's Army an amount of efficiency, honourable feeling, and a degree of esprit which it never before possessed. The first occasion on which the new order of affairs was really put to the test was the outbreak of the Zulu war. The efficiency of the Department was suddenly subjected to a severe strain. Shipload after shipload of horses, ready for active service, left our shores on the longest sea-voyage our mounted corps had perhaps ever made; and the success with which they were carried to South Africa was largely due to the veterinary-surgeons on board. The losses were astoundingly small, and the corps were disembarked at Durban in almost as good condition for the urgent work before them as if they had just left their troop-stables at home. It was the same in the field. The veterinary-surgeons shared the hardships and dangers of their brother-officers, and exerted themselves to the utmost to discharge their oftentimes most exacting and harassing duties. On every side, from the General Commanding-in-Chief downwards, their conduct during the campaign has been lauded in the strongest terms, whether for the manner in which they discharged their professional duties, or for bravery in presence of the enemy, and the favourable recommendations transmitted to the authorities at home were neither few nor insignificant. On the termination of the war, honours and rewards were distributed on a most liberal scale, and C.B.'s and C.M.G.'s were conferred without stint, seemingly, on every department except the veterinary. Notwithstanding the most pressing representations, the services of the veterinary officers have been completely ignored at home, so far as public recognition is concerned. We believe the Veterinary Inspector, who held the grade of principal veterinary surgeon in Zululand, and ranked as colonel, has, after much delay, been offered a good-service pension of £50 a year—the very lowest which could be given, and which is usually that conferred upon the most subordinate officers! This is all the reward and acknowledgment! It is needless to say that an intense feeling of degradation and discontent, if not something stronger, has been engendered by what is considered most unfair and ungenerous treatment; the complaints at the slight the department has received, if they are not loud, are at least strong and bitter. The C.B. and C.M.G. are unsparingly conferred, and even officers at home have received these decorations for their services in regard to the war in South Africa. Surely the Principal Veterinary-Surgeon was as deserving as these officers, and certainly the Inspecting Veterinary-Surgeon in the field was as worthy as many who were decorated." The Commander-in-Chief in India has appointed First-class Vet.-Surg. J. Anderson, R.A., Superintending Vet., Surg. Khyber Line, from Peshawur to Latabund, vice Principal Vet.-Surg. F. F. Collins. Vet.-Surg. J. J. Philips, R.A., has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate.

12th Bengal Cavalry. Gen. Roberts has issued the following Divisional Order at Cabul:—"The Lieutenant-General commanding wishes to place on record the excellent services rendered by the 12th Bengal Cavalry, 5th Punjab Cavalry, and 14th Bengal Lancers while under his command. The 5th Punjab Cavalry joined the force in December, 1878, and took part in the expedition in the Khost Valley. The 14th Bengal Lancers joined in April, 1879. All three regiments bore a prominent part in the advance on Cabul and the operations of December last. By their conduct and discipline in camp and in quarters and their gallantry in the field, they have added to their previous high reputation of the Punjab and Bengal Cavalry. On their return to India, they carry with them the best wishes of Gen. Roberts and his companions in arms." Major A. P. TIC-SANO.

IT is a FACT, positively and earnestly asserted, that medical men, after trying every remedy in vain, have at once relieved the agonising pains of the following disorders by the use of a VEGETABLE MEDICINE which has been brought to their notice, and testimonials have been received which prove this statement is not a false one, but can be easily verified. This medicine is and will effect a cure in a very short time. In chronic cases of many years' standing, it has, when taken regularly, effected a complete cure, even in persons of advanced age, when the case had been pronounced hopeless.

TIC-SANO—which will always give INSTANT RELIEF in

"Although I have, as a rule, a very great objection to all secret nostrums, still, for once, I must award due praise to a medicine which comes under that category. I find your Tic-Sano to be a very valuable remedy in neuralgia and rheumatic pains. I also find it most successful in many painful menstrual disorders, especially in dysmenorrhœa."

"I have now given your Tic-Sano a fair trial, and am satisfied that it is a most valuable remedy in all cases of a neuralgic nature, and one that I should not like to be without, as these complaints are very prevalent in this neighbourhood.

PORTABLE BOOT-TREE.

A want long felt has just been supplied by this most important invention. All sportsmen and military men know the great advantage of having both their long and short boots treed up every day, especially after they have been wet, but there is often great inconvenience in carrying about the boot-trees.

An officer in the 5th Lancers has lately hit upon the idea that an India-rubber tree, which, with ease, can be carried in the pocket, can, when put inside the boot, be inflated, filling out the boot tightly, and so making it an impossibility to shrink.

For officers on active service, autumn manœuvres, or whenever it is impossible to carry wooden trees, this invention will be invaluable.

This invention is patented for Great Britain and other countries.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1880.

A CENTURY after the event, the story of the desperate sea-fight between Captain Pearson, R.N., in H.M.S. Serapis, and the celebrated Paul Jones has been revived by the publication of a letter from Mr. Walter Stafford Northcote, stating that the first "Star-Spangled Banner" ever sent to sea by the United States still exists, having been saved from capture in the above action by Lieutenant Bayard Stafford. It is not, however, with that flag that we are now concerned, but with an incorrect account of the fight which has been given by a daily contemporary in one of those anecdotal leaders—a combination of fact and fiction—for which it is somewhat renowned. That account is so manifestly unfair to the Navy and to the memory of the gallant Sir Richard Pearson, that we feel it a duty we owe to the Service to place before our readers something more reliable than the hastily-written story which has been accepted by many as true. Our contemporary says that no sharper action was ever fought at sea than that in which Captain Pearson's ship, the Serapis, "carrying 41 guns of heavier calibre, tried conclusions with the Bonhomme Richard, with 40 guns, of which only six were 18-pounders, and the rest little better than field artillery;" but no mention whatever, either through ignorance or design, is made of the Alliance, a 40-gun frigate, which raked the Serapis fore and aft, while she was grappling and fighting with the Bonhomme Richard, commanded by Paul Jones. Of what account was the superior weight of the guns of the Serapis, as compared with the Bonhomme Richard, when another of Paul Jones's vessels was pouring a deadly fire into the British ship? Our contemporary has probably gathered its information from an American source, but we prefer taking the Admiralty record of the fight, and the official report of Captain Pearson. It was on the evening of September 23, 1779, when off Scarborough, that Captain Pearson, in the Serapis, of 40 guns, and Captain Piercy, in the hired armed ship Countess of Scarborough, of 20 guns, sighted the enemy's squadron, consisting of the Bonhomme Richard, of 40 guns and 375 men, commanded by Paul Jones; the Alliance, 40 guns and 300 men; the Pallas, 32 guns and 275 men; and the Vengeance, 14 guns and 75 men. Making a signal for the Countess cf Scarborough to join him, and for the convoy, valued at £600,000, to make the best of its way, Captain Pearson made sail to windward, to get between the enemy's ships and the convoy, and thus saved it from capture. With his two ships, with a total armament of 64 guns and 380 men, the gallant Sir Richard Pearson went out to "try conclusions," not with a ship of lighter armament, as would appear from our contemporary's "leader," but with a squadron of four ships, carrying 126 guns and over a thousand men. Assistance from the Countess of Scarborough was impossible, for she, a hired vessel, had more than she could do to fight against the odds brought to bear upon her by the frigate Pallas, and the armed brig Vengeance, and after two hours' fighting she had to surrender. Captain Pearson, in the Serapis, was meanwhile making a gallant fight with the Bonhomme Richard, the two ships having dropped alongside each other head and stern, while the muzzles of their guns were actually touching each other's sides, and the fire was so hot that, on several occasions, the ships were in flames. While this hand-to-hand fight was going on, the Alliance kept sailing round the two ships, raking the Serapis fore and aft, until almost every man on the quarter and main decks was killed or wounded; and about half-past nine at night, after the fight had been progressing for more than two hours, a number of cartridges were exploded on board the Serapis, scorching and maiming the officers and men abaft the mainmast, and thus the whole of those guns were rendered useless. At last, when there was hardly a man left to stand to the guns of the Serapis, the Alliance again came astern and poured another broadside into the over-matched British ship, which had not then a gun she could bring to bear upon the enemy, and as the mainmast went by the board at that moment, and the helpless condition of the Serapis became so evident, Captain Pearson ordered the colours to be struck. This is the action which has been described as though the Serapis had the advantage of guns, no mention whatever being made of the second frigate which tackled her astern, where she had not a gun to answer the broadsides poured into her, and raking her fore and aft, while Paul Jones held on to her alongside. And if any evidence were required of the effective manner in which the Serapis "tried conclusions" with the Bonhomme Richard, it is to be found in the fact that that ship was so knocked to pieces that she had to be abandoned the next day, and sunk with a number of her wounded on board. His Majesty, having conferred the honour of knighthood upon Sir Richard Pearson, is another assurance that he made a gallant stand against superior odds, for in the old fighting-days honours were not conferred upon those who lost their ships, unless it was proved beyond all doubt that nothing could have saved them.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales will, by command of the Queen, hold a Levée at St. James's Palace, on behalf of her Majesty, on Friday, May 7, at two o'clock. It is the Queen's pleasure that presentations to his Royal Highness at this Levée shall be considered as equivalent to presentations to her Majesty.

H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, was sixty-one years of age yesterday.

The following General Order, No. 140, was issued from head-quarters, Pietermaritzburg, on February 7:—"Subject to the approval of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, Lieutenant-Colonel H. Brackenbury, Royal Artillery, Military Secretary and Acting Chief of the Staff, is granted leave for the purpose of proceeding to Calcutta to join the Staff of his Excellency the Viceroy of India. He will embark to-morrow in H.M.S. Malabar for Bombay. Captain Stewart, 3rd Dragoon Guards, D.A.A. and Q.M.G., is appointed Acting Military Secretary. Lieutenant-Colonel Brackenbury being called away to high and important duties in India, the General commanding desires to record in General Orders his high appreciation of the valuable services rendered by Colonel Brackenbury in South Africa. Deeply read in the science of his profession, he is marked out by his zeal, ability, and business-like aptitude as a first-rate Staff officer, and, in wishing him good-bye, the General commanding thanks him sincerely for the cordial assistance he has rendered to him at all times.—By order, HERBERT STEWART, Captain, Acting Military Secretary and Chief of the Staff."

The appointment of Colonel Brackenbury, R.A., to the office of private secretary to Lord Lytton, in succession to Sir G. Colley, was made direct at South Africa, without reference to the authorities at home, as the Viceroy made urgent demands for the immediate services of a successor to Sir G. Colley. Of course such a step was not in accordance with the custom of the Service, but it was considered expedient under the circumstances. Sir G. Colley is expected in London this week, on his way to take up his command in South Africa, and he will arrive there before Sir Garnet Wolseley has left to assume his charge at the Horse Guards.

The retirements from the Royal Regiment of Artillery, consequent on the absorption of the Lieutenant-Colonels whose services have been dispensed with by the Indian Government, are now, it is said, to be gazetted in May.

The contemplated reduction of five batteries of Horse Artillery on the Indian Establishment seems likely to result in a reorganisation, at least of that branch of the Royal Regiment. At present, to a strength of 29 batteries there are no less than 12 regimental Colonels and 16 Lieutenant-Colonels—nearly one to every battery—an extravagant arrangement, only kept up, we fancy, to provide snug berths for officers disliking foreign service.

In addition to that of Surgeon-General W. G. Watt, three retirements will take place from the administrative ranks of the Army Medical Department in the course of the present year, under the 60 years' clause of the Royal Warrant. Surgeon-General J. H. K. Innes, C.B., has already attained the age for retirement, and will shortly be gazetted to pension; Surgeon-General C. A. Gordon, M.D., C.B., becomes 60 on May 26 next; and Surgeon-General H. G. Gordon, on August 2. Sir William Muir will complete seven years in his present appointment on April 1, 1881. Surgeon-General H. H. Massy, M.D., C.B., will be 60 on August 4, 1881. Surgeon-General D. R. Mackinnon will have to accept retirement on May 21, 1881, and Surgeon-General W. Munro, M.D., C.B., on November 30, 1881. These retirements would take up seven of the present Deputy-Surgeons-General, viz.:—G. A. F. Skelton, M.D., P.M.O. in Canada; Sir W. D. Home, V.C., K.C.B., P.M.O. at York; W. A. Mackinnon, C.B., P.M.O. at Hong Kong; J. A. Woolfreyes, M.D., C.B., C.M.G., P.M.O. at the Cape; H. Kendall, M.D., at Umballa; G. H. Fasson, M.D., P.M.O. in the West Indies; and M. F. Manifold, P.M.O. at Mhow.

Surgeon-General E. Gilborne from P.M.O. in Ireland succeeds Surgeon-General Watt at Malta, Deputy-Surgeon-General J. A. W. Thompson, M.D., from the Cork District, being appointed to Irish Head-quarters, on promotion.

Surgeon-General D. R. Mackinnon is to be transferred from the Aldershot Division to Netley, as Principal Medical Officer, being succeeded by Deputy-Surgeon-General G. A. F. Shellon, M.B., who is ordered home from Hong Kong, in anticipation of his early promotion.

There is an assumption on which the so-called Army reformers have relied in working their wicked will with it. It is that this country is very liable to invasion. Therefore, there ought to be a strong home Army, and a good Reserve. But the fact is that our Army is mainly employed in active service abroad, and some way or other, is always engaged with foreign enemies, so that the excellence of the first line should be always maintained, and its efficiency should be constant. There can be no question of the necessity of restoring the first line to its former condition as soon as possible. The linked battalions are joined in a very unhappy alliance, and the sooner the ill-assorted couples are set free the better.

One of the higher Staff appointments at all events, the announcement of which was said to have no authority, has been admitted this week as an accomplished fact. And the others?

We have received an advance proof of a paper on the case of the Quartermasters, which will appear in Colburn's United Service Magazine next month, and we intend to refer to the subject presently. Their fate, says the writer, "induces the belief in the minds of Quartermasters that by the Civil element at the War Office they are looked upon as a distinct species, for whom any treatment is good enough. The Quartermasters are a very intelligent class."

A distinguished-service reward of £100 per annum is vacant, by the appointment of Lieutenant-General W. C. Forrest, C.B., to the colonelcy of the 8th Hussars.

The Cape news does not indicate any reduction of the British regiments in Natal and the Transvaal, nor any justification of the assurances that the prospects of confederation were hopeful. Nor do we see anything about the trial of M. Pretorius and M. Bok for treason; but the Boers, in presence of armed force, have postponed their promised mass meeting. They are tenacious of purpose, and as yet our efforts to reconcile them to the appropriation of their country have been signally unsuccessful.

Brevet Major P. H. S. Barrow, C.M.G., 19th Hussars who did such good service in command of the cavalry of Major-General Crealock's column, and earned the marked thanks of the Major-General in command of the division, has been selected by Sir D. Lysons as one of his Aide-de-Camps at Aldershot, where he was on duty previous to his employment in South Africa. The other appointment is likely to be filled by Captain J. F. C. Hayward, 25th Regiment.

Captain Lord Gifford, V.C., 57th Regiment, will receive a step of rank on his retirement from the Service, to take up his appointment at Ceylon. It is to be regretted that the Army will lose an officer of promise and performance, but the country will still have the advantage of his zeal in another branch of the work she has to do.

The departure of the Empress Eugénie for the scene of her son's death must revive most painful memories, in connection with that memorable episode in a war which will probably be known in time to come mainly in connection with it. There is no use in disguising the fact that the expedition of the afflicted lady is viewed with something like alarm by the authorities in South Africa, as the means of rendering honour to such an illustrious visitor are limited; but Lady Frere and her daughters will do everything in their power to make the Empress's short stay at Cape Town of interest and comfort. The voyage will, no doubt, prove beneficial to her Majesty's health, for she does not suffer from sea-sickness, and has indeed, it is said, rather a liking for a little rough weather. It is understood that the Queen has given her approval and encouragement to the pilgrimage, and it may be readily imagined how deep must be the sympathy excited by such an errand. If there be a "good bar" at Durban, there will be no discomfort to face till the main road is left at Greytown, in Natal, and the march across country begins; but even then, unless there be heavy rains and bad weather, there will be nothing like hardship, as the party are provided with every appliance, light travelling-waggons, saddle horses, tents, &c., for the journey to the valley of the Ityoso. How very different is the departure of Queen Victoria, in all its surrounding circumstances! How great the contrast between the exile of France and the Empress-Queen, and yet they have a bond in common, in the motives which guide the one to the lonely valley in Zululand, and the other to the silent chapel at Darmstadt.

Lieutenant-General E. A. Whitmore, C.B., who has returned from Malta, will succeed General Sir A. Horsford, G.C.B., as military secretary to H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief on the 1st inst., as we announced some months ago it had been arranged.

It is with regret we learn that the authorities have definitely decided to move H Battery A Brigade, R.H.A., to Aldershot. This battery has already been a considerable time at Woolwich; it stood first on the roster for Ireland, and its destination is changed that another less favoured battery should take its place. This continual subservience to certain individual interests, which has been the characteristic of the office of the Deputy-Adjutant-General of Artillery for the past few years, has now become a grave scandal, and calls for the attention and intervention of the highest authorities.

Dick, R.N., and Surgeon Hamilton, of the Beacon, were sitting in the ward-room mess, on board the hulk Auckland, a bullet flew past, just grazing them, and lodged in the bulkhead beside them. An Arab in a neighbouring dhow, examining his banduk, let it off, in order to find out whether it was in good order, and thus nearly shot two officers, either of whom would have been a great loss to the Royal Navy.

The following day the Alexandra was paid off, and recommissioned on the 12th, as Sir Beauchamp Seymour's flagship, with the relief crew brought out by the Inconstant. The following evening the same pieces were performed, when the Rear-Admiral commanding, Capt. Rawson, and the officers of the Minotaur entertained the minister (Mr. Morier, C.B.), Mrs. Morier, and the English residents at Lisbon, and several Portuguese families, also Admiral Waddilove and the captain and officers of the squadron in the Tagus. The arrangements were of the most complete description, the quarter-deck being transformed into a theatre, seats rising tier upon tier from the deck to the bridge. No trouble had been spared by the performers to place the pieces on the stage as they should be, and the frequent applause told the actors that their efforts were thoroughly appreciated. Afterwards, dancing was kept up with great spirit till midnight. The Minotaur left Lisbon on Saturday for Gibraltar and Madeira.

The First Lord of the Admiralty has contributed £1,000 towards the expense of laying out the new public gardens which are being made on the land on the south-west side of the House of Lords on the Thames Embankment, and overlooking the river.

The transfer of the Naval Depôt from Rio de Janeiro is to take place immediately, and Navigating-Lieut. Hilliard and Paymaster Richard Wily will make a move to Monte Video with their charge, although they have both well exceeded three years in their present appointments. Apart from the fact that it would be unwise to make a change in the staff just at the moment when the depôt will have to be moved and rearranged, it would appear that their Lordships are quite unconcerned as to the length of time officers are permitted to hold these appointments. The most glaring case of leaving a paymaster in charge of a depôt, being borne all the while on ship's books, is that of Mr. John Bremner, who was appointed to the Victor Emanuel as long ago as Jan., 1872, as naval and victualling storekeeper of the depôt at Hong Kong, and who remains there, even unto this day. It is not every one who has an affection for Hong Kong, it is true. But there are advantages connected with these appointments which make them far preferable to serving in some stations, and much better than being kept on half-pay. Mr. Mainprize has been enjoying himself as paymaster in charge of victualling stores since June, 1877, and the duties are not so peculiar but that there are many who are willing and able to take the post. None of these store appointments, carrying full pay and time, ought to be held by any officer for more than a commission of three years.—Hampshire Telegraph.

The Admiralty, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, direct that whenever a requisition is received by any officer in command of one of H.M.'s ships, for the embarkation or conveyance of a Governor, High Commissioner, Lieutenant-Governor, or officer administering the government of a colony, the senior officer present may direct the special flag of such official personage to be hoisted at the foretop-gallant masthead of the ship in which he is embarked; provided that he, after consultation with and on requisition from that official, considers it for the benefit of the service about to be performed that such flag should be hoisted, and provided that it is only hoisted or carried within the limits of his government or high commission, in which he would be entitled to be saluted under Article 18, page 4, of the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions, 1879. If the senior officer considers it in any circumstances undesirable to hoist the flag, he is to inform the Governor, High Commissioner, &c., of his reasons, and at once report the same to the Admiralty. In the event of a Governor, High Commissioner, &c., of a colony being detached on a foreign mission in his official capacity as Governor or High Commissioner, special instructions will be issued in each case as to the flag which should be carried by a man-of-war in which he may be embarked; in the absence of which, the senior officer present is to exercise his discretion, in consultation with the official proceeding on the mission.

Sir,—It is with the utmost reluctance that I again trespass upon your kindness, by asking you to insert in your valuable paper a reply which seems, to some extent, called for by Mr. Main's letter in your issue of Feb. 28, impugning the accuracy of my statement in the previous week's edition; but under the circumstances, I would beg a small space to conclude the controversy, as far as I am concerned. In the first place, I must beg that gentleman to deal with my assertion as it stands, and in so doing would refer the late Professor at the R.N. College, Portsmouth, to the article in your paper of the 14th ult., which called forth from me the remark that "up to only a recent date, the examination for both branches" (viz., Royal Marine Artillery and Royal Marine Light Infantry) "was identical." Mr. Main replies, that "if the writer means to say that the final examination of both classes of officers was identical, his statement is not borne out by facts." It must be perfectly clear to every one that, as I said nothing, so I could have meant nothing, about a "final" examination, for the simple reason that the Light Infantry officers were not called upon to pass more than one examination. My contention was on the broad principle of a general education, not the pounding or cramming of any particular subject, such as "practical gunnery." The three competitors I referred to met for the first and only time, to compete for direct commissions in the Royal Marines. No. 1 and 2, as they stood in the order of merit, were not offered a prospective commission in the Artillery; but No. 3 was, on account of his having obtained a higher number of marks in the one subject of mathematics, and was sent accordingly to the Royal Naval College, for a special course of study; surely Mr. Main will not contend that No. 3 was in June, 1866, better educated than Nos. 1 and 2. No one will deny that No. 3, after twelve months' course under Mr. Main's careful tuition, was not better informed in the special subject to which his attention had been exclusively devoted during that time, than Nos. 1 and 2. On the other hand, no one can dispute that if the general knowledge and proficiency of Nos. 1 and 2 obtained for them a higher number of marks than that accorded to No. 3, that the educational attainments of the former were not inferior to those of the latter. I still hold to my opinion that the examination for entry into both branches of the Royal Marine Service was identical; that, during a certain period, the candidates for the Artillery were selected from those who showed a higher knowledge of one particular subject, irrespective, it might be, of general proficiency; and that the comparison made of their educational attainments at that time, to the detriment of those who nolens, volens, were given infantry commissions was hardly consistent with facts. I made no allusion to the subsequent training and study of the Artillery candidates, as it is a natural sequence that in those special subjects they would be better educated than the infantry officer, and I could scarcely have been so foolish as to contend that the two branches were on a footing, as regards a certain "scientific education." Exception can hardly be taken to the evident bias that pervades Mr. Main's letter. He merely endorses my statement, so far as it goes, which was made with no view to disparage the Royal Marine Artillery, but to dispel any erroneous opinion as to the qualifications of the Royal Marine Light Infantry officer, that your article of the 14th ult. might lead many of your readers to form. Apologising for again troubling you, I must, notwithstanding Mr. Main's strictures on my former letter, still subscribe myself,

Unbiassed.

Sir,—Your correspondent "Unbiassed" appears to have a greater desire to seem impartial, than to show himself well informed on the subject he discusses, in your issue of February 21. Dissociating matters of fact from matters of mere opinion, it is certain that there is not any officer on the list of the Royal Marine Artillery (from the senior general to the junior subaltern) who has not passed a higher professional educational test than would qualify for admission into the Royal Marine Light Infantry. Such tests have been subject to modification from time to time, but never at any period during the last thirty-nine years has it been possible for an officer to obtain appointment to the Royal Marine Artillery, without additional educational training, to attain this higher standard,—subject, in case of failure, to reversion to his former qualification for the R.M.L.I. If the Royal Marine Artillery is, or has been, of any value to the State, such value has certainly arisen from this system, and its natural result of esprit, produced by exclusive and special training for particular service. In a narrower sense, distinction and advantage have been derived by individuals, as shown by the number of officers R.M.A. who are noted as "Passed Staff College," including those who hold instructional appointments at the Naval and Military Colleges respectively. The other points raised by your correspondent appear to fall under the head of mere opinion, and therefore need not be more particularly referred to by Correction.

"R. A." calls attention to the fact that adjutants of the Auxiliary Forces belonging to the Royal Artillery only receive the daily pay of 11s., which is 7d. less than that of infantry adjutants. An adjutant of Artillery Volunteers has far more work, both in drill and correspondence, than his "opposite number" in the Rifles, so it seems hard that he should have less pay.

It is officially announced that the Queen has been graciously pleased to confer upon the Right Hon. Stephen Cave, M.P., her Majesty's Paymaster-General, the Grand Cross of the Civil Division of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, and that the Hon. David Plunket, M.P., who has been sworn in of the Privy Council, has been appointed Paymaster-General, in the room of the Right Hon. Sir Stephen Cave, G.C.B., who retires from Parliament.

THE REORGANISATION OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

The following further details of the Simla Committee's Report was telegraphed by the Times' correspondent at Calcutta on Sunday:—"I am now able to supplement with some further particulars the summary I gave last week of the recommendations of the Army Commission. It is, of course, doubtful how far the recommendations will be adopted, and in respect of some of them the Commissioners were, it is believed, not unanimous. It will be seen that they contain few proposals which have not been already brought forward by various military reformers. Under the head of distribution and organisation, the main points not mentioned last week are the following:—The Punjab Frontier Force to form part of the Regular Army under the Commander-in-Chief. The distribution of the troops to be based on the principle of abolishing single-battalion stations and maintaining compact bodies at strategical centres. The following are the main obligatory points to be held:—Calcutta, Dinapore, Allahabad, Cawnpore, Lucknow, Agra, Delhi, Meerut, Lahore, Rawul Pindee, Mooltan, Kurrachee, Nusseerabad, Ahmedabad, Mhow, Jubbulpore, Nagpore, Poona, Bombay, Secunderabad, Bellary, Bangalore, Madras, Shillong, and Rangoon. The secondary stations to be those on the frontier and those intermediate to the main centres. The Territorial Army Corps to be divided into district commands, which will be of three classes. The following are the districts proposed:—Bengal Army Corps—first-class districts, Lucknow and Meerut; second-class districts, Calcutta and Gwalior; third-class, eastern frontier, Bareilly and Nowgong. The Punjab Corps—first-class districts, Lahore and Rawul Pindee; second-class, Peshawur and Kurum; third-class, Umballa and Mooltan. The Madras Corps—first-class districts, Hyderabad and Bangalore; second-class, Madras and Burmah; third-class, Belgaum. The Bombay Corps—first class districts, Scinde with Beloochistan and Poona; second-class districts, Bombay and Mhow; third-class, Nusseerabad, Nagpore, and Aden. Colonels on the staff to command at Allahabad, Agra, Lundi Kotal, Bellary, and Pishin. The following troops to be always available for field service:—Horse and field artillery, 30 batteries; heavy artillery, three batteries; mountain artillery, seven batteries; garrison artillery for siege trains, three batteries; British cavalry, five regiments of 2,930 sabres; native cavalry, 16 regiments of 9,744 sabres; British infantry, 18 regiments of 18,792 bayonets; native infantry, 40 regiments of 36,480 bayonets; Sappers, 21 companies. Under the head of "Military administration," several changes are proposed. The War Secretary should hold office five years, and have local rank of Major-General. All War Department offices to be concentrated in one building at Simla. The appointment of Chief of the Staff to be permanently adopted. The departments of Adjutant and Quartermaster-General to be united under the title "General staff." Each army corps to have a chief of the staff. When the army corps commanded belongs to the British service, its chief of the staff to belong to the Indian service, and vice versâ. An intelligence department to be formed, consisting of one officer from each army corps, working under the Chief of the Head-Quarters Staff. A Military Education department to be formed. The Judge-Advocate-General's department to be reduced from fifteen to five. The total number of officers of the General Staff, including those of the War Department, the Commander-in-Chief, of Army Corps, and first and second-class stations, to be 136 officers, instead of 209 as at present. The following are the proposals made regarding the British Army in India:—The European garrison to consist of six regiments of cavalry, 43 battalions of infantry, ten horse, thirty-eight field, four heavy, eight mountain, and seventeen garrison batteries. Soldiers under three years' service not to be embarked for India, nor any who have not extended their period of service to nine years. A committee of officers to fix suitable uniform. The following additional proposals regarding the reorganisation of the Native Army may be mentioned:—Several regiments are to be reduced, but the remainder are to be increased in strength, so that there will be no reduction in the total strength of the native forces. The Guide Corps to be raised to the strength of 800 privates, four squadrons, and two guns. It is to be available for general service, but to be ordinarily at the disposal of the civil Governments. Its command is to be intrusted to specially selected officers, and all its officers to be carefully chosen from any army corps. Three similar corps to be raised and posted at Kurum, Tank, and Pishin respectively. Each native regiment to have a fixed depôt in its recruiting ground. As to Reserves, there are to be 200 men per regiment in the 1st Reserve and 300 in the 2nd. In the Cavalry there will be no 1st Reserve. The total of the 1st Reserve, 19,200 Infantry; of the 2nd Reserve, 31,000 Infantry and 6,000 cavalry. A committee to be appointed to revise the uniforms of each army corps. Next comes the head of Officering the Native Army and Departments. The plan recommended for remedying the defects of the Staff Corps system is that of forming a general list of officers for each army corps, limiting the number of each rank, and making promotions only as vacancies occur. Young officers of the British service should not be debarred joining the Indian service; but the Commission consider that a better plan for recruiting officers for the Indian service would be to get them by direct commission from Sandhurst, first subjecting them to training with military corps at home. The proposal as to officers in civil employ in respect to retirements and pensions was given last week. The reorganisation of the medical service is treated at great length, and some recommendations have already been carried out. The Commissioners consider that the Indian services and the British medical service in India should be amalgamated into one medical corps; but if the present institution is to be kept, then they propose that the military should be separated from the civil branch of the service, one military surgeon-general to be appointed ordinarily from the British service, three deputy-surgeon-general for each army corps, and twenty-four brigade surgeons. Several other proposals are made, and the total saving under the head of medical administration is estimated at 23,65,200 rupees annually. A number of reforms are suggested in the Army departments, with the view of saving expense and increasing efficiency. Then comes the question of lines of communication. Military railways required to Quetta, Lundi Kotal, and Kohat, on the Khyber route, are declared more important than railways for the Kurum line. The Northern Bengal Railway should be extended towards Assam. A railway from Rangoon to Tonghoo is necessary. Lines from Umballa to Kalka and from Ramnuggur to Moradabad are considered advisable. Plans should be ready to turn a railway to the best advantage in time of war. The formation of separate railway corps is not recommended. It is estimated that the total saving accruing from the proposals of the commission would be about £1,250,000."

The Times says:—"In the event of the adoption of the recommendations of the Indian Army Commission, very important changes will be rendered necessary in the constitution of the British regiments in India, probably extending to the establishment of all the corps in the Army from which the Indian reliefs are furnished. The British Cavalry force in India is now composed of nine regiments, each of three squadrons, and 479 officers and men. The aggregate strength is therefore 27 squadrons and 4,312 officers and men. Under the proposed scheme each Cavalry regiment will consist of four squadrons, or 568 of all ranks, and upon this footing seven regiments, or 28 squadrons in all, would about replace the present establishment. Apparently, therefore, two regiments would be transferred without relief to the home establishment. The two standing next for return are the 15th and 10th Hussars, to which would be added the 13th Hussars, in the event of the King's Dragoon Guards not being required in South Africa after the present year. In the Infantry, the ordinary Indian establishment is now made up of 50 battalions, at a total strength of 916 each, making in the aggregate about 45,800 officers and men. The new proposals are to the effect that each battalion should be maintained at a strength of 1,044 of all ranks, and upon this footing 44 battalions would be the ordinary number in India, instead of 50. Owing, however, to the state of affairs in Afghanistan, there are at this moment five additional battalions, or 55 in all, actually serving in India and Afghanistan. There are also five battalions at home that are held in readiness to embark for India during next winter. If the decision to send out these five battalions is adhered to, and the reductions contemplated by the Indian Army Commission are carried out, no less than 16 battalions would be ordered England. The 16 standing first on the list for home are the 2nd Batn. 1st Royal Scots; 1st Batn. 5th Fusiliers; 73rd, 59th, 83rd; 2nd Batn. 60th Rifles; 1st Batn. 6th; 92nd Highlanders; 85th, 48th, 62nd; 1st Batn. 21st Fusiliers; 39th, 1st Batn. 17th; 66th and 81st. Of these, the 1st, 5th, 73rd, 59th, 60th, 6th, 92nd, 48th, 62nd, 21st have their linked battalions already abroad; while those of the 83rd, 85th, 39th, 17th, 66th, and 81st are upon the home establishment. For this reason, probably, two of the latter corps would be retained in India till after the return home of the 89th and 72nd, standing lower on the list for relief, but having their linked battalions (94th and 91st) also abroad. In the Artillery, there is to be a reduction of five batteries (from 14 to 9) of Royal Horse Artillery, and an increase apparently of about four batteries of field-artillery (from 41 to 45). This change would appear to involve little more than the conversion of so many batteries of Horse Artillery into field-batteries, and the organisation of the Royal Artillery out of India would not be materially affected. Not so, however, with the cavalry and infantry of the Line. The adoption of the recommendations of the Commission would throw upon the Government at home two regiments of cavalry and six battalions of infantry not at present borne upon the Estimates, and not required for ordinary purposes. It would seem to follow, therefore, that either so many regiments would have to be disbanded, or the regiments at home must be each reduced by a number of officers and men equal in the aggregate to those transferred from India to England. With regard to the infantry, however, it is to be noted that the plan proposed would enable the Authorities to carry out the linked-battalion system fully, even with the present strength of five battalions in South Africa. Thus we should have for India, 44; Hong Kong, Straits, and Ceylon, three; South Africa, five; West Indies, Bermuda, and Nova Scotia, five; and Mediterranean, 11; making a total of 68 battalions on foreign and 73 for home service, leaving a margin of five for exceptional requirements."

"C. O." writes:—"In continuation of 'Observer's' remarks on the promotion of lieutenant-colonels in your last edition, I wish to draw attention to another point which it appears to me he has missed, viz., the great flow of promotions that would be caused were commanding officers to get their step in three years, as it is well known that many officers merely remain on for this step. In a few years, a full colonel commanding a regiment will be a rara avis, and as field brigadiers both on active service in the field and in the camps of instruction at home are largely drawn from commanding officers of regiments, it would be an advantage to have some officers at home of senior rank among the commanders of regiments, and it would sometimes ease the soreness that is sometimes felt when the commander and commanded are of the same rank. It is to be hoped that some of the military M.P.'s in the new Parliament may ventilate this subject."

A committee of officers, consisting of Lieut.-Col. Barrett, 2nd Batn. 19th Regiment, and two regimental adjutants, has been ordered to assemble at Aldershot, to consider and report upon a military catechism forwarded from the Horse Guards.

INDIA.

The following extract from a letter from the Adjutant-General of India, dated Feb. 9, to Gen. Roberts has been published at Cabul:—"In acknowledging receipt of your despatch of the 23rd ult., with its enclosure, I am directed by the Commander-in-Chief to express to you the extreme pleasure with which his Excellency has read your reports conveying, as they do, in a most soldierlike and graphic manner a full and vivid description of the events recorded. Sir Frederick Haines desires me to congratulate you and the troops under your command, on the ability and gallantry with which the operations from Dec. 11 to 23, against overwhelming numbers, have been carried out from first to last, and I am to request that you will communicate his Excellency's sentiments to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of your force. The condition in which you were placed, owing to defective information as to the extent of the combination against you, in having your force scattered in various directions was most serious, and his Excellency considers that very great credit is due to you for the ability with which you extricated yourself from such a difficult position, and concentrated your troops in the cantonment of Sherpur. In this operation you were well and gallantly seconded by all ranks. Sir F. Haines can quite understand the reluctance with which you surrendered the Bala Hissar and city of Cabul to the enemy, but his Excellency is fully satisfied that the decision come to by you was, under the circumstances, the right one. The subsequent defence of the cantonment and the final dispersion of the enemy were most satisfactory. The Commander-in-Chief has read with pride your reports of the acts of valour and devotion performed by individuals, and Sir F. Haines will take care that your recommendations regarding those whom you believe to have most distinguished themselves receive his fullest consideration and support. His Excellency deplores, in common with the whole force, the loss of so many gallant officers and men, British and native, among whom the following appear to have been most prominent:—Major Cook, of the 5th Goorkhas; Capts. Spens, 72nd, and Butson, 9th Lancers; Lieuts. Forbes, of the 92nd, and Montanaro of the Artillery; Jamadars Jung Bahadur of the Guides, and Jhunda Sing of the 5th Cavalry; Serjt.-Major Spittle of the Lancers; Col.-Serjts. Drummond of the 92nd and Yule of the 72nd; Duffadar Jeward Sing of the 5th Punjab Cavalry; and Havildar Sham Sing of the 5th Punjab Infantry. The deeds of such men remain for ever in the memory of the Army, which, while deeply mourning their loss, dwells with pride on the noble example of devotion they have set. In conclusion, I am to state that Sir F. Haines quite concurs with you in the reasons through which you originally decided on the occupation of the Sherpur cantonment in preference to the Bala Hissar, and he further agrees that you acted quite rightly, under the circumstances, in not destroying the villages, though their destruction, so as to make a clear space round the cantonment, was, as a military precaution, desirable. Your policy in endeavouring to render the British occupation of Cabul as little irksome as possible to the inhabitants was, in his Excellency's opinion, perfectly correct, notwithstanding that carrying this out you left standing villages and walled enclosures, from which considerable trouble resulted during the subsequent defence of the cantonment."

The Standard says:—"A number of appointments to and promotions in the Order of the Star of India will shortly be made, on the recommendation of the Government of India, in recognition of the services rendered and proffered by native Princes during the troubles in Afghanistan."

The Lucknow paper says:—"The question of reducing the term of service of European regiments in India is receiving the serious consideration of Government. I believe the proposition is to keep infantry regiments seven years and cavalry five, give to the former four drafts of recruits and to the latter three. The proposition is a good one, but the attractions for volunteering must be increased before it will answer. Of late years, owing to the abolition of the bounty of 60 rupees, volunteering has been steadily on the wane."

A Permanent Defence Committee has been established by order of the Governor-General in Council, composed as follows:—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India, president; Adjutant-General in India; Quartermaster-General in India; Inspector-General of Artillery for India; Inspector-General of Ordnance and Magazine, Bengal; Inspector-General of Military Works; Deputy-Adjutant-General, Royal Artillery, in India, members; Consulting Naval Officer to the Government of India; Officer in charge of Torpedo Defence, for Coast Defences. An Officer of Military Works Branch, Public Works Department, secretary.

Major-Gen. A. Fraser, C.B., R.E., brother of the Bishop of Manchester, has been appointed a temporary member of the Council of the Governor-General, in the place of Col. Sir Andrew Clarke, K.C.M.G., R.E.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Michael Kennedy, K.C.B., R.E., has been appointed an additional Secretary to the Government of India in the Military Department, for supply and transport duties.

The Civil and Military Gazette says:—"The Commander-in-Chief has abandoned all idea of taking the field in person."

Lieut. S. M. Schneider, Bombay Staff Corps, has been appointed aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. J. H. Schneider, C.B., commanding the Northern Division, Bombay Army, from the 12th ult.

Col. Sir George Colley, the new Governor of Natal, had left Calcutta when the mail was made up, and had gone to Simla before coming to Bombay to take steamer for South Africa. Lord and Lady Lytton went down to the station to see him off. The night before his departure, the Viceroy invited a large number of gentlemen to meet him at Government House.

THE ADVANCE ON GHUZNI.

From its Lahore correspondent the Standard has received the following:—The force with which Gen. Donald Stewart will advance on Ghuzni consists of the regiments which have garrisoned Candahar and the Pisheen Valley, since the first declaration of war in the winter of 1878-79. It will be divided into two brigades, the first of which is commanded by Brigdr.-Gen. Barter, and will be made up of the following regiments:—2nd Batn. 60th Rifles, 15th Sikhs, and 25th Punjabis, and eight guns. There is also a company of Sappers attached to it. This brigade may, therefore, be computed to muster about 2,000 bayonets; and it is in full march up the Turnak Valley towards Khelat-i-Ghilzai, where there is a garrison of 1,000 men. It is probable that this garrison will be left for some time in possession of that place, and will be withdrawn by way Candahar, and not with the main body through Khurum. The second brigade is more numerous, and is under the immediate command of Gen. Stewart. It will be made up of two native cavalry regiments—the 2nd Punjab Cavalry, of which a wing is at Khelat-i-Ghilzai, and the 19th Bengal Lancers—the 59th Foot, 3rd Ghoorkas, 2nd Sikhs, 19th Punjabis, one battery of Horse Artillery, and 12 guns of Field Artillery, including two howitzers. There are also another company of Sappers, Field Hospital, and Ordnance head-quarters attached to it. Gen. Stewart's Brigade musters, therefore, about 700 sabres and 3,000 bayonets—the whole force advancing on Ghuzni numbering rather more than 6,000 men, of whom one-third are British infantry and artillery. It is particularly strong in the latter arm, but were the difficulties of transport and forage not so great, it might be wished that there was a larger cavalry force accompanying it. It must not be supposed that the withdrawal of Gen. Stewart's Division will denude Southern Afghanistan of troops. The regiments that during the last three months have been marching up from Bombay have now all reached their destinations; and from the Bolan to Candahar there are at the present time not fewer than 10,000 men, of whom a large proportion are seasoned European regiments. In command of this army is Gen. Phayre, who will, however, leave shortly for India, when his place will be taken by Gen. Primrose, who has been for some time in command of the reserve Bombay column. After the capture of Ghuzni, Gen. Stewart's Division will, as at present intended, retire into India by the Kurum Valley, where the supplies are being collected.

The following changes have been ordered in the distribution of the Cabul and Khyber forces:—The Second or Khyber Division is to be broken up, and portions of the troops composing it to go to Cabul. The Reserve Division at Peshawur is also to be broken up, and merged into the line of communications. The force at Cabul is to be divided into two divisions—the first under Gen. Roberts's immediate command, the second under Major-Gen. J. Ross. Gen. Bright to be appointed Inspector-General of the line of communications. This line is divided into three sections—namely, the first from Jamrud to Basawal, under Brigdr. Gib; the second from Basawal to Sufed-Sang, under Brigdr. Doran; the third from Sufed-Sang to Butkhak, under Brigdr. Hill. Brigdr. Roberts, of the 5th Fusiliers, will proceed to Cabul, to command the brigade in the second division. Brigdr. Arbuthnot will command the movable column at Jellalabad and Sufed-Sang. The force under Gen. Roberts is to be styled the Cabul Field Force; that under Gen. Bright, the Khyber Line Force. Col. Gordon, 29th Punjab N.I., obtains command of the brigade in the Kurum, vacant by Gen. Tytler's death.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE CADETSHIPS.

An examination for cadetships will take place at the University of London, Burlington Gardens, W., on Monday, July 5, 1880, and following days, the first day being devoted to the medical examination. The subjects—age, and other conditions—will be those specified in the regulations issued with G.O. 88 of 1876 and 69 of 1877. There will be 108 cadetships to be competed for, of which 8 will be for West India Regiments. Twelve cadetships will also be offered for competition by University candidates, as provided for in pars. 21 and 22 of the Regulations above quoted. The successful competitors will be required to join the Royal Military College, as gentlemen cadets, on Sept. 1, 1880. Applications cannot be received unless made in strict accordance with pars. 13 and 14 of the Regulations above quoted, May 15 next being the latest date on which applications can be received. Candidates who have been previously examined, should forward with their applications a certificate of good-conduct for the intervening period. If intending competitors wish for any further information relative to the examination, they should apply by letter to the "Military Secretary," Horse Guards, War Office, S.W.—War Office, March, 1880.

HALF-PAY CAPTAINS OF THE LINE.

"Miles Antiquus" writes:—Allow me a few lines to entreat "Purchase" captains who happened to be on half-pay when Purchase was abolished, not to accept the compromise offered them, i.e., half their half-pay service and the pension of a "post-purchase captain." As "purchase" captains they are entitled to the higher pensions, and meanness could no further go than to endeavour to bribe them out of the Service by so paltry a consideration. I trust there are none so dispirited or impecunious as to compel them to accept the offer. Their case is pre-eminently one that should be taken up in the House of Commons. Is there no military member who will make himself acquainted with the case, and insist upon justice being done?

ADDITIONS TO THE NEW INFANTRY EQUIPMENT.

"H. G." writes:—"With your permission, I will make, through your valuable columns, the three following suggestions:—1. That a pair of strong chamois-leather gloves should be served out to each man with the new infantry equipment, as they would correspond in colour with the belts, and also prove much warmer and more endurable than those at present in use. 2. That the bright portion of the bayonet should be coloured in a similar manner to the breech-block of the Martini rifle. This would prevent the steel rusting on active service, when the various articles necessary to keep accoutrements clean are not always at hand; and this change would also permit sentries employed on outpost duty fixing bayonets on bright days and moonlight nights, which they are at present debarred from doing, owing to the brightness of the steel. Sentries, by having their bayonets fixed, would also be placed in a better position of defence in case of attack. 3. In order to do away with petty robberies, and at the same time permit men of a better class who enlist keeping various private necessaries, a small locked box should be served out to each man on home service. These boxes would add wonderfully to the comfort of our soldiers, and act as an inducement to many men to enlist of the better class."

Reviews.

A Guide for All Ranks of the Auxiliary Artillery. By Capt. Du Pré. (Manchester: Sowler and Co.)—Capt. Du Pré's handbook has already passed through two editions, and its author has now been induced to add considerably to its value, by revising it, and inserting much useful information which was omitted in the previous editions.

Sermons to Naval Cadets. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.)—In this little volume the reader will find several sermons or exhortations on subjects of the highest moment,—"Strength," "Obedience," "Christ's Boyhood," "Fearlessness," "Prayer," "Hope," "Self-Control," "Sin," "Pleasing God," and "Patriotism." Although they are specially addressed to Naval cadets, they may be made profitable by other earnest readers.

Time. Edited by Edmund Yates.—The April number of Time is good in every respect, except, perhaps, in that of bringing to a conclusion "The Seamy Side," a story which has interested many readers for months past. Several of the characters are drawn with striking effect, and the plot of the story is cleverly wrought out. No doubt exceptions may be taken to the absence of sufficient motive on the part of "the writing-master" to act as he did, and also to some of the "goings-on" of young Nick; but, nevertheless, the last-mentioned young gentleman will be regarded by many as a perfect little gem, which afforded them amusement from the beginning to the end. In the present number of Time, "Violet Fane," whose poetical effusions have been so much admired, contributes the first part of a story in prose, entitled "Sophy; or, the Adventures of a Savage." "The Pocket-book of a State Prisoner" is exhausted in this number, and few will feel sorry. Mr. F. C. Burnand contributes a paper on "The Stage as a Profession." The illustrations are quite excellent, both "Ape" and "Spy" and "At the Queen's Drawing-room." Altogether, it is an excellent number.

Cassell and Co.'s Publications.—In the Quiver for April, and also in the Family Magazine, will be found some articles above the average. We should particularly direct attention to "Short Arrows," in the former. In the latter, rather an interesting announcement appears,—namely, that of a series of prizes in connection with Cassell's Family Magazine. The Magazine of Art for April is exceedingly good.

Amusements.

It is now eighteen years since the metropolitan theatres were permitted to be open during Passion week (Good Friday excepted), but it has been repeatedly made obvious from that date that our London managers care little about availing themselves of a concession on which they had previously strongly insisted. The list of theatrical performances is often at this period greatly curtailed, and during the first four days of the week now ending, the ordinary entertainments have been suspended at the Haymarket, the Lyceum, the Olympic, the Vaudeville, the Globe, the Opera Comique, the Royalty, and the Surrey.

The Easter novelties are not numerous, and the pretty fairy extravaganzas, which used to be a conspicuous feature of the holiday entertainments at this period, have now no representatives anywhere. At Drury Lane will be played the drama of "Lady Audley's Secret," followed by a reproduction of "La Fille de Madame Angot," supported by a numerous choral and ballet company. The Gaiety performers appear at the Olympic, in Halliday's adapted drama of "Little Em'ly," with a burlesque as an afterpiece. A new three-act comedy, written by Mr. Charles Wills, and entitled "Cobwebs," is to be brought out at the Vaudeville. The comic opera of "The Naval Cadets" will be the attraction at the Globe. Mr. H. J. Byron's comedy of "The Upper Crust" will be produced by Mr. Toole at the Folly on the Wednesday in Easter week. The Royalty will be reopened with a farcical comedy from the French, Anglicised as "Themis." At the Duke's, Messrs. Baker and Farron, Irish and Dutch comedians, appear in a drama called "Conrad and Lisette." For the Surrey, Messrs. Henry Pettitt and Paul Merritt have produced a new drama called "Brought to Justice." "Clancarty" is to be transferred to Sadler's Wells, and Astley's reopens with "Arrah na Pogue."

The distinctive feature of the Easter week at the theatres would appear to be the engagement of the remarkable pantomimic troupe known as the Hanlon Lees, who appear at the Gaiety, in an adaptation by Mr. Robert Reece of the three-act vaudeville called, "Voyage en Suisse," in which they achieved such a remarkable success at the Variétés, Paris, in September last year. Acrobatic, gymnastic, and pantomimic feats are blended liberally with the farcical story.

The only novelty of the week has been a slight comedietta adapted from the French by Mr. Alfred Maltby, and brought out at the Criterion, under the title of "Verbum Sap." The trifle is a free translation of Léon Gozlan's well-known vaudeville, "La Pluie et la Beau Temps," already adapted, under other titles, for the Haymarket, the Princess's, the Globe, and the Gallery of Illustration. Miss Mary Rorke and Mr. Lytton Sothern now represent the lady who is so terribly bored in her country mansion by several weeks of rainy days, and the gallant stranger, Captain Norman, who eventually enlivens her dreary solitude, and suggests matrimony as a certain cure for ennui.

Mr. Gye has issued his prospectus for the ensuing season at the ITALIAN OPERA, Covent Garden, announced to commence on April 13, the subscription covering thirty-four nights. Madame Adelina Patti and a numerous company of vocalists will be found engaged, while Madame Albani is advertised to return to the lyric stage, after an absence of nearly two years. Fifty-three operas are included in the repertory. After the first week, performances will take place every Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday; and the Floral Hall Concerts will be resumed, with Sir Julius Benedict as the director.

The first production in London of Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan's new comic opera of "The Pirates of Penzance" is deferred to Saturday evening, April 3. In the meantime, the OPERA COMIQUE is closed, to permit the needful redecoration and rehearsals.

THE NEW BOOT POLISH.—An entirely new idea for polishing boots has just been introduced which does away with the laborious method hitherto in use. Propert's Ebony Blacking polishes instantly without brushing, is of an oily nature, and, being waterproof, retains its lustre in all weathers. One application upon ladies', gentlemen's, or children's boots lasts a week.—Of Bootmakers, price 1s.—Wholesale of J. PROPERT, Battersea Park Road, London.

A monument has been erected in Victoria Park, Portsmouth, to the officers and men of the Shah who fell whilst forming part of the naval brigade in Zululand. The monument stands near a similar obelisk erected by the Active, and is of white Sicilian marble.

The Czar has presented the Prince of Bulgaria with a war steamer, besides 40,000 rifles and several Krupp guns. The Bulgarian officers have hitherto been Russians, excepting two, who were Prussians.

TO EMIGRANTS, or any one leaving Home for a Change.—ENO'S FRUIT SALT is of the greatest value to emigrants, not only in preventing sea-sickness, &c., but as a means of keeping the blood healthy under the ever-varying conditions to which they may be exposed. Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s 9d and 4s 6d.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in packets labelled—"JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London."

The United States flagship Ticonderoga, which is on a commercial and scientific tour, arrived at Singapore from Penang on Feb. 12, en route to Labuan and Borneo, and will afterwards proceed to Hong Kong. The voyage has been a most interesting one, and as many ports which were not well known in the commercial world have been visited, the official record of the voyage is being looked forward to. On Feb. 14, official intimation having been received of the death of Rear Admiral Reynolds, who was formerly in command of the United States squadron in China, the flags of the Ticonderoga and of all the British men-of-war were at half-mast, and minute-guns were fired from the American man-of-war at noon.

MR. WEIL, of 14, St. George's Place, Albert Gate, has now Cigars of the Finest Brands for the coming Season, and his celebrated Belgrave Cigarettes were never better, for delicacy of flavour and aroma. The popularity of these cigarettes is now well established, both at home and in the colonies. Smokers who really understand good tobacco should lose no opportunity of inspecting Mr. Weil's cigarettes.

A HINT TO CANDIDATES AT THE COMING ELECTION.—Many a good speech is spoilt by inability on the part of the speaker to give clear utterance to his words, and there is no greater cause of indistinctness of speech than imperfect teeth. A man who aspires to oratorical honours should preserve his teeth, and how can he do this so effectually as by using ROWLAND'S ODONTO, which prevents decay, and at the same time sweetens the breath. Its unprecedented success for the last 50 years shows the favour in which it is held, while the fact of its containing no acid or mineral ingredients, renders it the safest tooth-powder that can be used.

CHLORODYNE.
THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE,

Which is admitted by the Profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered.

CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhœa, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery.
CHLORODYNE effectually cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Hysteria, Palpitation, and Spasms.

From Lord FRANCIS CONYNGHAM, Mount Charles, Dec. 11, 1868.

Lord Francis Conyngham, who this time last year bought some of Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne from Mr. Davenport, and has found it a most wonderful medicine, will be glad to have half-a-dozen bottles sent at once to the above address.

 Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manilla, to the effect that Cholera has been raging fearfully, and that the ONLY remedy of any service was CHLORODYNE.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE; that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, was deliberately untrue, which, he regretted to say, had been sworn to.—See Times, July 13th, 1864.

Sold in Bottles at 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d. None is genuine without the words, "Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming Medical Testimony accompanies each bottle.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—DISEASES OF WOMEN.—Medical science in all ages has been directed to alleviate the many maladies incident to females, but Professor Holloway, by diligent study and attentive observation, was induced to believe that nature had provided a remedy for these special diseases. He has, after vast research, succeeded in compounding his celebrated Pills and Ointment, which embody the principle naturally designed for the relief and cure of disorders peculiar to women of all ages and constitutions, whether residing in warm or cold climates. They have repeatedly corrected disordered function which had defied the usual drugs prescribed by medical men, and still more satisfactory is it that the malady is relieved completely and permanently.

The PUREST. The MOST PALATABLE. The MOST DIGESTIBLE. The MOST EFFICACIOUS.

Incontestably proved by Thirty Years' Medical Experience to be

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

REPORT.—"I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch No. 17,179, of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-1876 in the Arctic, and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best, if not the very best, in the 'Discovery,' and since my return home continues to perform equally satisfactory."

IN a paper in Fraser's Magazine for this month, entitled "The Zulu Campaign from a Military Point of View," Lieutenant-Colonel Harness, R.E., answers the criticisms of Mr. Forbes on the strategy and tactics of the late Commander-in-Chief in South Africa. He says himself he is better able to appreciate and realise the position of affairs previous to the second invasion of Zululand, than those who came out after the disaster at Isandlwana on January 22. It is to be presumed from the antithesis suggested by the title of the paper, that Mr. Forbes's trenchant article in the Nineteenth Century is considered by Lieutenant-Colonel Harness to be written from a "civilian" point of view; but we must say that on some matters in dispute, it is questionable whether the civilian, if Mr. Forbes can be so styled, is not as well qualified as any military man to form conclusions. Supposing the opposing critics to be equal in their capacity of judgment, Lieutenant-Colonel Harness possesses claims to attention when he speaks of the actual facts. He disclaims the spirit of an advocate, though he certainly "advocates" the case of Lord Chelmsford. There can be no question, we think, about the fact that if Lord Chelmsford had advanced on one front, or even two fronts, instead of four, Islobane and Isandlwana could not have occurred. Mr. Forbes's strictures on the four separate invading-column movement are justified by Lord Chelmsford, when, with much larger forces, he invaded Zululand a second time with two columns only; and there is the further fact to be gleaned, that Crealock's column became a virtual gaspillage of force. Either the original plan was wrong, or it was right. That the original plan was wrong in the eyes of the General who contrived it, may be inferred from the abandonment of it by the contriver when he made his second move. The radical rottenness of our whole scheme of polity in relation to the Zulu King was exhibited in the assumption that Cetewayo could invade, and meant to invade, Natal and the Transvaal. He never, we believe, contemplated such a measure. When Lord Chelmsford had retreated into Natal, leaving Pearson shut up in Ekshowe, and Wood and Buller on the defensive in the north-west, Cetewayo might have made raids into Transvaal and Natal, had he been minded to do that which he had abstained from doing for many long years. He, indeed, could have done it very readily and easily. But he had not invaded Natal or Transvaal when they were quite defenceless. It was we who made and declared war on him, and yet we set out with the initial idea that the concomitant of our invasion would be a counter-invasion by those whom we attacked. In the little book of instructions, compiled under the eye of that ill-used and deserving officer Colonel Bellairs, the Zulu army is very minutely dissected and described. They are credited with a taste for night attacks. They never made a night attack during the war. Colonel Harness speaks of "their disregard of life and their powers of endurance." Now, without disparagement to their martial qualities, we may remark that barring their success at Isandlwana and their behaviour at Kambula, their disregard of life was not so very conspicuous at any of the actions of the war. Their "powers of endurance" seem to have been greatly over-estimated. They were capable of one great "effort;" then they collapsed, and needed repose. At the first general advance, Wood and Buller swept them away from their front as easily as Pearson did at Inyezane, without laagering or entrenching, or dreaming of either. We venture to think that Lord Chelmsford's force ought not to have needed either trench or laager, had it been properly constituted and properly handled, on any one occasion,—not even at Isandlwana. Why, the 200,000 Germans who invested the 500,000 Frenchmen inside the walls of Paris never dreamt of such a procedure, but sat down in the open for weeks ere they threw up their batteries! It is degrading to discipline, courage, and civilisation to insist on trained soldiers, with cavalry, artillery, and the finest breech-loading arms, boxing up their horsemen inside carts and trenches, and hiding their guns and infantry behind earthworks, in order to enable them to resist the onslaughts of a naked host, wretchedly provided with miserable old muskets, and bundles of large arrows or little spears, whichever we please to call their assegais. Indeed, as Colonel Harness says, in speaking of Isandlwana, "opposed to an enemy without artillery, and with the worst description of firearms, the use of which they little understood," our troops were not badly placed. If we examine the accounts of Rorke's Drift, Gingihlovo, and Ulundi, we shall find reason to doubt whether the Zulus were so very regardless of life at all. After the failure of their early attack on the little garrison at the first-named place, they fell back, and potted away feebly till they drew off altogether; and if there were 3,000 of them, as there were said to be, the loss inflicted on them was by no means frightful or demoralising. In truth, had they all been as brave as the few who came up to the mealie-bags, they must have "rushed" the men, as their fellows dealt with the poor fellows in the defective position in which they were placed in front of Isandlwana. At Gingihlovo, the Zulus crept up as close as they could in the grass, but at no time did they try to "storm" the earth-work,—not for a moment did they make such an advance as the Light Division did at the field-works over the Alma; or such attacks as our troops delivered at the Quarries or the Redan, unsuccessful as the latter were. At Ulundi they were checked almost instantly, the firing did not last twenty minutes, and the nearest dead man to the square did not come within twenty yards of it, nor did the whole force at any time break cover out of the grass, and come on as troops must if they are to win a battle. We shall probably never know the real cause or causes of the catastrophe at Isandlwana (which it is the fashion to write of as if it were of some quasi-supernatural and diabolical agency), but it is plain, from all the accounts, that the Zulus did not come to close quarters, even when they were encouraged by the runaways to advance till the 24th Regiment was uncovered, and began to give ground, owing to failure of ammunition. We do not think that Colonel Harness scores much by his point raised in Lord Chelmsford's favour, that he had "a very natural expectation of being able to deal with the Zulu army" in a somewhat similar manner to that in which he had dealt with the Cape Colony Kafirs. But he insists at the very outset that the easy way in which the troops under Lord Chelmsford crushed the miserable Gaikas and Galekas, had caused the General and his officers and his men to undervalue the Zulu army. Lord Chelmsford's preparations, the force he assembled, the orders he issued, showed that he did not take that view, unless there is more potency in "somewhat" than is usually given to it. But there can be no doubt, we think, that the troops were not prepared for such courage as the Zulus showed, as they were puffed up with their easy march over the black races they had met in the field. And that is one of the very causes of deterioration in troops, which should be checked by very rigid discipline. A recent French critic, comparing the armies of France and Germany, observes that the latter possesses one great advantage over the former,—they have never been demoralised by fighting against uncivilised races like Arabs, Africans, and Cochin-Chinese. Our Generals may be somewhat exposed to error in their estimates of the forces which have to be dealt with in European warfare by their African and Asiatic experiences. Thus puffed up, the collapse of the bladder, on which our confidence rested, brought the whole fabric to the ground. In some instances, in which Lieutenant-Colonel Harness shows Mr. Forbes was wrong, he has not made it clear that Lord Chelmsford was right; but there is a statement respecting the morale of the Army which, read between the lines, cannot but add to the uneasiness which exists in the public mind respecting the discipline of the young soldiers in Africa. Lieutenant-Colonel Harness says:—

> "There is no doubt that the natural feeling of both officers and men, after Isandlwana, was one of caution. There also prevailed a feeling of determination that on no occasion should they be found unprepared. These feelings were strengthened by the disaster which befell a company of the 80th Regiment near the Intombi River; and the reinforcements, on their arrival from England, found the troops they had been sent out to assist, and with whom they were to work side by side, strongly under the influence of these feelings, which were probably at first regarded as extreme and exaggerated by the new-comers, but which were certainly very generally shared by them eventually. The occasional false alarms that took place were partly the result of the cautious spirit pervading the army, and partly due to the intercourse with the friendly natives who were co-operating with us, ever ready to over-estimate the powers and tactics of the enemy, of whom they stood greatly in awe—awe amounting almost to superstition. As to the discipline which existed among the troops, I think all officers will acknowledge to a certain amount of difficulty in keeping non-commissioned officers and men steadily to their work, for the first few days after their arrival at a town or post where drink was obtainable. Where drink is to be obtained and hard work has to be done, where officers, non-commissioned officers, and men are in such constant association as is unavoidable in camp life, offences resulting from intemperance are sure occasionally to occur, and doubtless did occur in South Africa. Unwilling as all officers are to put into action the powers accorded to them by the law on the subject of corporal punishment, yet I feel sure that I represent the convictions of a large majority of officers who served in the field in South Africa, when I say it is the only means of maintaining that strict discipline which is so essential to the well-doing of an army, during active operations in time of war."

The Easter Monday Review of the Volunteers at Brighton this year was of special interest. It is eight years since one had taken place, and the public were anxious to learn what progress had been made by the Force in the interval. Year after year the gratifying announcement has been published that the number of men enrolled and the proportion of "efficients" had gone on increasing, and a strong desire was felt to ascertain whether the encouraging statistics really represented a practical improvement. The most sceptical must have been convinced last Monday that the increase in efficiency was actual. Faults there were, of course—there always are faults at the manœuvres of any large body of troops, whether they belong to the Regular or Volunteer Forces—but those faults were chiefly committted by brigadiers and commanding officers of regiments. We will not go so far as the Commander-in-Chief in our praise of the Volunteers, but we are ready to admit that if not yet equal to the Line, their inferiority is much less marked than it was eight years ago. The Volunteers marched up the steep hill on to the Brighton Downs and from the summit to the scene of operations with great steadiness, and well closed up. From all accounts, there was absolutely no straggling. During the manœuvres they were steady and well in hand, and the firing was reasonably deliberate. The skirmishing was likewise well performed. The marching-past has been praised, but in our opinion it ought to have been better, considering that the troops went by in quarter-column, and that the number of files per company was often as low as sixteen, and seldom more than twenty. Still, there was not much fault to be found with this part of the performance. Manœuvring up and down steep hills, following a long march to the scene of operations, tends to make the best troops unsteady for mere drill purposes, and the march-past would probably have been better had it taken place before instead of after the sham-fight. The most encouraging feature of the Review was the business-like manner in which the Volunteers conducted themselves. They were thoroughly in earnest, evidently determined to do their best, and—a great point—kept silence in the ranks. They have at length realised the fact that "Volunteering" only applies to the joining the force and leaving it voluntarily, and that as long as they are in uniform, the obligations of discipline are as much incumbent on them as on Regular soldiers. Their conduct, too, at Brighton, to which place many of the Volunteers repaired a day or two before the Review, was simply admirable in every respect. Not only were they properly dressed, orderly in behaviour, and smart in bearing, but they were prompt to salute all officers. In short, they were throughout animated by the best possible spirit. We have referred to mistakes committed by some of the brigadiers and commanding officers. These were very serious, and not unfrequent. A quarter-column was seen marching across the front of the enemy, quite exposed to both artillery and rifle fire, at a distance of 1,400 or 1,500 yards; and in several instances battalions advanced in line, with closed files, under an infantry fire maintained by their opponents at distances varying from 400 to 1,200 yards. The most outrageous error of all was, however, perpetrated by a battalion which stood at ease in quarter-column in a valley, while a company of the enemy from the top of the hill fired steadily into them at a distance of 400 yards. For these glaring absurdities both the commanding officers and the brigadiers were to blame, and they lead to the conviction that the authorities should be more careful in their selection of officers for these appointments. With an indifferent Colonel, the best regiment of Volunteers in the world is liable to expose itself to censure. It is probably assumed that, in the first place, the Adjutant, and, in the second place, the Brigadier, would interfere to prevent or correct errors such as we have described. It is, however, often the case that the more ignorant a Volunteer colonel is, the more he resents the advice of his adjutant; while, as to the Brigadiers, the average capacity of those employed last Monday was much below that which might have been secured. Four out of the eight Brigadiers were Volunteer colonels, all of whom, we believe, served once in the Regular Army. It is long, however, since they quitted the latter, and in two instances no higher rank than that of Ensign was attained. There can be no object save that of gratifying personal vanity in employing Volunteer colonels as brigadiers, and it is very certain that colonels of the Regular Army infinitely superior in skill and experience could be obtained. To the latter, practice in handling a brigade would be of great value, while it is thrown away on Volunteer officers, for no one in his senses would dream of giving them the command of a brigade in the event of an invasion. The suggestion of a military critic in the Times, that the Volunteers should be permanently organised in brigades, seems to us worthy, at all events, of consideration. It would also, we think, be advisable to endeavour to provide, as a rule, Volunteer corps with field-officers who have served in the Regular Army, with at lowest the rank of Captain. Among the interesting circumstances connected with the Review we may mention the following:—Almost every Volunteer was provided with a haversack, water-bottle, and great-coat, though it is to be regretted that the pattern was not uniform. A telephone with the latest improvements was employed successfully by General Radcliffe's force, and the trained signallers of the 49th Middlesex Volunteers likewise did good work with flags. In the opposing force, three captive balloons enabled General Turner to obtain valuable information as to the movements of the enemy; and one of these balloons, guided and kept from mounting too high by three sets of ropes—two of which were held by men of the Royal Engineers, and the third attached to a machine on wheels—floated past the Commander-in-Chief at the close of the march-past. By the employment of balloons on this occasion, a great impulse has been given to that which promises to become a most valuable means of reconnoitring on the field of battle. If captive balloons can be conveyed and inflated without much difficulty—and of this there seems to be little doubt—and if the weather is tolerably calm and clear, they cannot fail to render important services to Generals. Especially useful would they be in an enclosed or slightly undulating country. At a siege also they would be worth their weight in gold, both to besiegers and besieged. The chief objection likely to be urged is that on being struck by a missile, they would descend so rapidly as to cause the death of the occupants. This objection, however, becomes less formidable, if we examine it closely. It would be easy to cause the balloon to mount to such a height as to be safe from rifle bullets, and also to render it practically almost impossible for it to be injured by a shell, even if the latter were fired from a long-range gun placed on the reverse slope of a hill and given an extreme elevation. Rockets might, it is true, prove formidable, but great accuracy with these missiles can rarely be obtained. Hence the danger of the balloon being struck may be regarded as comparatively slight. Even, however, if it were to be struck, it ought to be possible to minimise the evil consequences. It must surely be possible to build the balloon in compartments, so that one rent would not entirely destroy buoyancy. Besides, if the balloon were to be brought to the ground by a fragment of shell, the rapidity of the descent might be a good deal checked by the use of parachutes. After all, if the aeronauts are occasionally killed, they will suffer no worse fate than many of their comrades fighting on terra firma, and the risk will purchase results of immense value.

The law on the French Staff has at last passed through both Houses of Parliament. Never, perhaps, was Bill in any country so warmly discussed, and subject to so many turns of fortune. Now it was the advocates of the closed system who gained the upper hand, then the partisans of the open system triumphed. Several advantages, too, were gained by those legislators who, in favour of a compromise, proposed that the Staff should be left ajar. However, the end of all this wrangling is that a law has been voted and promulgated by which the Staff becomes an open branch of the Service,—open to any officers able to pass certain examinations. No officer will be able to retain a Staff appointment for more than four years at a time. At the expiration of that period, he will have to return to his duty as a regimental officer, either in the infantry, cavalry, or artillery. The present Staff will consequently be broken up as quickly as possible without interfering with the efficiency of the Service. As this decision has been hanging over the heads of the Staff officers for the last seven years, rendering their existence precarious and disagreeable, the voting of the new law has caused them little dissatisfaction. The present Staff officers will, of course, be allowed to compete for appointments. With the passing of the law on the Staff, the French Parliament and special military and other committees have nearly terminated that thorough reorganisation which was commenced directly peace with Germany was signed. Its leading features include compulsory service, army corps, district recruiting applied to the reserves and the Territorial Army, and the substitution of five years (or in reality not four years) for the seven years' active service of the Empire. This labour has been accomplished under many political difficulties, and a dozen changes of War Ministers. Fortunately, however, for France, and much to the credit of French patriotism, both Radicals and Reactionists, have laboured together to efface, as far as possible, all traces of the late disastrous war, to place their country in a position similar to that she occupied before the invasion. No Radical orators opposed the war estimates, which are now far higher than those which excited their wrath under Napoleon III. Even when Marshal MacMahon was President, and the Duc de Broglie, considered by the Radicals as the incarnation of all that is wicked, was his Prime Minister, there was no meddling with the military budget on the part of politicians, who, as far as principles go, object to standing armies. The reorganisers have now got nearly to the end of their labour. They have yet to draw up and pass a law regulating promotion, and the relations which should exist between officers commanding and the Commissariat. They will also have to come to some decision with regard to the mounting of infantry captains, who will never be able to command companies 250 strong on foot—250 strong in the event of war—and when unacquainted with four-fifths of their men.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh visited Glengariff Harbour, county Cork, on Friday, and remained till Saturday. A careful examination of the harbour and inquiries as to deep-sea fisheries were made. Thence the Duke of Edinburgh proceeded to Kilkierran Bay to meet the Valorous, and ordered gunboats there for distribution of seed potatoes, to save delay. On Monday his Royal Highness arrived at Galway on board the Lively, and spent several hours in making inquiries respecting the distribution of relief afforded by the Duchess of Marlborough and Mansion House Funds. He was entertained at luncheon at the Galway Club-house, and an enthusiastic greeting was accorded him. He gave directions for the Imogene to take Lord F. G. Osborne from Foynes to islands off Cork and Kerry coasts with food and clothing; and on Wednesday evening telegraphed from Kilkieran Bay to the Admiralty to the following effect:—Valorous arrived from Dublin on March 29, has distributed in the district 119 tons seed potatoes. Hawk takes 25 tons of potatoes to Newport on March 31. Bruiser takes potatoes to Killala on the 1st inst. Orwell and Goshawk will, on arrival, take remainder of potatoes. Valorous and Lively are distributing clothing. Relief Squadron will return to Galway on completion of distribution of cargo of Valorous.

The Channel Squadron will remain at Gibraltar, to take in provisions and ammunition, sent out in the Wye. It is, therefore, probable that the ships will be at Gibraltar until the middle of April.

The test to which the Nordenfeldt and Hotchkiss guns are to be put in firing at a moving target has now been arranged, and a report of the merits of these guns against torpedo-boats may soon be anticipated. Models of torpedo-boats have been constructed, to be rapidly towed through the water while being fired upon by the rival guns.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour is expected at Constantinople, on a visit to Sir Henry Layard, on the 12th inst.

The Albatross, which was commissioned at Chatham in October last, has met with a partial break-down in her machinery, and recently became disabled in the Straits of Malacca. The Egeria was sent to her assistance, and brought her to Singapore in tow.

The few remaining survivors of the Antarctic expedition will regret to hear of the death of Staff Commander Charles T. Tucker, in his 70th year. Staff Commander Tucker entered the Service in 1824, and served as Master of the Erebus, under Captain Sir James Ross, in his voyage of discovery and research, 1839-43, in the Erebus and Terror, the unfortunate vessels in which Sir John Franklin and crews met their untimely end. For twenty-three years Staff Commander Tucker held the appointment of Harbour-master of the Port of London, and has not long lived to enjoy the Naval pension granted him by the Admiralty in September last.

Commodore Richards, C.B., was on the West Coast of Africa on February 20, having visited Accra, and was about to leave in the Boadicea for the Brass River.

Vice-Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock intended to leave Jamaica in his flagship, on March 12, for Bermuda.

The Rev. S. Beal, M.A., R.N., rector of Folstone, has been presented to the rectory of Wark, vice Bellamy, deceased; and the Rev. Robert Picton, B.A., chaplain of Chatham Yard, has been presented to the rectory of Folstone, vice Beal.

The Captains' Naval pensions of £80 a year, vacant by the promotion of Retired Captains Bedford, Wilson, and Pickard, have been awarded to Captains J. W. Webb, J. Simpson, and A. Morrell; and the Commander's Naval pension of £65 a year, vacant by the death of Retired Captain Wake, to Captain Edwin C. Symons.

It was impossible to carry out the programme arranged to welcome the leaders of the Vega expedition, owing to the delay in her arrival. The Fire Queen, with Sir George Nares and other Arctic officers, and deputations from the Swedish Legation and Royal Geographical Society, remained several nights at Spithead with steam up, ready to go out and board the Vega; a banquet, at which the Prince of Wales was to have presided, was to be given in London; and various fêtes and entertainments were postponed from day to day. Professor Nordenskjöld and Lieutenant Palander arrived in London on the evening of Good Friday, and were entertained on Saturday by Mr. Clements Markham, C.B., the party from the Fire Queen being invited to meet them. On Sunday a luncheon was given in their honour by the Swedish Consul-General, and a dinner by Sir Allen Young. The Earl of Northbrook, President of the Royal Geographical Society, invited them to dine and sleep at Stratton on Monday; and on Tuesday morning a flying visit was paid to Winchester. Thence they proceeded to Coombe Bank, the residence of Mr. Spottiswoode, President of the Royal Society; and on their return to London, were entertained by Mr. Clements Markham at luncheon. On Wednesday evening the Scandinavian Club gave their twice-postponed fête, for which several songs had been expressly composed, and a most enthusiastic welcome was given to the voyagers by their countrymen. The Professor is now in Paris.

A change in the constitution of the Admiralty Board will probably shortly have to be made, owing to the return of Liberals to office. In the interests of the Navy we should wish to see Mr. Goschen again at the Admiralty rather than any untried member of the new Ministry; for, while at the head of Naval affairs, Mr. Goschen showed every wish to render the Service efficient, but was tied down by the "economy" craze of his party.

The efforts to reach the North Pole have, in the opinion of some, engaged sufficient attention, and the verdict of Sir George Nares, "Pole impracticable," has been accepted by many as the truth. Thus it appears that an opposition Pole hunt is likely to be started, that rising Naval Power, Italy, being the first to move in the matter. The plan of an Italian expedition to the South Pole has been prepared for submission to the King and the Cabinet. The international exploration of the North Pole and the ballooning expedition of Commander Cheyne are, however, to try and make a move next spring.

On Thursday, the first day of the financial year 1880-81, the changes in the Secretariat at the Admiralty were confirmed. Mr. Swainson is now formally installed as Assistant-Secretary and Principal Clerk of the legal branch; Mr. Evan MacGregor, formerly Private Secretary to Sir Cooper Key, is Principal Clerk of the military branch; Mr. Awdry, formerly Private Secretary to Mr. Egerton, takes charge of the civil branch. The Naval branch is placed in the charge of Mr. Neale, with Mr. Primrose and Mr. Jeffreys as assistants. Mr. Yorke has succeeded Mr. Noel as Assistant-Private Secretary to Mr. Smith; Mr. Voules has superseded Mr. Awdry as Secretary to Mr. Egerton; Mr. Birch has transferred his services from Lord Clanwilliam to Sir Cooper Key, vice Mr. MacGregor; and Lord Clanwilliam has selected Mr. Clayton as his Private Secretary. Mr. Gifford has transferred his services from Rear-Admiral Hall to Sir Edmund Commerell, vice Mr. Thomas; and Mr. Englefield has been appointed Private Secretary to the Naval Secretary.

It was only recently that Captain G. L. Sulivan, when in command of the Sirius, reported the discovery of some relics of Columbus at San Domingo, and now news is received of an interesting antiquarian discovery at Martinique. On his third voyage, in 1498, Columbus anchored at Arenas Point, and during the night encountered some danger from a tidal wave. The only damage suffered, however, was the loss of the anchor of the ship; and this has, it is said, recently been found by Señor Agostino, while digging in his garden at Point Arenas. The anchor weighs 1,100 lb., and was at first supposed to be of Phœnician origin, but careful inspection revealed the date "1497" on the stock, and it is believed that the anchor is a relic of Columbus.

Mr. Henry F. R. Yorke, who was for many years private secretary to the Senior Naval Lord, has been appointed assistant private secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty, vice Mr. J. G. Noel, retired.

One of the sons of the late Captain C. A. P. V. Robinson, R.N., has been elected by the Council of the Royal Naval School, New Cross, to fill the Ogle exhibition, founded by the late Admiral of the Fleet Sir Charles Ogle, Bart., to provide in perpetuity for the gratuitous board and education of the son of a post-captain. The late Captain Robinson, who had seen much active service, died some time ago, leaving a large family without provision, beyond the pension and compassionate allowance.

Commander Lynedoch Moncrieff, whose name was recently connected with the manufacture of small-arms, has now been appointed her Majesty's Consul for French Guiana, and will reside at Cayenne. We wish a few more Consulships were placed at the disposal of Naval officers, who are particularly fitted for such appointments.

There is every reason to hope that the alarming rumours spread at Portsmouth respecting the Atalanta, will be found to be altogether without cause. Nothing but the merest conjecture that she had been lost could be given, as there was simply no news of her proceedings, and it is cruel to circulate, as a fact, a mere idea that misfortune may have befallen her. We have been nervous about our sea-going training ships since the Eurydice was lost, and that is sufficient to make the slightest suggestion of harm believed in by those interested in the Atalanta. The idea of the Admiralty that she has put in at the Azores, will, we trust, be found correct. She was ordered to be home during the first week in April, so that she cannot be said to be really overdue.

We hear that the inquiry into the recent collision at Lisbon between the steam launch of the Agincourt and a mail steamer, has resulted in a decision adverse to the lieutenant who was in charge of the boat. It will be remembered that she was sunk and that two lives were lost, and in the opinion of those who sat on the inquiry so lamentable an event might have been avoided, had the officer in charge shown more judgment when attempting to go alongside the mail steamer.

The Japanese, like our own Constructors, appear to have their disappointments, and their ships do not always give the results anticipated. An Imperial yacht has lately been built at Yokoska, but her trial trips have been the reverse of satisfactory as regards the speed attained, and her engines broke down in the effort.

The senior torpedo class will assemble at Portsmouth on the 7th inst., but owing to the alterations now being made in the drainage of the College in the yard, the officers will not be accommodated with quarters there. In some instances, especially in the case of those who applied early to join the class, lodging allowance will be given, but others will be expected to provide themselves with lodging at their own expense. This is the way in which Naval officers on half-pay are encouraged to go through a voluntary course of torpedo practice.

Rear-Admiral Richard V. Hamilton, C.B., has been appointed senior officer on the coast of Ireland, in the place of Vice Admiral W. Montagu Dowell, C.B., promoted in January, and Rear-Admiral F. A. Herbert has been appointed Director of Naval Ordnance, in the place of Rear-Admiral Hamilton. We announced these appointments as being probable some weeks ago, but their Lordships have had a hitch about the Irish command.

Their Lordships have at last seen fit to remove from the list of Retired Lieutenants the name of one who has recently been occupying a position of unenviable notoriety, and whose peculiar notions of honour found for him a temporary residence in one of her Majesty's prisons.

Sub-Lieutenant Thomas Grandy Pearse, an "old mate," of October, 1829, has not been heard of officially for many years, and as he has not drawn the pension granted for his wounds, it is not unreasonably supposed that he is dead. His name has therefore now been removed from the Navy List.

Admiral Sir John Hay has lost his seat in Parliament, and the Navy has, in consequence, lost an excellent friend, and one who spoke up for the Service regardless of party. For forty years Stamford had returned a Conservative Member, but now it has been pleased to oust Sir John Hay for a Liberal Member. The absence of the gallant Member from his place in the House will be much regretted by the Navy generally, for he was one who thought more of the Service as a whole than of special classes and branches. Captain Price has been returned again for Devonport, as well he might, for he has shown a readiness to take up the seamen's plea for the establishment of a widows' fund, and has not been content to rest with official vague promises, but has returned to the charge again and again, and has pledged himself to carry the idea through, if it be possible to establish such a fund. Rear-Admiral Carr Glyn, who has attempted to get a seat as the representative for Chatham, has been defeated, and the former Conservative Member has been re-elected. The prospects of Rear-Admiral Carr Glyn were never brilliant, and his assisting at a meeting which declared that her Majesty's Government were unworthy of confidence did not help him with the Chatham electors. Captain Verney, too, has failed at Portsmouth, and it is plain that the home ports do not look with favour on Liberal candidates, the distressed dockyard men not having yet been forgotten.

The Admiralty does not show heartiness in giving a helping hand to the Colonies, and any request for a visit of a ship-of-war is generally met by an official regret of inability to comply. When other nations sent their manufacturers' goods to the Sydney Exhibition by Government vessels, England declined to lend such assistance to her colony, the Admiralty stating in reply to the request that there was no ship available. What construction their Lordships may place upon the word "available," we will not attempt to conjecture, but any one who glances at the Navy List cannot but wonder what all the ships can be doing, that not one could be spared to make a trip to Australia. Melbourne has now met with treatment similar to that accorded to Sydney, and the application that "a first-class man-of-war" might be sent to Melbourne, to be present as the representative of the British Navy at the opening of the exhibition, has been refused. Their Lordships, in their official reply to the application, "regret that they have no man-of-war to place at the disposal of the colonists other than the one already on the station." Where is the Navy? might well be asked, when so much difficulty is made about such a trifle as sending a ship to visit one of our colonies. Surely it would not have been throwing away money to send out something larger than a corvette, to which Commodore Wilson might have temporarily shifted his pendant. As the matter now stands, the English Navy will, in point of class, probably be the worst represented Navy in Australian waters at the opening of the Melbourne Exhibition.

Commander Swinton Holland, of the Northampton, who was appointed to the ship on her commissioning as flagship to Sir Leopold M'Clintock, has returned to England by mail steamer.

Lieutenant Henry Ponsonby, who was appointed to the Shannon as supernumerary, and proceeded in her to the Pacific, has returned to England, on completing two years' service.

Lieutenant George Temple, R.N., deserves the greatest credit for the energy shown by him in his surveying voyage on the coasts of Norway and Lapland, and the manner in which his paper was received recently by the Royal Geographical Society must have been very gratifying to him. But what we desire to know is, when the Hydrographer is likely to give the world the benefit of Lieutenant Temple's work. For too long already has this valuable contribution to hydrographical knowledge been pigeon-holed at the Admiralty, and if, as has been stated, the funds at the disposal of the Office have been required for other services, it would be well for the First Lord to ask Parliament to sanction the extra expenditure of the few pounds required to complete Lieutenant Temple's work, and to put the book through the press.

The inventor of the Gatling gun invited the Press to inspect his improved type of gun on Saturday, at the offices of Sir William Armstrong. The nature of the improvements have already been fully stated in these columns, and we trust that should there be any idea of ordering more guns of the Gatling type for the use of the Navy, the improved pattern will be adopted, instead of sticking to the present Service pattern. The last order given, and we believe not yet completed, was for the old pattern although the improvements had then been introduced by the inventor. Why was this?

Again has the Huascar lost her commander in action. It was a Peruvian monitor, the Mancocapa, looked upon as almost a harmless foe, which succeeded in damaging the Huascar and occasioning some loss of life, the Peruvian having pluckily gone out from under the forts of Arica, where she had been taking shelter, for the purpose of engaging the Huascar and the corvette Magellanes, and, after an hour's fighting, came out of the action almost unhurt. The Huascar does not now appear to be quite so well handled as she was when under the Peruvian flag. According to latest advices, the Huascar has been bombarding Arica three hours daily. Twelve thousand Peruvians were defending the place, and their batteries have inflicted much injury on the Huascar. She has captured a British ship with a cargo of arms for Peru.

A site has been selected for the proposed residence of the General commanding the Aldershot Division, in close proximity to the Camp and the Farnborough Road, and the works will be entered upon at once.

Seventeen Militia regiments in England and Scotland, the majority in large centres of population, have failed to raised a second battalion: and one, the 1st Lanark, is now apparently to be excused from maintaining one at all, though it has two Line battalions attached. It would thus seem that every endeavour is made by the War Office to save trouble.

General the Hon. J. Macdonald, who has been residing at Hyères for the benefit of his health, will be at the Horse Guards, it is hoped, about the middle of this month.

Belfort, which was the only place in France which successfully resisted a regular siege on the part of the Germans in 1870 and 1871, is honoured above all French towns; and now we see that a colossal lion has been unveiled in front of the château, which overlooks the surrounding country. For eight years the sculptor laboured at this animal, which is to represent the heroic defence by Colonel Denfert and his garrison. What right had the French to take a lion? What will the British lion say to this? or the Venetian lion at St. Mark's? or the Belgian lion which guards the field of Waterloo, or the Swiss lion which slumbers at Lucerne? Why did the French not cling to the eagle? Alas! the eagle was sick. The king of birds had been chipped out of Imperial buildings in Paris, or decently swathed in calico. Why not have taken the tiger? There was a tigre national at one time, which succeeded the Royal Bengal tiger. Or why not have taken the British leopard, which Napoleon was always driving into the sea? However, the French have their lion, and it is only to be hoped, for their sake, that it will be able to guard the gap of Belfort for them, in case of need.

Among the officers designated for the impending Turcoman campaign is Colonel N. Grodekoff, commonly known in Russia as the "Russian Burnaby." In 1878, Grodekoff, wishing to return home on leave, received the sanction of General Kaufmann to take the somewhat roundabout road viâ Afghanistan and Persia. From Tashkent to Samarcand, Grodekoff posted in the usual Turkestan conveyances; but after reaching the city of Tamerlane, he took to his saddle, and rode all the way through Bokhara, Afghanistan, and Persia, to the Caspian, touching on the road at Balkh, Saripool, Maimene, Herat, Meshed, and Asterabad. At Herat the Russian Staff officer was treated with the greatest respect, and was allowed to roam freely about the city in search of information. Unlike several English travellers, Grodekoff wore his usual uniform, and took no pains to disguise himself or the object of his journey. During his ride he received a most enthusiastic reception at the hands of the Uzbek populace at Saripool and other Afghan-Turkestan towns, who told him they hated the Afghan and longed for Russian rule. Grodekoff's personal narrative of his ride is being prepared for publication by Mr. Marvin, whose account of the disastrous campaign last year against the Akhel Tekke Turcomans has just been brought out by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. Colonel Grodekoff has provided Mr. Marvin with a map of his march through Afghanistan, which he drew up for the Russian État Major upon his return home from Herat.

The French Deputy M. Laisant, who takes an active interest in military matters, wrote lately to General Farre, asking him to give an order for ammunition-shoes to the town of Nantes, which M. Laisant represents. The War Minister replied that there were more shoes in store than are necessary, but that in order to prevent the disorganisation of the Nantes workshops, he would take 13,500 pair. The shoemakers of Nantes will think none the worse of the Republic, if General Farre has overstepped his strict duty in this matter. The order in question, by the way, seems to imply that there is no immediate probability of the Gallic infantry, as was reported, being given something more solid and handy than the shoe and gaiter.

We have been favoured with the following letter, written by a Line Field-Officer who served on the Umpire Staff at the Review on Monday last. The letter will be read with interest and no small degree of satisfaction by the Volunteer Force and its many admirers, and it is only fair to state that the high opinion of the Force here expressed is being endorsed by every officer who appeared at Brighton in any official capacity, from the Duke of Cambridge downwards:—"I promised you a line or two about the Brighton Review. I was sent down there as an Umpire on the Staff of General ——, and was attached to —— Division. Before going to Brighton, I made up my mind to inspect closely the Volunteers, as I had never had an opportunity of seeing any number of our civilian soldiers collected together. I had heard all sorts of reports about them,—how they lounged about, slovenly dressed, pipes in mouth, and a general air of uncalled-for swagger about them,—and now I'll tell you what opinion I have formed of them. On Saturday, 28th, I went to Brighton and I walked about that vast 'London-super-Mare' all the evening. On Sunday I walked about for many hours, and although there were upwards of 4,000 Volunteers in the town, I only saw one intoxicated Volunteer, and even he had sufficient sense to discern that I was an officer, though in mufti, for he drew himself up and saluted. I can assure you, as a fact, that during the three days and a-half that I was in Brighton, that man was the only one I saw the worse for liquor. A few smoked pipes and cigars, one or two only had mufti great-coats on; but all were smart, well set up, and most punctilious in saluting their officers. I was never more pleased in my life. As an umpire, I had an opportunity of closely watching the movements of the Volunteers in the field, and I unhesitatingly aver that, with few exceptions, the Regular troops of to-day are in no wise superior in steadiness or obedience to their officers' words of commands. In my report I have given them every credit. I have also pointed out a few faults, which I hope the authorities will take in good part. One fault, in particular, is the absence of the whistle. We find that musical (?) instrument of immense service when there is a high wind, or when heavy firing is going on. The human voice on these occasions cannot be heard. Some of the regiments did not march past well, whilst others performed that evolution in a perfect manner. I believe it is fully intended to appoint a Line field-officer to each administrative battalion, and I think it should be done at once. As regards the Review itself, I do not think it teaches the Volunteers anything, the time being too short for evolutions, &c., but no doubt there is something to be learnt by them, viz., the way to embark and disembark in and from railway trains. The regularity and quietness with which the regiments performed this part of the programme was a source of utter astonishment to the Line officers who superintended the arrival and departure of the regiments, at least, so they tell me. The new words substituted for embarking and disembarking are "en train" and "de train." I don't know who invented these terms. I should like to see more uniformity in the manner of wearing the haversack. Some had it slung over the right shoulder, others over the left. These bags on some men hung as low as the knee, whilst others were up under the arm, but I hold that commissioned officers and the adjutants are responsible for this. To sum up, I think that if a sprinkling of good Line officers could be included in the strength of our Volunteer regiments, the latter would benefit greatly. On the whole, I think England ought to be proud of her citizen soldiers. I would just remark en passant that I saw upwards of 100 men wandering about the Downs—rifle over shoulder—utterly indifferent as to the part they should have taken in the day's proceedings. I was sorry to see it, as it destroyed in a slight degree the pleasant opinion I had formed of the behaviour of the Volunteers. But I understand the fault was due rather to the Brigadiers than to the men themselves, as many commanding officers were in perfect ignorance until Monday morning as to what hour the parade of their battalion was to take place, and could not therefore inform their men when and where they would assemble."

If no king in the Biblical days went to war without first sitting down and counting the cost, this process is doubly necessary now that such formidable masses of men take the field. The French have just been painfully reminded of the expense of their attempt to march on Berlin, and to seize the Rhenish provinces. The war indemnity claimed by the Germans amounted in round numbers to £230,000,000, the military expenses to £50,000,000, the keep of the German troops to £12,000,000. The losses in the way of taxation, &c., are set down at £80,000,000, the reconstitution of the war materiel at a similar sum, and military pensions and revenue lost by annexation £12,000,000; say, about £500,000,000. France may have settled her account with Germany, but she remains saddled with an extra taxation of some £25,000,000 a year. In addition to this, although £80,000,000 has been laid out in reconstructing lines of defence, replenishing magazines, and rearing the troops, it is calculated that another £80,000,000 will be required, in order to terminate the work. Not only must the active Army be provided for, but the reserve of that Army; the Territorial Army, and the reserve of the Territorial Army; and other irregular corps, like the Custom-house officers, the woodrangers, &c. It has been for some time the fashion to say that Germany did not profit by the war indemnity levied on France, but this is what a French economist wrote in 1875:—

> "It is beyond doubt that the payment of this immense sum has permitted the German Empire not only to pay off the expenses of the war, but also singularly to augment its military power without demanding any fresh pecuniary sacrifices from its subjects. It has permitted Germany, too, to constitute important reserves which will place it in a position to commence a new war without having recourse to a loan, forced currency, or increased taxation. Finally, it has permitted the country to transform its money and to obtain a more handy and modern instrument of exchange."

The writer then went on to describe what was done with the celebrated five milliards extracted from France. About £12,000,000 were required to cover the expenses caused by the war, which expenses, it will be observed, were about the same for both countries. About £38,000,000 were distributed in the way of pensions and among the families of soldiers which had been expelled from France. A sum of £1,000,000 was set aside for the German Fleet, although there were no naval engagements during the war. Under chapter C, £26,000,000 were devoted to the increase of the military power of Germany,—to the building of fortresses, &c., and the securing of her conquests. About £5,000,000 were spent in civil works, such as the construction of a House of Commons, and £20,000,000 were laid out in the purchase of railways. Large sums were also distributed among the States which had aided Prussia in the struggle, and Bavaria, Wurtemburg, and Baden were handsomely remunerated for their services. The French writer, after having added up his figures, found that no less an amount than £60,000,000 was missing, and his natural conclusion is, that this vast sum has been placed in the famous reserve, where it will be idle until some other imprudent Power ventures to attack Imperial Germany.

Volunteering for continuance of service in India has now almost come to a close. It has for many years been the custom that when the Indian term of service of a regiment had nearly expired, and the regiment was about to leave for England, soldiers who wished to remain in India were allowed to volunteer for certain regiments which had some years of Indian service before them. But the men who enlisted under the Act of 1870 are liable to be transferred to any regiment of the same branch of the Service, and those who have re-engaged under the Act come under the same ruling. The same happy-go-lucky system of filling up a regiment of boys from England with a proportion of older soldiers from several other regiments will still go on, but with this important difference,—that instead of soldiers going by their own free choice to such regiments as they prefer, they are liable to, and probably will be, transferred bodily to any regiment in proportion required to fill up its numbers to a fixed standard. This gives the enormous advantage (to the War Office) that the total of a force can be at once computed by simple multiplication, so that if we have five regiments (say in Madras), each exactly 600 strong, it can be at once computed that there are 3,000 men there, with the exception of a few who perversely die in order to upset the arithmetical calculation as much as possible. If soldiers were sheep, or bundles of matches, the advantages of the simplicity of the system would allow of little being said on the other side. But the British soldier has—and we may be proud of it, for it is the basis of his warlike qualities—a strong, sturdy independence of his own, and he most peculiarly objects, as a rule, to be transferred without having a word to say in the matter himself. Has that exceedingly unfortunate occurrence been completely forgotten, when the Company's regiments, who would have been proud to serve the Queen if they had been asked to do so, and given a bounty of 5s. apiece, objected to being handed over or transferred by a printed order? The expense incurred by that error cost the country far more than a large bounty to each man would have come to. The British soldier is still the same man, and it may be confidently predicted that if transferment by order is carried out, even those men who would have volunteered for the regiment they find themselves in, will feel a grievance at the option not being allowed to them, and most certainly all others will have some grounds for dissatisfaction.

One of the principal points for the consideration of the Committee now inquiring into the Staff-College system should be the mode of entry. The queries that the board, composed of the commanding officer and two seniors, have to answer, respecting a candidate's qualifications, would seem to be sufficient to prevent an officer being recommended who was not likely to prove efficient; but we know from practical experience that many gain admission to the College, and pass the examination, who possess by no means the requirements essential for the efficient performance of a Staff officer's duty. It is, in fact, a question whether the Staff College has produced better Staff officers than we had before its introduction, when Generals chose their own, usually selecting men who had practically proved their capabilities for the work, as smart adjutants of their regiments. A well-known Colonel, lately deceased, said some years ago:—"I have to-day recommended two of my officers for the Staff College. Both will pass in, and both get their P.S.C., but I should be sorry to have either of them on my staff!" He was asked why he recommended them. "How could I help it?" he said. "They did their duty well enough; there was nothing against their character; they had plenty of book-learning. All they lack is common-sense; so why should I prevent them from striving to better themselves, when half the men who go to the Staff College are worse; besides, how can I prove they are wanting in the commodity of common-sense? Had I been asked to select an officer, I could have sent one (not so learned), but a man who would have been a really good staff officer." This is what we would suggest, viz., that commanding officers, in conjunction with Generals of districts, should select. Let each regiment have the privilege of nominating an officer every three or four years. Let officers thus selected enter the College without any examination, be reported on in three months, and if considered educationally disqualified sent back to their regiments. Let there be no competitive examination, but, after a year's study, let all officers who come up to a certain standard be passed. It seems ridiculous, when we consider the peculiar qualifications necessary for the efficient performance of staff duties, that an officer should be allowed to say of himself, "I'm the man for the Staff," when perhaps his comrades think that he is not even the "man" for captain or subaltern of the day! In fact, there could scarcely be a better way of picking out good Staff officers, than by leaving the officers of a regiment to select the best they had themselves. They, in fact, are the best judges of the character, disposition, and military acquirements of the men they associate with day after day. How frequently we hear the remark in a regiment, even if the officer spoken of be a favourite, "Fancy Jack Smith a Brigade-Major!" and, when this remark is passed, it generally happens that "Jack Smith" does not give all the satisfaction to his General that that officer would wish.

It is well that a committee has been appointed to investigate the best mode of dealing with military prisoners, and no doubt the committee will gather much valuable information from the evidence of experienced and practical men. We expressed our opinion at some length on this subject about six months ago. The present mode of dealing with soldiers imprisoned for military crimes cannot be more anomalous and unsatisfactory, and we trust that the starting-point in a reform will be to revert to the system as first established in 1845, upon the recommendation of the Committee on Military Crimes and Punishments, presided over by Lieutenant-General the Earl Cathcart, viz.:—"Placing military prisoners entirely in military hands, in which soldiers might be subjected to the discipline and punishment best suited to their military habits and to the nature of their offences." We repeat that there never was a greater mistake made than closing so many military prisons, and sending soldiers to Millbank and other ordinary prisons, thus placing them under the administration of the Director-General of Convict Prisons, who naturally introduced the convict system, which has proved a signal failure. We are at a loss to understand why the system of punishment in military prisons should have been condemned, and a number of them closed some ten years ago, because the structural arrangement of some of them necessitated the prisoners being thrown into association, and prevented the maintenance of strict discipline. Those retained at Gosport, Dublin, and Cork appear to work very satisfactorily. There must surely be many civil prisons which were closed upon the Government taking them under control, which could be used for military purposes. We have seen cases taken up by the Press with great indignation when soldiers wearing her Majesty's uniform have been refused admission to certain seats at places of entertainment, or in public conveyances. Has the assembling of over 500 soldiers in the convict prison at Millbank, and sending some 600 more round the country to the several county and borough gaols, raised the status of the Army, or been the means of reducing military crime? We fear the result has proved the reverse. The punishment of military offences, which can be dealt with more summarily than civil crimes, should be short and severe, but the military element should be maintained; and unless a soldier has committed a crime which necessitates his discharge from the Service, he should not be placed in the same category as a burglar, pickpocket, wife-beater, or other degraded criminal. Again, when a soldier rejoins his regiment on release from these prisons, he remains non-effective for weeks, while he is put through a course of drill which he has forgotten, and to "set him up," after the stoop he has acquired from so much oakum-picking and stone-breaking. Why not make drill, and military instruction and discipline, cleaning accoutrements, &c., part of prison punishment in military prisons, and thus enable a soldier to resume his place in the ranks, instead of being made as unfit for it as possible. All this requires a radical change, and no doubt prompt measures will soon be taken to remedy the present evil, which is discreditable to the Army.

The new French War Minister, General Farre, has just written a circular, the result of which will in due time be watched with peculiar interest. He has decided upon calling out this year those conscripts of the years 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878, who are termed as being "at the disposal of the military authorities;" also the men belonging to the auxiliary services, from 1872 to 1879. The first mentioned category comprises men who, for a variety of reasons, are relieved from active service in time of peace,—men whose presence at home is essentially necessary to their families, the eldest sons of widows, lads of weak constitution who have been accorded a delay, and soldiers who have been permitted to return home by special Ministerial orders. The men of the second category comprise conscripts under height, or not strong enough for active service. These men, according to their special aptitudes, are distributed among the hospitals, military workshops, magazines, the administration, and commissariat. When we say that the men belonging to the auxiliary services will be called up this year, we should add that they will simply be passed in review at the chief towns of their various districts, and, therefore, the Ministerial measure will entail no great hardship. It will procure for most of the men concerned an agreeable holiday. As for General Farre, his desire naturally is to try the new machine, and to see if it be effective or defective. A French military critic, writing on this matter, remarks:—"The review about to be held is a veritable innovation. Although the principle was long ago laid down in the Recruiting Law, it had neither been supplied nor regulated. It is necessary all those interested should know that, in the event of not attending the review, they will expose themselves to be sent to prison." We may add that the annual number of conscripts in France is somewhat in excess of 300,000. Of these, some 30,000 are altogether exonerated in consequence of physical or mental infirmities, while some 70,000 lads are exempted for active service in time of peace, being indispensable to their families, &c. The number of lads told off for the auxiliary services averages close upon 30,000 each year. The above figures will show the importance of the review upon which the French Minister of War has decided, and which will take place in the summer, at dates which will probably be left to the prefects of the various Departments, so as to occasion the least possible amount of inconvenience. It is of course necessary, where such large bodies are concerned, that the military authorities should have some experience in handling, and that the men themselves should be made acquainted with the duties they may be called to fulfil in the event of war, and be prepared to settle down in their places at a moment's notice. Wars nowadays leave little or no time for preparation; they come on suddenly and are quickly over, giving one but small chance of repairing errors.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

"Upon no consideration will any man be permitted to enter a publichouse." This was part of the instructions given, in my hearing, by Major Edis to the 38th Middlesex Rifles last Sunday morning. Probably had I been enabled to be in other places besides the space in front of the Town Hall, Brighton, where the Artists—scrupulously neat and perfectly dressed, even to the wearing of white gloves—were drawn up in column, I might have heard similar orders given to other regiments; but, like a celebrated bird, I could not conveniently be, and therefore such observations as I shall endeavour to note here are derived from observation of the conduct of our Auxiliaries on the march,—in some cases extending over three days; in quarters,—barns, schools, and other places which could be utilised; in the streets of Brighton and Lewes; and finally, on the day of the review, on the Downs. No matter what military critics may say respecting the plan of operations last Monday, and the insurmountable difficulties which were apparently so easily overcome, there can be no question about the eminently practical manner in which all the marching arrangements were carried out. About twenty regiments had detachments on the road, representing nearly 6,000 officers and men, and it was obvious from the repute of these battalions, from their regimental orders, and the appearance in full marching order of the detachments, that the work they had engaged in was solely for instruction, and to prove that, given the opportunity, the Volunteers are not only willing and anxious to give up their hard-earned holiday for this purpose, but also to submit to pecuniary sacrifices and undergo the inseparable discomforts connected with "roughing it." Some regiments, better off than others, were enabled to enjoy comfortable billets, but the majority, composed, as the force may now be said to be, of the working-classes, had to put up with straw on the hard floor for their beds, and were not able to take off their clothes for four days. All this, however, was cheerfully submitted to. Men who had to get over twenty miles in the day were required for guard during the night, and did the duty, I am assured, without a murmur. During the marches, advance and rear-guards were formed, the baggage and commissariat waggons were correctly protected, outpost duty was practised when time and opportunity permitted, open country skirmished over, and in most cases officers and non-commissioned officers made sketches of the country passed through, and reported on picquet duties, as laid down in the "Field Exercise." On Sunday afternoon I visited the quarters of the marching detachments of the West London, West Middlesex, 19th Middlesex, 36th Middlesex, 38th Middlesex, 2nd London, and some other corps, in Brighton. All these were located in schools and other buildings, and though a few had only just come in (about three in the afternoon), there was not the slightest evidence of irregularity. At the Richmond Street Board School, of the 150 men of the 2nd London who, smothered with white dust, had arrived only an hour previously, two only were footsore, and not a few were sorry that the march was over. Here, as, indeed, in the other buildings, the details of barrack life were closely followed, even to the special pass, duly signed and countersigned, to be absent till tattoo. Orders were very strict respecting the dress and appearance of the men, and par. 37, sec. 6, of the Queen's Regulations, were posted at most of the quarters. It runs as follows:—"The dress and appearance, as well as the demeanour of soldiers, should, on all occasions and in all situations, be such as to create a respect for the military Service. Soldiers are not permitted to go beyond the precincts of the barracks unless properly dressed, and are not to smoke in the streets." To say that pipes were not to be seen on the parade and in the streets in the afternoon and evening would not be correct, but they were so few as to be only noticeable for this reason, while the general deportment and conduct of the men was admirable, and contrasted remarkably with what could have been seen in the early days. Most of the officers—Regular and Auxiliary—were in mufti; those who only appeared in uniform were saluted, though it appeared to me that few Volunteers salute correctly. Of course the public-houses were full; but the watchful supervision of officers, non-commissioned officers, and men who knew that the reputation of their corps might be brought into disgrace by the excesses of half-a-dozen youngsters, was sufficient to prevent any disorder. Moreover, pickets, supplied by each regiment, were out from an early hour, and patrolled the streets till midnight. In the enclosures on Monday morning there was much to see and admire. It is estimated that 10,000 Volunteers were in Brighton and Lewes by Sunday night; the remaining half, with military punctuality, reflecting equal credit on the exertions of the railway authorities, were in their appointed brigades before nine o'clock; and half an hour later, the attacking and defending forces were on their way to the Downs. Here it was evident that the force of 1880 was very different to that which mustered in 1872. Officers, non-commissioned officers, and men drilled and looked like soldiers. There was little, if any, confusion even during the most exciting incidents of the fight, and I was particularly struck with the prompt and correct manner in which the orders of the divisional and brigade commanders were carried out. Many experienced officers of the Regular Service were profuse in their expressions of satisfaction and admiration, which was shared by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and the foreign officers on the field, and the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief received with evident pleasure the verdict of the chief commander for that day. In the march-past nearly all went by so well, that it would not be fair to particularise. Some few, however, deserve special mention, viz., the 3rd Middlesex (a really splendidly turned-out brigade) and 10th Kent Artillery; and among the Rifles the 3rd London (who, with the 5th Hants, carried off the palm for soldierly bearing and general appearance), the Artists, Scottish, and 36th, 37th, 40th, and 46th Middlesex. The advance made by the two last-named corps within the past few years is something wonderful, and Colonels Malet and Routledge have good reason to feel proud of their commands, the marching of both regiments having called forth an expression of approval from the Commander-in-Chief, who was heard several times to say "very good," "very good indeed," as company after company passed the saluting point. Had there been a few regiments of cavalry on the field and some field batteries, the manœuvres would have been more real and instructive. As it was, the Volunteers acquitted themselves well, and can look back with satisfaction to their Easter work of 1880.

Sir,—Will you allow me, through the medium of your influential journal, to make a few remarks with reference to the question put by Mr. A. M. Sullivan to the First Lord in the House? Mr. W. H. Smith, in reply as to Surgeon Allen's case, said that "Mr. Allen, while a patient in Haslar Hospital in 1878, was recommended for survey by Dr. Watt Reid, on the ground that he was suffering from an incurable disease, but one that was not beyond remedial measures. This survey, however, was not then ordered by the Medical Director-General. On Mr. Allen's discharge from hospital he was appointed to a coastguard cruiser. In accordance with the practice of the Service, he was medically surveyed in London, and not at Haslar, as he had requested, and was found fit for active service." In all justice, does it not appear extraordinary that an incurable disease should be within the range of "remedial measures;" and even if it could be alleviated, was it merciful to immediately order that officer to fill an appointment in a cruiser off the bleak coast of Scotland? It also appears strange that a medical board in London, who only saw Mr. Allen for a few minutes, should have found him fit for active service, and have ignored the opinion of such an able man as Dr. Reid, who had treated Mr. Allen for some time, and officially reported him as suffering from an incurable complaint. Is it then to be wondered at, that on this "he requested permission to resign, as not equal to the responsibilities, either mentally or physically?" Mr. Smith says that it is not customary to give compensation to officers who resign, or to reconsider their case with a view to readmission into the Service, for which an Order in Council would be required. With this admission, could not an Order in Council be procured to meet such a truly painful case, and give some compensation to an officer who spent the best years of his life in the Navy, and who sacrificed health and prospects in the service of his country? It seems a pity, in these times, when all endeavours are being adopted to make the Navy popular with the Medical profession, that this case of undoubted hardship should have cropped up. Surely their Lordships, who are all-powerful, could meet it?—I am, &c.,

Retired Medical Officer, R.N.

[Much depends upon the nature of the disease under which Mr. Allen was suffering; but we believe there is no reason for assuming that this officer contracted it on duty, or that he especially "sacrificed health and prospects in the service of his country."—Ed. A. & N. G.]

The Royal Navy List for April shows an increase of information in all its parts, and contains the Zulu war services. The confidence and support of the Admiralty has been shown in placing it in the ships' libraries.

The Members for Portsmouth, Mr. Bruce and Sir Drummond Wolff, aided by Sir James Elphinstone, have pressed upon the Admiralty the grievances of Warrant officers, and the following memorandum, issued by Admiral Ryder, may be accepted as showing the intention of their Lordships to move in the matter:—"Their Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, having had under their consideration the position of Warrant officers, you are to furnish a return showing—(a) The number of Warrant officers on the complement of her Majesty's ship under your command who are in receipt of the scale of pay allowed for other ships, but whose duties are analogous to those discharged by Warrant officers in seagoing ships. (b) The remaining number of Warrant officers borne, and who are in receipt of the lower scale of pay, specifying the duties they are required to discharge.—(Signed), A. P. Ryder, Admiral."

The Queensland National Bank, Limited, as Banking Agents of the Government of Queensland, have been empowered to receive tenders for £2,000,000 of the Queensland Four per Cent. Loan of 1879, being part of the total authorised issue of £3,053,000, constituting the entire loan, which is secured upon the consolidated revenues of the colony, and is for the execution of certain permanent works of public utility and convenience, viz., railways, harbours and rivers improvement, public buildings, roads and bridges, electric telegraphs, and for certain other purposes.

The Army.

1st (King's) Dragoon Guards. When we heard from Natal, Vet.-Surg. Longhurst had received orders to join the head-quarters of his regiment in the Transvaal.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). The annual steeplechases are fixed to come off at the Maze, Dundalk, on the 15th inst., under the Irish National Hunt Steeplechase rules.

4th Hussars. "A Looker-on" writes:—"I hear from good authority that the 4th Hussars, now quartered at Shorncliffe, are to be moved in June next to Aldershot. This move surely cannot be judicious, considering the present state of the regiment, which has lost nearly all its old soldiers. It is well known that the regiment cannot turn out strong enough for a commanding officer's parade, as none of the recruits, of which it is almost entirely composed, are fit to be dismissed their drills. A few months more in a quiet quarter like Shorncliffe, where the adjutant and drill instructors have better opportunities and more time at their disposal, will do the men more good in the way of learning their drill, than if the regiment were sent to Aldershot to take part in brigade and divisional movements, for which at present it is quite unfit."

5th Lancers. The London correspondent of the Irish Times writes:—"I am, indeed, most gratified to learn that Brigdr.-Gen. Dunham Massy, notwithstanding his recent removal, is likely to receive a Companionship of the Bath in recognition of his services with the Cabul expedition. Some people there are who blame Gen. Massy for the massacre of British cavalry before Cabul, but I have reason to know that the General was in no way responsible. He received orders to do a certain duty, he did it, and did it with that thoroughness which has earned for him a world-wide reputation. It was his duty to obey the instructions he received, as Lord Cardigan did on a memorable occasion, a quarter of a century ago. The instructions were carried out to the letter, with what result one distinguished British regiment knows only too well. The blame for the disaster rests on other shoulders than Gen. Massy's, and though he may have to bear the onus for a time, eventually the truth will become known, and then the General's character will be re-established. It is strange, if he was at fault that not a single cavalry officer at Cabul considers him so."

9th Lancers. In his despatch to the Commander-in-Chief in India, giving an account of the operations before Cabul on Dec. 11, Gen. Sir F. S. Roberts writes:—"Brig.-Gen. Massy specially mentions Lieut. and Adjt. E. B. M'Innis and Lieut. C. J. W. Trower, both of the 9th Lancers, for their gallantry; whilst I personally witnessed the devoted bravery of the Rev. J. W. Adams, the chaplain attached to my force. Mr. Adams dismounted to assist a wounded man of the 9th Lancers, and, whilst so occupied, lost his horse; when, making his way back on foot, and although the enemy were but a few yards' distance from him, Mr. Adams, regardless of his own safety, was mainly instrumental in saving the lives of two men of the 9th Lancers, who were caught under their horses, which had fallen in a watercourse, and who, but for his aid, must have been speedily killed by the advancing enemy. Capt. J. A. F. H. Stewart-Mackenzie and Capt. Bloomfield Gough, both of the 9th Lancers, distinguished themselves on this occasion; the former officer bringing the regiment out of action and remaining in the field until late in the day, although suffering from a severe contusion. Brig.-Gen. Massy brings to notice the very forward conduct of 2nd Lieut. J. Hunter, 9th Lancers, and the following non-commissioned officers and men of that regiment are stated to have been conspicuous for their gallantry and coolness: Qrmr.-Serjt. H. Finn; Troop Serjt.-Major H. England; Troop (now regimental) Serjt.-Major R. Young, by whose gallantry and exertions Lieut.-Col. Cleland's life was saved; Troop Serjt.-Major H. Spittle (since killed in action); Pts. H. Lougheed, S. W. Haisent, H. J. Oakes, and F. Dryce.'

13th Hussars. The London correspondent of the Irish Times says:—"Col. Baker Russell, C.B., is, it is stated at the Colonial Office, to receive the Cross of St. Michael and St. George, in recognition of his services in the attack and capture of Secocoeni's stronghold, as Sir Michael Hicks Beach is desirous of marking the services rendered by him to the colony."

14th Hussars. Brevet Major Gardner, lately on service in Zululand, has joined the 11th Hussars at Aldershot.

19th Hussars. The annual competition in swordsmanship and horsemanship took place at Limerick on Tuesday. The committee of judges were:—Major Coghill, Capts. Kynaston and Williams, and Lieut. French. There was a fine display of swordsmanship. The first prize was won by Pte. Chapman, the second by Serjt.-Major Bailey, the third by Pte. Whitefield, in swordsmanship. In this class Serjt.-Major Mason executed some extraordinary feats.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Major-Gen. R. P. Radcliffe will continue for some months longer as dpty-adjt.-gen. at the Horse Guards, as his successor, Col. Arbuthnot, is employed on special duty in Afghanistan.

The quartermasters who became supernumerary in India by the recent reduction have arrived home, and will be provided with appointments in the Militia Artillery.

Capt. P. R. Lempriere, late of the Bombay Artillery, died on the 24th ult. at Manchester, where he had been for some time connected with the local branch of the Bank of England. He was 40 years of age.

Lieut. F. T. S. Carter, 2nd Brig., died at Fermoy Barracks a few days ago from the effects of a fall from his horse in the hunting-field. The deceased entered the Army Jan. 6, 1872.

The last general orders published at Simla announce the alterations that have been made in the reliefs for 1879-80. The complete list is as follows:—No. 9 Baty. 8th Brig., from Tougoo to Aden; 14-8, from Secunderabad to Aden; 2-9, from Allahabad to Aden; 5-8, from Bombay to Candahar; 13-8, from Deolale to Bombay; 18-8, from Aden to Attock; 12-9, from Attock to Cabul; 13-9, from Peshawur to Agra; 14-9, from Ferozepore to Quetta; 15-9, from Mean Meer to Kurrachee; 10-11, from Delhi to Peshawur.

"Seventeen Pence a Day" writes:—"The reference of your correspondent, 'R. A.,' last week to captains of Artillery, when adjutants of Militia, receiving less pay than Infantry captains holding similar appointments, touches a question that presses on the whole of the captains belonging to the so-called 'Scientific' Corps, whose pay is actually 7d. a day less than that of any other officers of similar rank. This anomaly is not the less felt because rarely put forward; indeed, its mention generally meets incredulity, or else a reply that there must be some compensating advantage—which, however, is never specified! But explanation is not far to seek. The present rate of pay is that formerly received by 2nd captains of Artillery and Engineers. This rank was abolished in 1872, when all the first captains were promoted majors, their pay being increased, and ultimately made up to that of majors of infantry, but the pay of captains has remained that fixed by Royal Warrant for second captains. This is one of the 'disadvantages attaching to officers of Royal Artillery,' to which the motion of Col. Arbuthnott, M.P.—carried in the House of Commons last year against the Government, but regarding which nothing has been since announced—was designed to draw investigation; the confidence that their case would be among the first to be remedied thereby, appears to have deterred from complaint hitherto both the captains concerned and the corps at large. It has been urged against the claim of Ordnance captains for the same pay as the Infantry, that the 'extra' pay of Engineer officers is a compensation; but this is far from the case, as it is given in lieu of quarters, &c., the expense of which it rarely covers, while the objection in no way applies to officers of Artillery. Again, it has been said that Royal Artillery captains, having no special charge, are not entitled to so much pay as officers commanding companies; but the superior qualifications demanded for their admission to the Service, and their general estimation therein, lead to the contrary inference, viz., that their value to the country is not less than that of Infantry officers of corresponding rank. Moreover, the latter, while on leave, receive the same pay as when commanding their companies; while Royal Artillery captains, when commanding batteries—which, taking the whole, they may be said to do during at least one-quarter of each year—draw (since command allowance has been abolished) eleven shillings a day only,—i.e., 7d. less than Infantry captains, while doing work for which it was found advisable to give Royal Artillery first captains a step of rank, and an increase of pay from 12s. to 16s. a day. The point to which I have endeavoured to draw attention, though apparently trivial, is in principle important, as affecting the relative advantages of different branches of the Service, which the country at large, as well as aspirants to commissions, are beginning to consider. In the foregoing, no prejudice whatever is intended to infantry captains, who, it is believed, would rather aid than oppose the plea urged in favour of the Ordnance officers. The anomaly is so evident, and the remedy would cost so little, that it would appear only to require the attention of the Secretary of State for War to be directed thereto, for its removal, by the addition to the pay of Royal Artillery and Royal Engineer captains."

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Col. C. J. Merriman, C.S.I. (late Bombay), has been appointed secretary to the Government of Bombay in the Public Works Department, vice Lieut.-Gen. Sir M. K. Kennedy, K.C.S.I., resigned.

4th King's Own. Lieut.-Gen. Warre, Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, inspected the 2nd Batn. at Bombay on its arrival lately from Natal. The Times of India says:—"The regiment had just landed from the Malabar, and appeared before the Commander-in-Chief in their weather-beaten and war-worn garments, which they have worn for fourteen months. The appearance of the regiment was unusual to our unaccustomed eyes. Their coats, once red, were black, their helmets tattered from wear, their accoutrements not pipe-clayed; but their bronzed and weather-beaten faces showed what hardships they had undergone in the recent campaign." The battalion seems to have met with a hearty reception at Poona. A local paper says that long before the arrival of the train which brought them from Bombay, there was a dense crowd of natives assembled in the station-yard and on the adjoining roads, "in fact, the collection of heads, a regular sea, was so great as would have delighted the very heart of a phrenologist!" "When the shrill whistling of the train was heard in the distance, there was a rush to see the heroes from Natal. A few moments more, and the snorting engine came gliding in with its freight of 'red-coats.' The men stepped out on the platform, and formed up in a short time, many of them, it was observed, being encumbered with luggage. The men were soon drawn up in the yard, the band and pipes of the 78th Highlanders, and the band of the 18th Native Infantry, taking their positions in the meantime. All being ready, the word was given to march, and the band of the 78th striking up a lively tune, which, however, could hardly be heard, on account of the terrible shouting of an excited and joyous crowd, the gallant King's Own sped away, and were soon out of sight to the multitude. It was some time before the latter dispersed."

13th Light Infantry. Brevet Major Cary, adjt. 2nd Somerset Militia, obtains the majority vacant by the retirement of Major Conington. Lieut.-Col. Brown, 2nd Batn., is en route to England from India, having applied to retire from the Service.

18th Royal Irish. Capt. Pearson, 2nd Batn., a candidate for the Pay Department, lately attached to the 7th Hussars, will shortly proceed to the War Office for a further term of probation.

19th Regiment. A correspondent writes from Bermuda, on Jan. 20:—"Orders have just been received for the regiment to move back again from Prospect to St. George's on the departure of the 46th for Gibraltar early next month. As the regiment will probably leave the island altogether in the autumn, on completion of its three years' stay, this new move is very hard on all ranks, especially as the 99th might just as well land at St. George's as here, and thereby save the 19th a move. Col. Vigors has resumed command of the battalion, and Major Hereford has gone on leave. The battalion was inspected on Dec. 22 by H. E. Sir Robert Laffan, K.C.M.G., and fully sustained its old reputation. The annual athletic sports came off on Dec. 18, and were well attended, the events well contested, and the behaviour of the men excellent. Last Saturday there was a football match (Association rules) v. the officers R.E., in which, however, some of the old R.E. cup team players—Von Donop, Rawson, Wood, &c.—got together, and proved too many for the 19th, the R.E. winning by three goals to one, after a most exciting game. The following officers played for the regiment:—Major Handley, Lieuts. Eden, Phayre, Hadow, Chauncey, Davies, Searle, Kennedy, and Fearon. The health of the battalion is most satisfactory, and the only death in the year was by drowning." Major Traill, late of the 1st Batn., has taken up his duties as resident magistrate of King's County, on appointment.

32nd Light Infantry. Major Stabb' who has been acting as president of the "Claims Board," has been ordered home from Natal to rejoin his regiment.

ROYAL MARINES.

In alluding to the volunteering of Marine officers for service in the Indian Staff Corps, the Hampshire Telegraph says:—"If any proof were needed that the officers of the Royal Marines were not altogether satisfied with their condition, and were ready to accept other employment, it would be found in the eagerness with which eligible subalterns have accepted the offer of the Indian Government to join the Staff Corps. The numbers who have applied are greater than those accepted, for many were not quite of the seniority and service required, but even the names of those who have been submitted will, if all accepted, cause a very considerable thinning-out of the Lieutenants' Lists of 1876 and 1877. From the Portsmouth Division there volunteered Lieuts. William Taylor, Charles Herbert Powell, embarked in the Hercules; Robert Baillie, embarked in the Warrior; Archibald Cochran, and Douglas Kysh. From Chatham—Lieuts. Cyril Williamson and Everard Goldsmid, embarked in the Indus; Harry Powell, embarked in the Duncan; H. Abud, embarked in the Valiant; W. Quentin, embarked in the Asia; C. Edge, J. Plumbe, and J. Daniell. From Plymouth—Lieuts. Grey Skipwith, Clarence Hays, Ernest Paul, and Francis Atkinson, embarked in the Duncan, Arthur Hatton, embarked in the Northumberland, William Langford, and George Stevens. Taking into consideration that only those of certain service can avail themselves of the offer of the Indian Office, and that volunteering has only been open to those on the home station, the rush has been very considerable. Even an officer of the seniority of Oct., 1873, who has given more than six years' service to the Marines, is anxious to transfer his services. Of the 28 officers of 1877, 12 have come forward as candidates, as also have exactly half the officers of 1877. There is no reason to suppose that the Light Infantry officers can have been influenced by the uncertainty existing as to what the Marine Committee might recommend, for it is generally felt that even if the Artillery branch should be in any way the losers by amalgamation, the Light Infantry will have nothing to fear, but will probably reap some benefit. So it is only too plain that the Indian Staff Corps is more popular than the Marines."

Good-conduct medals have been awarded 1st Serjt.-Instructor of Infantry Samuel Rust, Corpl. Alfred Cliff, and Ptes. James Keylock and Pinder Watts.

51st Light Infantry. A telegram to the Times, dated Jellalabad, March 23, states that "2nd Lieut. Thurlow, of the 51st Light Infantry, has been shot dead by a band of marauders, supposed to be Marchti Kheyls. Lieut. Read, who was with him, escaped. Both officers were out riding at the time near Jagdalak Kotal. A party, under the command of Major Ramsay, of the 25th King's Own Borderers, went out immediately and recovered the body of Lieut. Thurlow. The hills on both sides of Jagdallak are to be swept by a body of our troops. The 31st Madras N.I., the 1st Ghoorkas, and the Hazara mountain battery are on their way to Gundamuck to take part in the operations." The deceased was appointed 2nd lieut. May 11, 1878.

80th Regiment. We learn from a Cape paper of Feb. 27 that the proceedings with reference to Lieut. Harward, of the 80th, in connection with the Intombi disaster, were on Feb. 26 brought up to the delivery of the defence. "The accused was assisted in his defence by Mr. Advocate Turnbull, barrister-at-law, and Mr. Advocate Bale. In reading his defence, Lieut. Harward addressed the Court with calmness, good taste, though, we need not add, at the same time, with much feeling. He carefully analysed the evidence, and noted many points in which it was defective. Pending the decision of the Court, we refrain from publishing the evidence, but will put our readers au courant with any points of interest which we may be in a position to publish. The President of the Court was Colonel Alexander, K.D.G., &c., &c.; the Prosecutor, Capt. Howard, of the 80th, and the officiating Judge-Advocate, Adjutant Fox, R.A." The following complimentary address was presented to the regiment by the inhabitants of Newcastle, whilst it was passing through the town, en route for England:—"To the Officer Commanding the 80th Regiment.—Newcastle, Natal, Jan. 4, 1880.—Sir,—We, the undersigned inhabitants of Newcastle, take this opportunity of expressing our regret at having to bid adieu to the gallant regiment under your command. For upwards of two years considerable portions of the 80th were stationed here, and we have lately watched its movements in the Zulu campaign and in the Transvaal with pride and interest, finding that always and everywhere the 80th has behaved with bravery, steadiness, and discipline. And now, finding that the conduct of some portions of her Majesty's troops is being called into question, we wish to contribute our testimony to the excellent conduct of your regiment, as far as our acquaintance with it has gone. During the whole time of its stay here, the 80th won the respect and good-will of all alike, by the invariable good conduct of the men, the soldier-like qualities of the officers and non-commissioned officers, and the admirable discipline which was sustained through all ranks. We do not think a better-behaved regiment ever came to Natal, and we wish your stay with us could have been longer. But you deserve your long-delayed return to the old country, and we heartily wish you and those under you a safe and pleasant journey home, and every prosperity in the future.—We are, Sir, yours faithfully, T. R. Haddon, W. F. Cooke, D. Moodie, E. Button, and 46 others."

89th Regiment. Lieut. Gordon, aide-de-camp to the Duke of Buckingham at Madras, is slowly recovering from a bad sunstroke, which he sustained lately while shooting on the Travancore Hills.

103rd Fusiliers. Major Godwin has been ordered to vacate his colonial appointment as Deputy.-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. of the Volunteer Force in South Australia, and rejoin his regiment, on promotion. Lieuts. Gray and Pentland have been awarded the medal of the Royal Humane Society for their recent gallantry in saving the life of a man in the River Lee.

Commissariat and Transport Staff. The Irish Times says:—"Comy.-Gen. Sir E. Strickland, K.C.B., has obtained an extension of his leave of absence to April 15, and the duties of commissary-general in Ireland will continue to be carried on by Comy.-Gen. J. Scott Robertson, C.B., whose retirement will not take place until May 1. We are glad to learn that Sir Edward Strickland has quite recovered from his recent illness, brought on by overwork whilst in commissariat charge of the Zulu expedition. Sir Edward Strickland has been in Italy for some time past, having proceeded there by the advice of his medical attendants."

Medical Department. Brig.-Surg. A. P. M. Corbett, M.D., died at the Garrison Hospital, Haslar, on the 25th ult., aged 49 years. Dr. Corbett, who entered the Army, Oct. 27, 1854, served with the 68th Regt. in the Crimea from March 18, 1855, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal with clasp and Turkish medal).

The Auxiliary Forces.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

The under-mentioned officers joined the School of Instruction for Auxiliary Cavalry at Aldershot on the 1st inst., viz.:—Lieuts. Oldham, North Devon; Harter, Bucks; and Grove, Wilts; and 2nd Lieuts. Beresford, Lanarkshire; Schofield and Platt, Duke of Lancaster's; Norris, Oxfordshire; Broadwood, East Lothian; Evans, Montgomery; Tritton, Warwickshire; Gladstone, Royal Wilts; and Chapman, Dorset. Capt. Tritton, Middlesex, will join on the 15th.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

20th Middlesex Rifles. For the third successive year the regiment has, under Lieut.-Col. Gore Browne, proceeded to Aldershot for six days' military duty. Col. Gore Browne, since taking command, has persistently refused to join the metropolitan commanding officers in proposing or assisting at the Volunteer Review, believing that the weak point of Volunteers will be materially rectified in adopting the course he has pursued with success in his own battalion. On Monday H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught inspected the battalion on the Queen's Parade, when it underwent a long ordeal, the bayonet exercise being a noteworthy feature. At the termination of the movements his Royal Highness addressed the regiment as follows:—"Col. Gore Browne, officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 20th Middlesex Rifles—It has afforded me much pleasure to see you here to day, and it will be my duty to make a most favourable report of what I have seen. The marching-past was very good, particularly in quarter-column, the ranks being well locked up. All the movements were creditably performed, considering this early period of the drill season. If I must direct special attention to any one thing in particular, it is to skirmishing. Skirmishing cannot be acquired in a day; in fact, it can only be done after very considerable practice. The section is the most important unit of the skirmishing line in modern drill, and it is absolutely necessary that section commanders should have their sections well under control, as it is impossible that captains commanding companies can control the action of the whole skirmishing line, except through the section commanders. I must say that I think it reflects great credit upon you to come here for five or six days' duty to rough it as soldiers, as you have done this Easter, instead of proceeding to Brighton for holiday-making. It will be a source of satisfaction to yourselves when you return to your numerous civil avocations in London, to remember that your time has not been uselessly employed, as you have all acquired knowledge that will be useful to you as soldiers. I repeat that I shall have much pleasure in making a favourable report to the General commanding." During their stay in camp the officers were made honorary members of the messes of the Royal Artillery, detachment of Brigade of Guards, and 82nd Regt.

The Indian Army.

1st Bengal Cavalry. The following appointments have been made:—Lieut. W. H. Cazalet, officiating squadron-officer, to officiate as squadron-commander, vice Lieut. R. F. Forbes, Major Cock, and many brave men of the 43rd and 44th N.I. lost their lives. In submitting Brigdr.-Gen. Nation's despatches to the Government of India, the commander-in-chief, through the adjutant-general, calls attention to the gallantry and devotion displayed both by officers and men in capturing Konoma, an operation which is fittingly described as one well worthy of a prominent place in the long list of gallant deeds performed by the Native Army of India. This praise is endorsed by a special resolution of the Governor-General in Council. It is mentioned that Capt. Ridgeway has been recommended for the Victoria Cross. Capt. R. K. Ridgeway, wing-officer and adjutant, has been granted leave to England for one year, on medical certificate.

There now only remain four regiments of the Punjab Frontier Force, the 4th Punjab Cavalry, the 4th Sikh Infantry, the 3rd Punjab Infantry, and the 6th Punjab Infantry, which have not yet been employed in the Afghan campaigns. The last-named regiment is, we hear, expecting orders to proceed on service shortly.

1st Punjab Infantry. The Times' correspondent telegraphs from Candahar, on Monday, March 27:—"Capt. H. F. Showers, of the 1st Punjab Infantry, commanding the Belooch Guides, has been killed by Kakars while travelling between Chappar and Quetta."

INDIA.

The special correspondent of the Standard telegraphs from Lahore, under date March 29:—"A week ago I sent you a list of the regiments included in the force now marching on Ghuzni under Gen. Donald Stewart; and it may be interesting to enumerate the regiments that remain disposable in Southern Afghanistan, between Candahar and Sukhur. There are no English cavalry regiments, but three Native regiments have passed through the Bolan, and will all have arrived at Candahar in the course of a few days. They are the 1st Scinde Horse and the 2nd and 3rd Light Cavalry, and when joined to the 1st Punjab Cavalry, already at Candahar, will make up an effective brigade of 1,500 sabres. Of Horse Artillery there will be the D Baty., which comes from Mhow. The 2nd and 5th Companies of Bombay Sappers are attached to this force, while the 4th and 10th proceed northwards with Gen. Stewart. The Royal Artillery consists of two batteries, 5-11 and F 2, in addition to the 2nd Mountain Native Artillery, thus making up an artillery force in all of 22 guns. There is at present only one regiment of European Infantry, the 2nd Batn. of the 15th, but others have been placed in positions whence they can advance without delay. There nine Native regiments, however, the 1st, 3rd, 9th, 19th, 23rd, 24th, and 27th of the Bombay Army, and the 2nd Belooches and 30th, or Jacob's Rifles, thus giving an infantry force of at the lowest computation 7,500 bayonets. In addition to this division, which is of an effective strength of almost 10,000 men, there are other troops available at Kurrachee, Hyderabad (Scinde), and Jacobabad, while at the first-mentioned place a wing of a second English regiment (the 2nd of the 11th) is in readiness to be sent forward at a day's notice. It will thus be seen that the advance of Gen. Donald Stewart on Ghuzni, far from denuding Candahar and Pisheen of troops, leaves us as strong there as is requisite. There is a sufficient force to garrison the city and surrounding districts, and also to supply a flying column, should movements among the chiefs in Zemindewar render such a step necessary."

The Horse Guards having called the attention of the Indian authorities to the irregularity of permitting regimental officers to act as Press correspondents, the Government, with the concurrence of the Commander-in-Chief, has extended to these officers the prohibition against writing for newspapers, which formerly applied only to Staff officers. The new order will not come into force for six weeks yet, so as to give papers time to make fresh arrangements. This order will cause much inconvenience, both to the Press and to the public. It is generally deemed absurd and unnecessary. The only argument in its favour—namely, that officers' military duties leave them no time for writing, although, perhaps, true as regards the Staff, will not bear examination in the case of regimental officers.

A telegram, dated Calcutta, March 29, states that "Intelligence received here from Assam states that on the troops occupying Konoma and the adjoining villages, the Khels of Konoma tendered their submission to the British."

The following are the chief points in the new arrangement of the Medical Department, which comes into force on April 1. There are to be seven chief medical appointments—namely, one surgeon-general with the Supreme Government, at a salary of 2,700 rupees monthly; one surgeon-general for each presidency of Madras and Bombay, with a salary of 2,500 rupees monthly; one deputy-surgeon-general, with the local rank of surgeon-general for each of the provinces of Bengal, the North-West Provinces, and the Punjab; and one deputy-surgeon-general without local rank for the Central Provinces.

The Official Gazette announces the formal constitution of an Intelligence Department at the Army head-quarters. It will form a branch of the Quartermaster-General's Office, and will be presided over by Lieut.-Col. Sanford, R.E.

Col. Sir R. J. Meade, K.C.B., Bengal S.C., shortly takes privilege leave, when Mr. Jones, Commissioner of Berar, will act as Resident of Hyderabad.

Lieut.-Col. Sir R. Sandeman, K.C.S.I., Bengal S.C., is making arrangements with the Marri tribe for the protection of the railway and telegraph lines to Candahar.

The Secretary of State has sanctioned an allowance of 3,500 rs., in continuance of tentage to Generals Sir S. Browne, Biddulph, and Roberts while commanding divisions in the field.

The Pioneer correspondence gives the following officers as appointed to the new Mounted Infantry:—Commandant, 1st Brigade, Major Baker, 67th Foot; 92nd, Lieut. Dick Cunyngham; 23rd Pioneers, Captain Eyre; 28th Punjaub Infantry, Lieut. Lane. Commandant, 2nd Brigade, not yet appointed; 72nd, Capt. Lendrum; 3rd Sikhs, Capt. Kirkwood; 5th Punjaub Infantry, Lieut. Welchman; 5th Goorkhas, Lieut. Yielding. Commandant, 3rd Brigade, Major Morgan; 9th Foot, Lieut. Lombe; 2nd Goorkhas, Lieut. Travers; 4th Goorkhas, Major Mannering; 24th Punjaub Infantry, Lieut. Lamb. In 45th Sikhs, belonging to 2nd Division, Lieut. Retallick gets an appointmen in the Guides Infantry, at present attached to no brigade.

TIC-SANO.

IT is a FACT, positively and earnestly asserted, that medical men, after trying every remedy in vain, have at once relieved the agonising pains of the following disorders by the use of a VEGETABLE MEDICINE which has been brought to their notice, and testimonials have been received which prove this statement is not a false one, but can be easily verified. This medicine is and will effect a cure in a very short time. In chronic cases of many years' standing, it has, when taken regularly, effected a complete cure, even in persons of advanced age, when the case had been pronounced hopeless.

"Although I have, as a rule, a very great objection to all secret nostrums, still, for once, I must award due praise to a medicine which comes under that category. I find your Tic-Sano to be a very valuable remedy in neuralgia and rheumatic pains. I also find it most successful in many painful menstrual disorders, especially in dysmenorrhœa."

"I have now given your Tic-Sano a fair trial, and am satisfied that it is a most valuable remedy in all cases of a neuralgic nature, and one that I should not like to be without, as these complaints are very prevalent in this neighbourhood.

AN INQUIRER.—We understand that no special provision is made for such officers, but we should recommend you to apply. There would be no harm done by your adopting this course.

J. G.—There are difficulties in the way of an officer serving in India, and we know of no case in which they have been surmounted. The Government of India does not offer encouragement to officers.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1880.

THAT "comparisons are odious" is well known, and a recent speech of the First Lord of the Admiralty, based on a comparative return of the state of the Navy in 1874 and 1879, has given rise to quite a wordy war. The return from which Mr. Smith took his text, when making a sweeping condemnation of the inefficiency of the Navy under the Liberal Government, has been characterised as misleading, and the imputation which it has been the endeavour of some to throw upon Mr. Smith is that his figures have been cooked, and the return has been framed for political purposes. The return, however, has not been hastily prepared for the present struggle between parties, but was presented to Parliament some time ago. How very sore the Liberal side feels at this charge of neglect may be judged by the energy shown in trying to shift the blame, and convince the public that there is a want of truthfulness about the First Lord's remarks. Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Goschen, Mr. Childers, and Mr. Shaw-Lefevre have all attacked Mr. Smith, in defence of the former Admiralty administration; but we believe that there is enough truth in the First Lord's figures to enable Mr. Smith to make good his words, and he is not only willing, but anxious, that an inquiry should be ordered by the new Parliament. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre complains of returns which have been made to Parliament, and that a return which he asked for was refused. Mr. Smith replies that the return was refused because, as he was told, it would have been misleading, if given in the form in which he asked for it. Mr. Lefevre makes a very grave charge against Admiralty officials, when he says:—"I could point out a number of vessels most unfairly put into the list of those alleged to be unfit for action in 1874, and as many most questionably placed in the list at the present time as fit for action, and which, if judged of by the same test as that applied to 1874, should be excluded." This accusation is met by the First Lord by a direct denial. The Service knows that the "rotten row" at each of our home ports in the time of Mr. Childers was a disgrace to the Naval administration, and that ships when needing repair after long commissions were, in numerous instances, simply laid up and left untouched, the money for repairs and new boilers being unprovided in the effort to keep down the Navy Estimates. When Mr. Hunt came into office, he felt it his duty to tell the House of Commons of the condition of the Fleet; but so loth were people to believe that there had been such maladministration, that his speech on the subject was scarcely credited, and he was looked upon by many as an alarmist. Time, however, proved how right Mr. Hunt was, and his statements were borne out, when the survey of the worn-out vessels figuring in the Navy List as ironclads was carried out. Some were forthwith removed to the list of inefficient ships fit for no further sea-service, and thus the country saw its Armoured Fleet thinned down by the removal of those "paper ships" which were used to swell the total of the vessels of the Royal Navy, but the retention of which on the list of effective men-of-war was most misleading, and encouraged the country to rest in a sense of false security. If the Navy was as efficient as the members of the late Gladstone Government would have the country believe, how was it that such vast sums had to be expended by Mr. Hunt, on taking office, in repairs to the ships' hulls, their machinery, and their boilers? There are such things as returns giving the money spent in repairs on each ship which was laid up when the Liberal Admiralty left office, and these will afford conclusive proof that Mr. Smith is within the mark in his comparative statement of the Navy then and now. In concluding a letter answering some of the counter-arguments advanced by the members of the Gladstone Ministry, which we have named, Mr. Smith says, "Mr. Childers and Mr. Shaw-Lefevre claim that they were right, in devoting themselves to building ships which could not have been completed until long after a war had ended, if a war had suddenly broken out. We think differently. We have replaced the worn-out boilers in good ships left to us by our predecessors, and have so made them ready for service; and we have also added largely to the tonnage of new ships. I repeat there were in 1874 only 102,000 tons of ironclads in an efficient condition of ships, boilers, and engines. There are now 270,000 tons of ironclads in that condition. Our statements are disputed. I am prepared to ask on the assembling of Parliament for a joint Committee of the two Houses, to examine into the state of the Navy in 1874, as compared with 1880, and I trust I shall be supported by those who have questioned my allegations." This, on the face of it, is the language of one fully confident of being able to bring proof of all he has said as to the inefficiency of the Navy in 1874.

We hear that Sir G. Wolseley is not expected at the Horse Guards till the summer.

The Army cannot fail to feel disappointment at the result of the general election. Already two Service Members—Lieutenant-Colonel H. Wellesley, Grenadier Guards, and Captain Milne Home, Royal Horse Guards—have lost their seats; whilst three new candidates have proved unsuccessful, viz., Major Burnaby, Royal Horse Guards, at Birmingham; Major Duncan, R.A., in Finsbury; and Captain Gill, R.E., at Nottingham. Lieutenant Lord Baring, Grenadier Guards, takes his seat in the new Parliament as Liberal Member for Manchester.

Captain P. E. Pope, 4th Dragoon Guards, joins the staff of Major-General J. B. Spurgin, C.B., C.S.I., at Aldershot, temporarily as Aide-de-Camp, but will be relieved ultimately by Captain J. H. Spurgin, 21st Fusiliers.

The system of seconding would seem to be very unfairly carried out. Let us take an instance or two, to show the injustice which is suffered by some corps. In the 32nd Regiment, a couple of officers have received appointments under the Colonial authorities at the Cape—viz., Captain C. E. Le M. Cherry and Lieutenant W. F. D. Cochrane. Both these officers are seconded. In the 9th Regiment, Captain A. G. Wavell, who long since joined the Staff of the Cape Volunteers as a local inspector, has not been seconded; and another case is that of Captain R. G. Southey, 10th Regiment, who has been, since October last, lieutenant-colonel commanding the 2nd Yeomanry Corps at the Cape. Promotion has not been so rapid, either in the 9th or 10th, to justify the authorities in denying to the subalterns of those regiments privileges which the more favoured Light Infantry regiment enjoys.

A despatch has been addressed to Sir Garnet Wolseley by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, complimenting Major Dartnell and the Natal Mounted Police on "their efficiency and gallant conduct during the Zulu war."

The venerable Chaplain-General, Dr. Gleig, who is on a visit to the Duke of Wellington at Strathfieldsaye, though in his 84th year, enjoys excellent health. His severe illness, some time ago, caused the loss of one eye, but his sight is good, his hearing is as quick, and his carriage as erect as ever, and he takes out-of-door exercise daily—a splendid type of the Church militant, "pius miles, fortis sacerdos."

There is nothing new from India to add to the intelligence which was given in the papers early this week, but we may expect to hear important and interesting information on Monday.

The bulk of English voters do not care for foreign politics or Imperial policy,—that is, they do not concern themselves with the great affairs on which the prosperity of the Empire may greatly depend, and they are now emancipated from the control of the intelligent persons who understood such questions. Therefore the appeals of the Conservative candidates to the success of the Government in preventing war in Europe, and in resisting Russia in the East, were very much lost on masses of the constituencies, who would sooner have had promises of remedial measures against hard times and poverty and bad trade. The evil of fluctuations of policy in dealing with the Services is fearful. We are now menaced with a return to power of the men who have given us a short-service Army, the linked battalions, and the miserable imitations of foreign systems which have rendered our military organisation a mere corpus vile, for professional and unprofessional quacks to operate upon. What will become of the Airey Report now?

It is now over three months since a majority fell vacant in the 90th Regiment, by the promotion of Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Rogers, V.C., to the command of that corps. The senior captain was then, as now, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel R. H. Hackett. Seeing to what a serious extent this officer has suffered as a result of the part he played in the Zulu war, it was naturally supposed that the War Office would have done all in its power to make amends to him. It will scarcely be credited, but it is nevertheless true, that the unfortunate officer is denied promotion because there is some difficulty as to pension to be overcome, and all this time the 90th is allowed only one major. For over a year it was left without a lieutenant-colonel, and from all appearances it may have to wait for an indefinite period before the majority is filled. A regiment which has lately distinguished itself as the 90th has done in action, deserves better treatment, and it is not to be wondered at that the officers are beginning to complain of the unfairness with which they are treated. Their complaint is more than justified.

The following conversation took place with a German officer on the Mall, after the Levée on the 10th ultimo. The questions were put by the German:—"Who are those officers with cocked hats and silver lace?" "They are not officers; they are deputy-lieutenants."—"What are deputy-lieutenants?" "Civilians, who are county magnates."—"Then why dress them in scarlet uniform, when they are so unmilitary in appearance, don't you think it is wrong?" "Yes I do."—"Who are these officers approaching us?" "They are officers of the Regular Army."—"Then why do they hurry along so, and appear ashamed of themselves, as if they wished to get out of sight as quick as possible?" No answer.—"Why did those two soldiers pass that officer without saluting him?" "They probably did not see him." "Yes they did, but he did not happen to look at them, so they passed on without saluting."—"Look at that sentinel! He walks up and down not looking at anything; he did not salute that officer in proper time." No answer.—"Look again! These two officers were almost past when he saluted, and then how carelessly he did it." "I must own it is so."—"With us, a sentinel is obliged to keep his eyes open, and if he saluted in the careless way yours do, mein Gott, he would catch it! We make no excuse for sentinels or soldiers walking not seeing officers; they must see them! No wonder your discipline is going down!" We are glad our German friend did not see the little flirtations in which sentries on duty sometimes indulge not far from the Horse Guards and at barrack gates. He mistook one of the surgeons-major at the Levée for a General!

We have nothing to say against the appointment of Colonel H. Blundell to one of the few posts which are within the reach of cavalry colonels, as far as the merits of the officer go. He is a Staff College man, and bears a very good service reputation; but we learn that officers with far higher service claims, and with good records of war service, were passed over in favour of Colonel Blundell.

Colonel Lyttelton Annesley has returned to the Horse Guards, after his leave of absence in the Mediterranean and Algiers.

Is there any hope of escape from the cruel wrong which threatens those Purchase Captains who will not have attained their brevet majorities by October 1 next? Their right to this step is unquestionable; it is, in fact, a vested interest incidental to their captains' commissions, and part of the consideration contemplated in their purchase. There can be no reason, logical or equitable, for conceding the right to any who may achieve it by a date arbitrarily fixed, while withholding it from those coming after who may claim the consideration on identical grounds. It is to be hoped that this point will be reconsidered, and a serious cause for dissatisfaction removed. A direct appeal to a long-suffering spirit of loyalty, and to a magnanimity rarely reciprocated, succeeded in a former instance in disarming remonstrance; but silent acquiescence in so grave a breach of good-faith can scarcely be claimed from a body of officers to whom the promise was made—and how kept?—that after the passing of Lord Cardwell's Act they should not be placed in a worse position than they were in before it, and whose interests, moreover, have not in recent changes been over-tenderly dealt with. In conjunction with the foregoing, it should be noted that these officers have already endured the grievous hardship of supersession by their juniors of the Scientific Corps.

Major R. Traill, who has just retired from the 19th Regiment, was appointed Resident Magistrate for King's County, Ireland, on the 20th ult.

The lists of Umpire Staff at the Volunteer Review at Brighton on Monday last, as published by the daily papers, are very inaccurate, owing, no doubt, to changes which it was found necessary to make at the last moment in the official programme. The following officers are those who did duty with the Force:—Colonels H. A. Smyth, R.A., G. F. C. Bray, A.A.G., Southern District, the Hon. C. J. Addington, 43rd Brigade Depôt, and H. Wilkie, 46th Brigade Depôt, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel J. D. Brockman, 86th Regiment, Major S. W. Rawlins, 69th Regiment, and Brevet Major H. M. E. Brunker, D.A.A.G., Southern District. The embarking and disembarking of troops at Brighton was entrusted to Brevet Major A. B. Tulloch, D.A.A. and Q.M.G., Southern District, and it is satisfactory to know that this officer speaks in terms of the highest praise of the behaviour of the Volunteers at the station, and the alacrity with which they obeyed orders, not a single case of confusion or insubordination having come under his notice.

Captain A. A. Saunders, R.A., has been appointed an instructor at the School of Gunnery, Shoeburyness, vice Major F. G. Baylay, R.A., whose period of Staff service has expired.

Captain J. S. Rothwell, R.A., has been selected to succeed Brevet Major F. C. H. Clarke, R.A., as Deputy-Assistant-Quartermaster-General on the Staff of the Intelligence Branch of the Quartermaster-General's Department. Captain Rothwell passed the final examination at the Staff College in December last.

The recently issued Army Estimates give the sum of £6,142 as being absorbed by the pay, &c., of the riding establishment of the Royal Regiment of Artillery at Woolwich. To this may be added the cost of forage for 112 horses, besides wear-and-tear; so that the total expense of this establishment, whose duties are principally confined to tuition at the Royal Military Academy, cannot fall short of £10,000 a year.

Atalanta, Capt. F. Stirling. Some anxiety is, says the Hampshire Telegraph, being felt at the continued absence of news respecting the Atalanta, training-ship for ordinary seamen, Capt. Stirling, and a correspondent suggests the desirability of sending the Hecla in search of her. Our correspondent states that according to the altered arrangements the ship was expected home by the end of February, instead of early in April. Several days since Admiral Ryder, the Commander-in-Chief, finding that some anxiety prevailed respecting the non-arrival of the vessel, telegraphed to the Admiralty for information respecting her, and the reply, which we gave at the time, was to the effect that there was no cause for anxiety, as the vessel had probably put into the Azores, with which there is no telegraphic communication.

He attained the rank of mate, March 15, 1849, and served in the Excellent from Nov. following until appointed Dec. 1850 to the Amphitrite. On July 2, 1851, he was promoted to lieut., and was appointed additional in the Portland, flagship of his father, in the Pacific, but on Sept. 26 following removed into the Thesis, on the same station, until paid off in 1854. On March 9 of that year was appointed to the Driver, in the Baltic, where he removed into the Cæsar, and on Feb. 8, 1855, was transferred to the Hawke, and was paid off at the close of the Russian War. He was flag-lieut. to Sir Henry D. Chads, K.C.B., at Queenstown, from April 1, 1856, until promoted to commander, Dec. 11, 1858; commanded the Snake, on the East Indies station, from 1861 until paid off in 1863; and the Argus, on the East Indies station, from Nov., 1863, until posted, Nov. 21, 1864. While in command of the latter ship, he was highly spoken off by Sir A. L. Kuyser, in his official despatches, for the zeal and activity he displayed during the operations in the Straits of Simono Seki, Japan, in Sept. 1864. He was also instrumental by his judicious management, when in command of the Argus, in towing off the Perseus, and apparently without damage, on the 7th of that month, she having on the day before, whilst covering the landing on the morning of that day, been driven on shore by a strong eddy of the current, and, resisting all efforts to get her off, she remained fast until midnight of the 7th. In Jan. 1871 he commissioned the Basilisk at Sheerness, and left England in the following month. The Basilisk discovered several new islands heretofore supposed to be part of New Guinea, and Capt. Moresby, as usual in such cases, hoisted the National flag. He also discovered several fine harbours. On July 1, 1874, she returned to Singapore, having successfully completed a survey which will considerably alter the figuration of the New Guinea coast as now given on the charts, for not only have supposed straits been found to the bays, but supposed bays have been discovered to the straits; while that which was thought to be main land, turns out to be an island. The Basilisk returned to England and was paid off at the close of 1874. He afterwards commanded the Endymion, 22, Coastguard ship in the river Humber, from Sept. 1876, until March, 1878.

The New Boot Polish.—An entirely new idea for polishing boots has just been introduced which does away with the laborious method hitherto in use. Propert's Ebony Blacking polishes instantly without brushing, is of an oily nature, and, being waterproof, retains its lustre in all weathers. One application upon ladies', gentlemen's, or children's boots lasts a week.—Of Bootmakers, price 1s.—Wholesale of J. Propert, Battersea Park Road, London.

THE WHITEHEAD TORPEDO.

Since the first introduction of the Whitehead torpedo, the secret chamber has been an object of the greatest curiosity to all who have seen the weapon or witnessed its performances. Many explanations have been attempted, but until quite recently no one has ventured to give a lucid description of that which constitutes the secret, viz., the cause which enables the torpedo to maintain an uniform depth throughout its course, and places at the disposal of the operator the power of adjusting the depth within certain limits, according to circumstances. The general appearance and capabilities of the torpedo are familiar to most Naval and many Military officers; but to a privileged few only has the secret been imparted, and then the recipient has been required to sign a declaration to the effect that, without the special permission of the Authorities, he would, under no circumstances, give any information that might lead to its discovery, and would regard the knowledge so acquired to be used solely for the benefit of the public service. Lieutenant Sleeman, R.N., late a commander in the Imperial Ottoman Navy, in his work, Torpedoes and Torpedo Warfare, gives the latest and apparently authoritative statement of the principle on which the Whitehead torpedo works. According to him, the torpedo is simply steered under water by means of a horizontal rudder, connected by suitable mechanism to a spring, the tension of which is adjusted to correspond to the fluid pressure at the required depth, any variation from which so affects the rudder mechanism that the rudder itself is moved, so as to correct the deviation from the true horizontal course, an automatic balance serving as a sort of regulator. Whether this be the true explanation or not, can, of course, only be known to those who are in possession of the secret; but the dissatisfaction with which the appearance of the book has been greeted in certain quarters would lead one to suppose that, if not the whole truth, it is, at any rate, nothing but the truth. There has been some difference of opinion as to the right of Lieutenant Sleeman to publish a book containing much information acquired while he was under instruction as a gunnery lieutenant, and which it has been usual to regard as confidential. Legally, he is perfectly innocent of any offence in so doing, though, with regard to the moral culpability of the proceeding, different people will, doubtless, take different views. It is but natural that their Lordships should be very angry with Mr. Sleeman, for he has undoubtedly succeeded in meeting a want that has been long expressed by the Service, while placing before the world in general, and the Naval officer in particular, a mass of most useful information, in a form equally agreeable for reading or reference; but it should be remembered that had the Authorities had the wisdom to avoid undue secrecy with respect to their officers, there would have been no demand for an outside work on torpedoes, and the recently published book would probably not have been written. But no; the "secret and confidential" manuals published by authority were sparingly issued, could never be purchased, and the shortsightedness of the policy has been followed by the serious consequence of a publisher being able to offer the inquiring British or foreign officer a book better written, and containing fuller and more recent information, than the confidential Torpedo Manual. We have already favourably noticed the new work, and have nothing further to say of its merits. The facts it contains are for the most part culled from the specifications lodged by the inventor of each torpedo at the Patent Office, and are therefore accurate. A word with regard to Lieutenant Sleeman may possibly prevent a good deal of misconception of the motives which induced him to publish such a work. Mr. Sleeman was retired at his own request, after having completed the theoretical but not the practical portion of the course of instruction for a Gunnery Lieutenant. He had attended the course of torpedo practice, but had not passed the examination, and had received no instruction in the Whitehead Torpedo. His reason for wishing to retire must have been satisfactory to their Lordships, or it is to be presumed that they would have withheld their sanction, as he had not the length of service required by the Regulations to constitute a right to the request. Perhaps he may have considered that his talent could be turned to better account out of the Service than in it. At any rate, he retired, and received no intimation that he was to regard the portion of the course he had passed as confidential, and is therefore at liberty to use the knowledge so gained for any purpose he may choose. He cannot, therefore, be blamed for the production of his work. Besides, most of its contents is public property, obtainable at the Patent Office by those who care to devote time and trouble to searching and hunting-up the documents. We believe that the subject was suggested to him as one that would be of great service to himself, and be most useful to his brother-officers, the majority of whom will heartily welcome this work, and we feel satisfied, will wish every success to the author, who, for the comparatively small sum of four-and-twenty shillings, provides them with what could not be obtained for love nor money from the Admiralty. In conclusion, we may remark that the author acknowledges that he has obtained much useful material from the works of various writers, and the receipt of assistance from one or two gentlemen whose names are mentioned. For the rest, he has simply called upon his experience during the Russo-Turkish war. It appears that he had an opportunity of making a complete examination of a Whitehead torpedo, picked up by the Turks, and to thus have became possessed of the long-kept secret; and if anyone have reason to complain of its publication, surely it is the Turkish, and not the English, Government. If the Admiralty are at all inclined to be generous, it would be a graceful compliment to Mr. Sleeman to substantially reward him for the service he has performed in writing a valuable text-book, which, if it does nothing else, may cause them to consider the pecuniary prospects of Lieutenants R.N. at the present rate of promotion, and render them more anxious, by increased inducements, to keep those officers who are likely to be valuable in, instead of out of the Service.

Reviews.

Cyprus. By Sir Samuel Baker. (Macmillan and Co.)

Two very interesting works on Cyprus, one by Mrs. Scott Stevenson, the other by Sir Samuel Baker, have been recently published. The former relates impressions and facts; the latter takes a wider range. Before entering upon his personal examination of the island, the author draws a brief, but interesting, outline of its geographical position, which caused its early importance, and which causes it to be still regarded as a strategical position, dominating the eastern portion of the Mediterranean, and supplying the link in the chain of fortified posts from England to the shores of Egypt. Cyprus, "which the researches of undoubted authorities point to as an island that possessed a written character peculiarly original, and which was occupied by a people highly civilised, according to the standard of the early world, at so primitive an era, that all records have disappeared, and we are left in the darkness of conjecture," has recently become a point of interest in party warfare at home. Sir S. Baker considers that the "Convention of defensive alliance between Great Britain and Turkey," which was signed on June 4, 1878, contains terms which render it impossible that any good could under it accrue to England. "If," continues the author, "England had purchased Cyprus, I could have understood the plain, straightforward, business-like transaction, which would at once have established confidence both among the inhabitants, who would have become British subjects; and through the outer world, that would have acknowledged the commencement of a great future." It is almost unnecessary to say that the author has written a pleasant and instructive book, which describes the present condition of the island; exhibits its actual resources, together with the numerous disadvantages resulting from a peculiarity of climate and the total neglect of all public works during three centuries; points out that no source of income exists except that of agricultural productions, that metallic wealth is exhausted or undeveloped, that the forests have been destroyed, the harbours clogged with silt, the communications most deficient, and that yet withal the revenue yields an average of about £200,000 annually, which represent £1 per head of the entire population. As to an increase of imports, it cannot be expected, until the general advance of internal prosperity shall enable the population to extend their demand for foreign manufactures. The result of Sir Samuel Baker's political reflections as to the past, present, and future of Cyprus seem to be, that if the island belonged to England or any other Power, it would be a valuable acquisition; that under the Ottoman rule it was a small mine of wealth, and that it still remains in that position to its recent masters; that if we held Cyprus, without purchase, as a conquered country, such as Ceylon or Mauritius, it would occupy the extraordinary position of a colony that could advance and pay its way entirely by its own surplus revenue, without a public loan; that in spite of Turkish maladministration the island has no debt, but that England has acknowledged £96,000 to be the surplus of the island, which thus holds a better financial position than any of our colonies. The problem to be solved is, how much revenue should England, by good management, obtain when Turkey, by gross mismanagement, obtains £96,000 a year? In reply, the author writes thus:—

> "The fact is that, as usual, the English Government has been hoodwinked in their hasty bargain. The island can pay its way, and if free from Turkey would become most prosperous; but we have inherited an estate so heavily mortgaged by our foolish Convention, that the revenue is all absorbed in interest, which leaves nothing for the necessities of development. There is no money for any improvements, and the boasted surplus will just suffice for absolutely necessary payments."

In considering the possibility of a rupture with Turkey, which would bring about a Russo-Turkish combination, the author observes:—

> "In the event of such a rupture, Cyprus would exhibit its importance as a strategical position that would entirely command the coasts of Syria and the approach to Egypt. As I have already stated, the value of the island is conditional upon the permanence of the Turkish alliance. Should Turkey and England remain friends and allies, Cyprus is quite unnecessary as a British military station; but our possession will probably entail the absolute necessity of Turkish good-faith, as the restored arsenal and harbour of Famagousta would complete a position that would dominate the whole of the Turkish shores upon the Mediterranean, and in conjunction with Greece, which would assure the refuge of Corfu to our fleets, the naval power of Great Britain would be absolute to the east of Gibraltar."

Cyprus as I Saw It is a work of interest and importance.

SOME MAGAZINES.

The new number of the Nineteenth Century has attracted, and not unnaturally, some hostile criticism as to the large space it devoted to purely party literature. Mr. Lowe leads the way with a trenchant attack on the present Government, and is well supported by at least three other contributions. General Sir John Adye sends an ably written and thoughtful paper on "Our Native Armies in India." The Earl of Dunraven's contribution, "Days in the Woods," is quite a gem in its way.

Fraser, for April, dips more deeply than usual into politics, publishing more than one article on electioneering matter. The question of Lord Chelmsford's conduct of the war in Zululand is treated by Col. Harness, who went through the war from the commencement to the end. In the course of the article he presses occasionally on Mr. Archibald Forbes, and questions some of his assertions. A Mr. Blackmore's serial, "Mary Anerley," proceeds, its merits become more fully developed. It is worthy of the highest commendation.

Cornhill still spreads its "White Wings," and obliges us to continue listening to the old Laird's platitudes. The article on "Illusions of Memory" is a remarkable one.

According to a Reuter's telegram from Valparaiso, March 2, twenty transports, carrying twelve thousand Chilian troops, sailed from Pisagua on Feb. 24 to attack Arica. Nine thousand men having landed at Ilo without meeting with any resistance from the Allies, who were reported to be concentrated at Moquegna, the Chilian ram Huascar and the corvette Magallanes, on the morning of Feb. 27, attacked Arica, the forts of which and the Peruvian monitor replying vigorously. During the engagement trains conveying troops were observed leaving Arica. The Huascar had seven men killed and nine wounded. The Magallanes received three shots in her hull. The Chilian vessels having withdrawn to their anchorage, the Peruvian monitor Mancocapas sallied out to meet them. The Huascar encountered the monitor, which was circling round discharging cannon at one hundred yards' distance, but she desisted from ramming the Peruvian vessel, as the latter was towing a torpedo vessel. A shell from the Mancocapas destroyed the Huascar's mizenmast and killed her commander, Captain Thompson. The engagement continued for an hour afterwards, when the Chilian vessels again returned to their anchorage.

THE STATE OF THE NAVY.

SIR,—I am a Conservative, but that will not prevent me from trying to do justice to one of the ablest First Lords of the Admiralty we have had during this generation. When Mr. Childers took charge at Whitehall, the whole Navy personnel and materiel was in a disorganised condition. Officers were starving on a pittance which excited the contempt of the ordinary mechanic, and the Active List was crowded with the inefficient and the aged. In his zeal to have an effective and manageable Navy, the retirements were doubtless made too general, and consequently the élite, whose abilities enabled them to command employment elsewhere, eagerly took advantage of an offer so liberal that many could hardly realise their good-fortune. In the simplicity of his heart, an old veteran, whose services extended over near half-a-century, said to the writer,—"Do you really think the country can stand giving me such an enormous retirement?" The burden has not been found unbearable during my old friend's lifetime, for he did not long live to enjoy his well-earned retirement. Relatively, there are good reasons for inferring that, under the régime of the last Liberal Admiralty, the Navy was stronger than it now is, simply because the development of foreign navies has increased in effectiveness in a manner as unprecedented as it was unexpected. Germany, France, Russia, Italy, and Greece are striving successfully to have fleets which shall individually command respect, although not able, singly, to aspire to the command of the seas. In the Pacific, Chili and Peru, notably the former, have shown an aptitude for maritime warfare which must command the respect of every seaman, and the representative ship of our Navy on that coast is not more than a match for a single Chilian ironclad. But I must warn my countrymen not to stick their head in the sand in lieu of looking the danger steadily in the face while we have time to do so. It is, however, when we turn to the lack of cruisers to protect our commerce, that we see how small the advance has been in a necessary class for this important end. Had we gone to war in 1870-1, the risk of the captures or destruction of English grain ships would have been as nothing to what it now is, and it is not too much to add that the Navy has failed in this respect to keep pace with the times. The much-wanted steel corvettes, whose speed, it was alleged, would be twenty knots an hour, do not, even on the measured mile, when ready for sea, exceed fourteen. We need not go far to ascertain the reasons, which were fully detailed in a magazine article, when their keels were laid. It will be an evil day for England if an unexpected war finds her with light ships whose maximum speed is not within two or three knots of the merchant steamers of the enemy, for the majority of the latter are built with the object of converting them into men-of-war, if necessity requires it.—I am, &c., AN ENGLISHMAN.

The United States frigate Constellation has left New York for Dublin, with 3,058 barrels of provisions and a quantity of clothing, for relieving the distress in Ireland. Com. Potter, of the Constellation, has been ordered by the Secretary of the Navy to deliver the cargo to the New York Herald Relief Committee, on arrival at Dublin. The whole of the services connected with loading, lighterage, towage, pilotage, &c., were contributed free. The Philadelphia Relief Fund reaches more than 37,000 dollars.

The officers and men late of the Shah have, like those late of the Active, erected a monument in Victoria Park, Landport, to the memory of their deceased shipmates. The memorial consists of a white marble obelisk. The face and the back bear the following inscriptions:—"Erected by the officers and ship's company of Her Majesty's ship Shah, to the memory of the officers and men who died during the commission in the Pacific and in the Zulu war;" and, "Her Majesty's ship Shah, commissioned at Portsmouth, August 14, 1876; paid off at Portsmouth October 31, 1879;" while on the two sides are recorded the names of the dead as follow:—Mr. Richard Childs, carpenter; Mr. C. H. F. Jauncy, midshipman; Walter Winstead, Henry A. Broughton, and Thomas Andrews, able seamen; Thomas Clark, R.M.A.; Ebenezer J. Clayton, plumber; John Hunter, captain's crew; John Poor, captain forecastle; George Midwinter, O.S.; Henry Bryan, leading stoker; J. W. Phillimore, E.R.A.; John Pritchard, private; James Eades, C.B.M.; Aaron Long, able seaman; Philip Crompton, R.M.A.; Owen Cooper, James Wheadon, and Thomas Barge, able seamen; James E. Symonds, cooper; Richard Oliver, A.B.; Patrick O'Brian, private; James W. Longford, chief mate; Edward Sheppard, A.B.; Jos. Oates, 2nd captain forecastle.

At a dinner in Glasgow for the sons of the clergy, in returning thanks for the Army, Deputy-Inspector-Gen. Anderson thanked the company for the cordial way in which they had received the toast. He had served in what was euphoniously called the non-combatant branch of the Army, and the only thing he wished to impress upon the company was that unless limited service was abolished or modified, he would not give one snuff for the British Army in the future. He was convinced that unless they had a proportion of old, seasoned soldiers in the regiments, they might as well think of flying as think of fighting Continental armies with success. It was well known that one good old soldier was just like a nurse to the young soldiers in a regiment. The Commission that had been appointed might modify the present system, and he did not think they would return to the long service which was formerly exacted, but he believed that five or six years' service under the colours was simply nonsense. This is the opinion of an officer of much experience, and it is the general belief of old officers that enlistment for 10 years at first, and then free discharge, or encouragement to extend the service to 21 years and a pension, is the best system for the British Army. Too young non-commissioned officers carry no respect with them among men of their own standing.

1. Open to regiments of Cavalry, the Royal Engineers (divided for the purposes of the match into five battalions), battalions of Infantry (excepting those on the Indian Establishment), and brigade depôts of Infantry and Cavalry; also to officers on leave of absence from regiments in India. 2. May be shot for by any two (or larger number) of officers and men of the same battalion on any day or days between April 11 and Sept. 19, and on any range. 3. Battalions entering eight or more men to be eligible for the "team" prizes, with an aggregate made up of the eight best scores of any eight men who have entered and shot in the match. Battalions entering less than eight (and not less than two) to be eligible for the individual prizes only; these are also open to men shooting for the team prizes. 4. Subscriptions, £1 for each officer, and 10s. for each man. 5. Number of "team" prizes, two; which, if forty battalions enter for these prizes, will amount to £80 and £40 respectively, to be disposed of by battalions in the purchase of a piece of plate for the mess, or otherwise, as may be deemed proper. 6. The "individual" prizes will be given in two lists; one for the officers, the other for the men, and irrespective of the battalions to which the makers of the winning scores belong. Their number and amount, supposing 120 officers and 480 men to have entered, will be as follows:—Officers, total amount, £75; number, 15; and varying in value from £12 10s. to £3; winners of first prize to receive, in addition, a gold badge. Individual prizes, men's—total amount, £151; number, 62, and varying in value from £6 and a gold badge, to £2. 7. Those distinguishing themselves in these lists will be noted for the trial for entrance into the Army team for the match against the Volunteers for the Donegall Challenge Trophy. 8. Rifles, carbines, and ammunition, Government. 9. Distances, 200, 500, and 600 yards; position, any. 10. Number of shots, seven (with two sighting shots, if desired) at each distance, 11. Targets and scoring, Wimbledon, 1880. 12. The firing, in order that there may be no mistakes in the taking-off of the hits, to be conducted singly,—i.e., one man must complete his firing at a distance before the next commences. 13. Superintendent at firing-point and marker in butt to be officers. The winning scores will be decided by the register tickets kept by the latter. 14. There are various other rules for making the competition a perfectly fair one. 15. Entries to be made to the honorary secretary, Capt. F. M. Salmond, D.A.A.G. for Musketry, Edinburgh, not later than April 11; after which date they will be subject to an additional 25 per cent. as "post" entries. Entries from battalions abroad will be received up to the end of April, and later still if reasons be given why they were not made in proper time. 16. On receipt of the entry, the secretary will furnish the register-tickets, registers, envelopes, &c., which must be used in the scoring. 17. The entrance-money cannot be returned except under the most special circumstances—such, for instance, as embarkation for active service. 18. For further information, apply to the honorary secretary.

THE COLONIAL FORCES.

"K. O. D." writes from Natal:—"Your having been good enough, in your number of January 10th to favourably comment upon a letter of mine, on the subject of soldiers' rations in the field, emboldens me to send you a few lines, with reference to the raising of a local force here of friendly Zulus, officered by Englishmen, which I see you notice as having been already suggested. Since it was mooted by the home papers that, eventually, this and other South African colonies, will have to organise a system of home defence, the above subject has been continually occurring to me, so convinced am I that amongst the native population here there exists splendid raw material for the soldier. Unfortunately, I am as yet unacquainted personally with any of our sepoy regiments, but, judging from natives of East India, whom I have seen here and elsewhere, the Kaffir is his superior in every way as an animal. I am sorry to say it is the colonial 'proper thing' to do to run him down at all times, and if colonists here had their way, we should have another case of the 'bag and baggage' policy; but when properly treated they prove themselves excellent fellows, being most willing and obliging, and when he has had his 'scoff,' if it has only consisted of porridge made of Indian corn, 'Johnnie' is the most light-hearted fellow imaginable, and ready to go through enough hard work to knock up at least three of us. With regard to his pluck, I think there can but one opinion, and if he were taught the proper use of the rifle, of which, luckily for us, our late enemies were utterly ignorant, a brigade composed of Zulu Kaffirs, properly led; would, in my humble opinion, be a hard nut to crack. As to the fear of a mutiny, one of the objections which the white population here would be certain to raise, could not this be obviated by a system of exchanges with our native troops in India, say two-thirds of the South-African troops to be stationed in India, their places here to be filled by Sepoy regiments? I believe there would not be the slightest difficulty in officering these corps from the same sources from which the officers of the Natal Native Contingent in the late war were drawn, and there must be many young men at home on the look-out for something to do, sons of retired officers and so on, who would only be too glad of this chance of employment in a manner suited to their tastes. Some of the appointments might be filled up from the class to which the writer has the honour to belong, namely, the non-commissioned officers of the regiments at present serving here."

The Chandernagors, whose mysterious destination recently excited so much conjecture and suspicion, is stated by the Times to have arrived off New Ireland. The Baron de la Croix, on behalf of the Marquis de Rays, took possession of the territory, as also of the Port of Likiliki and the Laughlan Isles, the natives offering no opposition, but taking flight to the mountains.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

"N. C. O." writes:—"As it is generally admitted that the well-being of an army depends in a very great measure on the efficiency of the non-commissioned-officer class, anything that would have the effect of making them still more efficient and contented in their several spheres would be a gain to the Service, I beg to make a suggestion that would have a material influence in obtaining the desired end. It is a well-known fact that, as a rule, it is not a boon to confer a commission on a non-commissioned officer, because, in most cases, those who by their zeal and ability deserve such a mark of favour are only laying themselves open to a constant struggle in their endeavour to maintain themselves in the style an officer and a gentleman is expected to keep up. The introduction of the new rank of Warrant officer into the regimental system, by giving the Warrant rank to the superior regimental non-commissioned officers, with the privileges and emoluments attached to that rank, would prove not only more beneficial in the end to the recipients than a commission, but would also go far to elevate the standard of the good non-commissioned officers (without making them uncomfortable by being placed in a false position) and attract the right sort of men for carrying on satisfactorily the important and onerous duties which they are constantly called upon to perform, and also add to the efficiency of our regiments. It should be borne in mind that since the introduction of the short-service system, the duties and responsibilities of non-commissioned officers have considerably increased, and it is now more than ever necessary that the very best material that can be obtained should be incorporated into the higher ranks of non-commissioned officers. Years ago, under the old system, a man enlisted for 21 years, was trained for about two years, and then turned out a fairly good soldier. Now, a man enlists for six, in a few cases for 12 years, so that for every man formerly trained and turned into an efficient soldier, there are about three men so trained now, thus throwing an enormously increased amount of work on those to whom the duty of getting our men into shape primarily falls. This of itself would constitute a claim to some further consideration and improvement in the status of the non-commissioned officer, but if the increasing difficulty of getting good men to fill the higher grades of non-commissioned officers be considered for a moment, by any one acquainted with the Army in its present state, the necessity for some change must be apparent, or the class of men relied upon as one of the chief elements in making our Army what it should be will soon be gone, without a provision having been made sufficiently attractive to others to take their place. It is all very well to point to those who have obtained commissions from the ranks, and hold them up as examples to others; but I question, if it were put to them, whether they would not, in the majority of cases, much rather have had a Warrant, with its concurrent advantages, than have been placed in a position altogether foreign to their ideas and habits; for whatever may be said to the contrary, a man who is promoted from the ranks to a commission is always, as it were, on sufferance, and although his brother-officers try to make no difference in their manner towards him, he cannot help feeling that he is not one of themselves, 'not having been born in the purple.' Why not, therefore, give the Warrant rank to those 1st-class non-commissioned officers who, after a probation of six or twelve months, have been found to fulfil their duties to the satisfaction of their commanding officers, and are recommended for this distinction (of course retaining their services in the regiments to which they belong). This would at once have the effect of keeping many good men in the Service who now take their discharge at the expiration of six or twelve years (when their services are really of the most value), as they see no prospect of eventually attaining a position commensurate with their services to the country. Of course, I am aware that a few non-commissioned officers from regiments have been appointed to the Warrant rank, but they have been transferred to the Commissariat Department, which is taking them away from the position where their services are more urgently required, and sending them to a place they know nothing of. Besides the few who have obtained the Warrant from regiments are in a very small minority, in comparison with those appointed from the Commissariat Department. Every one thought that the Royal Warrant of January, 1879, would have given the Warrant rank to the superior regimental non-commissioned officers (in their regiments); but it seems that the real working soldier is always to be left out in the cold, while everything worth having is almost exclusively kept for the comfortable departmental corps."

A horse biscuit is being manufactured in Russia, which is to take the place of oats, in case of difficulties. It is made of crushed oats and flour of grey peas, mixed with hempseed-oil and salt, and about 4 in. in diameter. A day's ration, as put on a wire and packed for transport, weighs four pounds, and is said to be equal to an ordinary ration of ten pounds of oats. It has been found that the horses like the biscuits when soaked in water exceedingly, and if fed exclusively on them, though they lose somewhat in flesh, are still fit for fatiguing work.

The Canadian Government has adopted Sir William Palliser's system of artillery manufacture. It is said to be cheap and simple, and therefore quite within the power of their manufacturers, who have already tested a gun in the presence of the Minister of Militia. The coiled iron barrels, named by gunsmiths "twist barrels," are placed loose into their casings, so that, as Sir William maintains, his guns are in the proper state for doing what engineers call "work." It was to prove this that some of his guns were lately fired doubly loaded. The Marquis of Lorne has visited the engineers' works in Canada, where the Palliser 7 in. breechloading rifled guns are being made. There are now about 2,000 Palliser guns in the British service. These are in constant use, and it is stated that no accident has ever happened with them.

HELIOGRAPHY.

"B." writes :—"With reference to the lecture by Major Wynne recently delivered at the Royal United Service Institution, will you allow me to point out that at p. 1,178, volume xlii., of the 'Comptes Rendus de l'Académie des Sciences,' for the year 1856, there is a full account of a system of heliography invented by M. Lesaurre, an officer in the Algerian Telegraph Service, and experimented on in the same year, by order of the French Minister for War, under the direction of M. Le Verrier, at the Imperial Observatory in Paris? The use of the sun's rays for a day telegraph had been previously suggested in the columns of the Times, in July, 1855, by the late Charles Babbage; so that the invention may be still claimed by England, though only recently brought into use."

ADJUTANTS OF AUXILIARY FORCES.

An "Adjutant of Volunteers" writes :—"Referring to various letters on the subject of the difference of pay and allowances between Adjutants of Militia and Volunteers, may I ask whether the Militia adjutant has the boon of medical attendance found by the Government, and if so, whether his exposure to risks by rail, road, and weather makes this sum not quite sufficient to meet expenses? I do not wish to grumble, and am grateful for small mercies, but really the liberality of the allowance for medical attendance is too small to excite my thanks. As an adjutant of Volunteers, I travel at least 150 days yearly, and besides being exposed at night (always) in all weathers, have to do a goodly quantity of getting a bed anywhere and everywhere. Now, not being as young as formerly, I find this exposure telling terribly both on my health and pocket, and but a small portion of my doctor's bill is met by the allowances for the purpose sanctioned by the War Office, viz., 2d. weekly, a total of 8s. 8d. yearly. My pay is not more than £320 yearly, to cover everything. Had I not private means, I do not think I could afford to be an Adjutant of Volunteers."

The good old Royal yacht Victoria and Albert has found her match in speed in the younger Osborne, the latter yacht having, during their late run together to Cherbourg, more than held her own, in spite of being deeply immersed with all her coals and stores on board, the Victoria and Albert flying light.

Mr. Weil, of 14, St. George's Place, Albert Gate, has now Cigars of the Finest Brands for the coming Season, and his celebrated Belgrave Cigarettes were never better, for delicacy of flavour and aroma. The popularity of these cigarettes is now well established, both at home and in the colonies. Smokers who really understand good tobacco should lose no opportunity of inspecting Mr. Weil's cigarettes.

A Hint to Candidates at the Coming Election.—Many a good speech is spoilt by inability on the part of the speaker to give clear utterance to his words, and there is no greater cause of indistinctness of speech than imperfect teeth. A man who aspires to oratorical honours should preserve his teeth, and how can he do this so effectually as by using Rowland's Odonto, which prevents decay, and at the same time sweetens the breath. Its unprecedented success for the last 50 years shows the favour in which it is held, while the fact of its containing no acid or mineral ingredients, renders it the safest tooth-powder that can be used.

Amusements.

The Easter novelties have not been numerous, and all that need be said about them can be briefly told. At Drury Lane the conspicuous feature of the programme was a grand reproduction of Lecocq's melodious comic opera, "La Fille de Madame Angot," the English version adopted being that by Mr. H. J. Byron, produced at the Philharmonic Theatre in October, 1873. The opera is now illustrated with a splendour of accessories and a regard to the strength and ability of the choral and orchestral departments never exhibited before. The prominent vocalists, Miss Alice Burville as Clairette, Mdlle. Cornélie D'Anka as Mdlle. Lange, and Mr. Wilford Morgan as Ange Pitou, can act as well as sing, and there is some effective dancing introduced in the elaborate scene of the illuminated garden. The two-act drama of "Lady Audley's Secret" precedes the opera, with Miss Louise Moodie as the unscrupulous heroine, Miss Dolores Drummond as Phœbe, and Mr. Gibson as the bibulous gamekeeper, Luke Marks. This adaptation by Mr. Walter Roberts, was first produced at the St. James's Theatre in February, 1863, with Miss Herbert, Miss Ada Dyas, and Mr. Frank Matthews in the above-named characters.

At the Gaiety the pantomime comedy of Le Voyage en Suisse, adapted from the French by Mr. Robert Reece, has proved, as was anticipated, a marked success. The humorous activity and gymnastic dexterity of the Hanlon-Lees and M. Agouste, who represent in the funniest fashion two German students, their two valets, and a French professor, will keep crowded audiences in the merriest mood for the next seven weeks to come. Some of the scenic contrivances are marvels of mechanical ingenuity.

At the Vaudeville has been produced a new three-act comedy, called Cobwebs, written by Mr. Charles Wills, hitherto unknown as a dramatist to the London stage. The piece is singularly weak in story, and is not strong in dialogue. Messrs. David James and Thomas Thorne throw away their talents on the impersonation of a gin-drinking undertaker and a love-smitten engineer, but the actors have no chance of moulding their materials into a substantial form, and the managers have to acknowledge, unfortunately, another failure.

"Naval Cadets," the new comic opera produced at the Globe, proves a very sprightly entertainment, destined, like its predecessor, to enjoy a prolonged run. The composer, Herr Richard Génee, is a German musician of the school of Offenbach, and his strains fall pleasantly on the ear. The present adaptation is from "Cadet de Marine," brought out in Brussels last January by the "Fantaisies-Parisiennes," but other versions of the German piece have been acted under various names both in America and on the Continent. The scene is laid at Lisbon, and the attachment of the Queen of Portugal to the Captain-General of her Fleet supplies the theme of the story, which is, indeed, identical with that of a French vaudeville, called "Le Capitaine Charlotte," produced in Paris as long ago as 1842. The prominent personages are well represented by Miss Violet Cameron, Madame Dolaro, and Mr. Loredan, while Mr. Paulton provokes much laughter by a burlesque lecture on navigation, which he quaintly delivers as the verbose Don Prolixio.

At the Folly, on Wednesday night, was successfully produced Mr. H. J. Byron's new three-act comedy, called "The Upper Crust," the first new piece brought out at this theatre under the present management. Mr. J. L. Toole plays in his most humorous manner Barnaby Doublechick, an ambitious tradesman who is eager to get his daughter introduced to the higher circles of society, and the means he employs for the purpose furnish the audience with cause for uproarious merriment.

"Brought to Justice," at the Surrey, is a substantial drama in four acts, by Messrs. Pettitt and Meritt, which is wholly to the taste of the audience.

At the Duke's, Messrs. Baker and Farron have appeared in a drama they have brought over with them from Australia, entitled "Conrad and Lisette." They amuse the auditory by singing German and Irish songs in characters which have been long since familiar to the London playgoer.

To Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment at St. George's Hall Mr. Corney Grain has added a clever song called "Rotten Row," descriptive of Hyde Park at the height of the season. Dr. Lynn, the expert and entertaining conjuror, has opened his elegant hall in Piccadilly with an attractive performance of legerdemain. The "Moore and Burgess Minstrels" have an entirely new programme, in which Miss Elizabeth Philp's spirit-stirring song of "The Captain's Wife" is a prominent feature. At the Canterbury, an admirable variety entertainment has been given, with the grand ballet from the "Peri of Peru."

Instead of Taking an Ordinary Cod Liver Oil and attempting to disguise its flavour by all sorts of devices and mixtures, they (Allen and Hanburys) have studied anew the processes of manufacture of Cod Liver Oil, for which they have always had a great reputation; and, as a result of this study, they have produced a Cod Liver Oil which is so delicate in flavour as to be free from all the usual nauseous properties of fish oil, and has almost the delicacy of salad oil.—British Medical Journal. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "Perfected" Oil. Sold only in capsuled imperial ¼ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

The above sum, therefore, represents the total public indebtedness of the Colony, including that of Municipalities, Public Trusts, and all other local bodies, with a few unimportant exceptions, incurred before the Act came into operation.

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.

The PUREST. The MOST PALATABLE. The MOST DIGESTIBLE. The MOST EFFICACIOUS.

Incontestably proved by Thirty Years' Medical Experience to be

GENERAL DEBILITY, WASTING DISEASES of CHILDREN,

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

CONSIDERING the fondness of the Liberals for sweeping changes and heroic legislation, we think it extremely probable that the reorganisation of the Indian military system will be carried out with energy and promptitude. There might, in the minds of ordinary people arise a doubt as to whether it was wise to change horses while crossing a stream, but such petty considerations are beneath the notice of the Gladstone school. We shall not, therefore, be surprised at finding that even before we have done with the Afghan war, the task of reconstructing a monster, delicate, and elaborate machine has been begun. The members of the Committee appointed to draw up a scheme of reorganisation were selected in some instances apparently for the precise reason that they were wanting in practical experience with regard to important branches of the subject, and the regimental element was sparingly represented. There is, therefore, some hope that their suggestions will be subjected to modification by the Home Government. Beginning at the top, we find that the Viceroy is to be the supreme head of the Army. He is that already, and the only object of the recommendation is that his patronage and his power in executive matters may be increased and placed beyond dispute. Taken in conjunction with the suggestion that the Commander-in-Chief should lose his seat in Council, the intention evidently is to reduce that officer to the position of Chief of the Staff. Indeed, it is candidly admitted that it is intended that he should occupy towards the Military Secretariat the same position as that of the Duke of Cambridge towards the Secretary of War. The Military Member of Council would, according to the scheme, hold the same position as the Secretary of War. What the object of these arrangements are, unless to gratify the vanity of the Viceroy for the time being, and the Indian bureaucracy, we cannot imagine. If the idea is carried out, the interests of the Army will be most imperfectly represented in the Government, for the Military member of Council has as often as not had little practical experience of regimental life, and important military operations would be planned by one man totally ignorant of them, advised by another whose existence has been spent chiefly in an office. The only objection to the present system is that the Commander-in-Chief has not had enough power. Yet it is proposed that he should be deprived of the little he now possesses. The fusion of the Armies of the Three Presidencies has often been advocated, and though there may be some practical difficulties in the way of carrying it out, we are inclined to advocate the adoption of that step. The advantages of the new scheme, by which four Army Corps are to be maintained, would seem to be nullified by the full control granted to Army Corps commanders. Necessarily, the peace army corps cannot correspond with the war army corps, but each army corps ought, in peace, to have one or two divisions organised so as to be able to take the field in its entirety. Perhaps, however, this will be done. Indeed, we are informed that arrangements are to be made for mobilising at once an army of 15,000 infantry, 12,600 cavalry, 240 field-guns, 18 siege guns, and 21 companies of Sappers. In connection with this subject, we may mention that the distribution of the troops is to be extensively altered. This is a step in the right direction, for the existing distribution has grown up gradually, and has been based on local and temporary requirements, rather than on any comprehensive scheme, or existing circumstances. The strategical value of the railways, for instance, has been only partially recognised. The increase in the strength of European infantry regiments would be a wise measure, considering how long a period must elapse before properly trained men can be obtained from England, in order to fill up the vacancies caused by sickness or casualties in action. The modification in the short-service system, it has long been seen, was inevitable, for two reasons :—1. It is specially essential that European regiments in India should be composed of men, not boys, if we are to keep up the prestige on which our power so greatly depends. 2. The expense of constantly sending home soldiers who have completed their time, and replacing them by others, is becoming a serious item in the Estimates. A local army has been advocated by many. Few unprejudiced persons, however, who are acquainted with and have studied the subject would endorse such a recommendation. A great gain to health, and eventually to economy, will be gained, if the bulk of the European infantry are, as recommended by the Committee, stationed in the hills. The sick-rate would undoubtedly diminish, and invaliding cease to be the heavy drain on the training that it now is. There is, however, it must be admitted, another side to the question. Unless the men are kept constantly employed in road-making and similar work, they will soon become tired of a hill station. Indeed, it is no secret that they find hill stations very dull. Then there is the difficulty as to drill, musketry, &c. The expense of feeding is also very great. Finally, it is desirable that the natives should see our European troops. As to the changes recommended in the Native Army, the constitution of a Reserve, formed from men of from twelve to twenty years' service, is an excellent notion. The recommendation that in a portion of the Army Native officers should be obtained by direct appointment from among cadets of good family, who have been trained at a military school, is—if men of good family will join these schools—a good idea. We cannot see, however, why this system should only be introduced in the Bengal and Punjab Armies, and why in the other Army Corps promotion should be by selection. There is no reason why there should be any distinction. Certainly the Army Corps whose district is Bombay, the Central Provinces, Central India, Rajputana, and Scinde, will produce men more fitted for direct commissions than Bengal and Assam. We should also have been glad had some indication been given that it was in contemplation to improve the status of Native officers, and assimilate the position of some of them to that of British officers. One of the chief defects of the existing organisation is the paucity of British officers. The Commission propose that in future there should be nine officers to a regiment of Native Infantry, and ten to a regiment of Native Cavalry. We cannot but think that it would have been better to have either reverted to the old Irregular system, or to have adopted the Regular system in its entirety. Nine or ten officers will be either too many or too few; it will be too many for mere supervision, too few for executive command. The Staff Corps, we trust, is doomed; at all events, the Commission have recommended its abolition, suggesting that there should be a combination of Brigade and Army Corps promotion. We also rejoice to observe that the absurdity of officers who have not done a day's soldiering since they were ensigns, thirty years ago, holding the rank of colonel or General is to be swept away. It is recommended that, with the exception of political employ, all officers accepting civil duties should resign their commissions. The above is an outline of the proposed changes, but no doubt some important modifications in the scheme will be made by the Home Government.

In the new Parliament, the Navy will be almost unrepresented by its own cloth, and will have to depend upon Members for the ports who may be willing to be coached up in any question coming before the House. This is a very great disadvantage, for experience has shown how easy a thing it is for a Department like the Admiralty to "obfuscate" a non-professional Member, so soon as he has got to the bottom of his list of questions, and his figures and facts are exhausted. Among the old Members that have gone, none will be more regretted than Admiral Sir John Hay and Commander Lord Charles Beresford, both of whose seats were looked upon as safe, more especially that of the last-named officer. But in the present humour of Ireland, an officer in her Majesty's Fleet is not the sort of man that Waterford wanted, and one who would be ready to advocate radical changes is more to the liking of the electors. Admiral Edmonstone, who hardly said enough, but was wise when he did speak; and Captain Pim, who said too much, and was not over-wise when he got on his legs, have both resigned their seats. Commander Price has retained his place in the House, and Commander Lord Ramsay has won a seat. But while the Navy has every confidence in the Member for Devonport, the new Member for Liverpool is as yet untried, and has shown some symptoms of disregard for precedent which make the Service a little doubtful as to the value of his support. Of unsuccessful candidates, Liberals and Conservatives alike have their share, Rear-Admiral Sir Edmund Commerell and Captain Field being unsuccessful on the Conservative side, and Rear-Admiral Carr Glyn and Captain Verney on the Liberal. The Marines have no Member, unfortunately, neither Captain Colomb, R.MA., or Captain Champion, R.M.L.I., having been returned for Youghal or Gravesend respectively. Mr. E. J. Reed has once more been returned, this time for Cardiff, for he seems to find the commercial element more in his line than anything connected with the Navy, and he left the dockyard borough of Pembroke for the trading port of Cardiff. Mr. Donald Currie may be counted as of service in bringing forward measures for forming a reserve of merchant ships for war purposes, a subject to which he has devoted some attention. But taking the new Parliament all in all, it is a remarkably poor House for the Navy, and the Service may expect a period of inactivity, for the new Admiralty will feel tolerably secure from awkward questioning. Mr. Childers is now generally spoken of as the coming First Lord of the Admiralty, though we had hoped that Mr. Goschen would have again taken office at Whitehall; and it is not even now too late for him to accede to what would be satisfactory to the Navy. There are not wanting those who believe in Mr. Childers's desire to do well with the Naval Service, but his reforms were too severe; and if ever a man made the Navy smart, he did. Mr. Goschen had the advantage of coming into power when the great reorganisation craze had partially passed away, and he did what he could to smooth over those troubles into which hasty legislation had brought the Fleet. Mr. Goschen also has a far better idea than Mr. Childers of what is true economy, and did not look upon the fact of keeping the public money in the public purse as a real gain to the country, when the Fleet stood in need of repair and the Service was dissatisfied at the want of sympathy shown towards it, almost every request being denied, on the ground that it would cost something to carry out. That a retirement scheme for officers was urgently needed there is no denying, and we should be the last to hesitate in rendering to Mr. Childers the praise he deserves for the manner in which he handled so very difficult a question. It is true that much that he did has had to be undone, and modifications without number have had to be introduced, yet it was he who first tackled the question in all its difficulties, and gave to successors a scheme upon the lines of which they could work and improve. Still, as we have said before, Mr. Goschen would be a far more popular First Lord of the Admiralty than Mr. Childers; and the Service would not object to see Mr. Thomas Brassey given a berth as Parliamentary Secretary or Civil Lord at the Admiralty. He has the interests of the Service more at heart than most civilians, and although he may have his "fads," even to excess, and may feel that he is competent to take command of a fleet or build us a new Navy on his own designs, there is much in him that makes him a valuable friend to the Navy, and some official connection with that Service should be in store for him.

When a State is governed alternately by a body of men holding diametrically opposite views, it necessarily follows that the acts of the one can never be approved by the other, or by their supporters; and so whatever party may hold the reins for the time being, when estimates for the Services are brought forward, it stands to reason that their opponents are prepared to charge them with extravagance, each in turn crying out that the sum proposed for the Army and Navy is in excess of requirements. Recently, however, financial statements in Parliament have been remarkably free from animadversions of this nature, and the sums proposed for both branches of the Service have been passed with few remarks, and with little or no opposition. Doubtless the time has arrived when men feel themselves bound to accept the fact that the Services, both as regards pay of the men and provision of matériel, cannot be dealt with on the same limited scale as they were a century or half a century ago. Looking back a hundred years, we find the Army costing only £1,027,000, and the Navy £1,248,400; while at the beginning of the present century, when England was at war with Russia, France, and Spain, the cost of the Navy only reached £11,833,500, and that for the Army £12,238,200. At an intermediate date, when peace reigned, and before the introduction of the improvements of later years, we find the expenditure for the Army standing at £4,895,800, and that for the Navy at £4,420,000, but the votes of late years have reached respectively ten and fifteen millions, those for the current year being, for the Army, £15,541,300, and for the Navy, £10,492,935; thus in a time of peace the estimates for the Services in the one case exceed, and in the other are little less, than their cost when the country was engaged in an expensive war with three powerful nations. The British tax-payers may, however, rest satisfied that this state of things is not without necessity. To have an efficient Army and an efficient Fleet, the wages of the soldiers and of the sailors must be increased in proportion as the wages of the labouring population are advanced in the United Kingdom, otherwise both Services would become inefficient and undermanned. Forty years ago the pay was lower. Good-conduct money, good shooting, and other monetary rewards, as an inducement to good character and successful instruction, were unknown; and the addition of these items alone, to both Army and Navy, where, in round numbers, 200,000 men are concerned, form no small addition to an annual estimate. But the chief cause of increase is attributable to the present class of ships and war matériel for both Army and Navy. Before the Crimean war, the great nations of the world were satisfied with "Brown Bess" for their Army, and wooden three-deckers, carrying 32 and 24-pounders, for their Navy. But from that date the talent of Artillerists and Engineers has been brought to bear on the requirements of modern warfare, resulting in improved rifles, ponderous ordnance projectiles, compared with which the old 32-lb. shot was but a toy, and ironclads reaching the enormous measurement of over ten thousand tons. Added to this, the reduction of the sailing fleet and proportionate increase of vessels propelled by steam, the improvement and consequent increased cost of marine engines, the introduction of torpedoes and torpedo-boats, with the constant experiments and consequent changes which become necessary in the present day, it is not surprising that the estimates for the Services should be in excess of what they were forty or fifty years ago. All these improvements, however, and consequent increase of cost, are but the result of competition with other nations, a competition which must ever exist, so long as one nation pretends to hold its own with another. So far as Great Britain is concerned, the burthen is no greater on the taxpayer at the present period than it was at the time when the cost of the Services was at one-half, inasmuch as the prosperity of the country has proportionately increased, and can therefore better afford the outlay. It would be a false economy to check the advance of Naval and Military Science by ceasing to profit by the known results of experiments or inventions, suggested for the better protection of the United Kingdom; and therefore our legislators who have the welfare of their country at heart must never shrink from providing the ways and means, even if they find them to be in excess of former years.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh continues on the west coast of Ireland, superintending the relief of the distressed districts and islands, and the Lively, bearing the flag of his Royal Highness, has made Galway its head-quarters for the present. A large number of islands on the Galway coast have been visited, and supplies distributed by the Valorous and the smaller vessels of the Relief Squadron. Finding on arriving on the coast that the arrangement of placing certain vessels entirely at the disposal of one or other of the agents of the two Relief Committees was likely to lead to delay in carrying out whatever might be the most pressing service of the moment, the Duke of Edinburgh requested the Admiralty to place all vessels employed in relief work directly under his orders. His Royal Highness has also given assistance in house-to-house visiting and distribution of clothing.

Their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert Victor and George of Wales will shortly arrive in England, as the Bacchante was to leave Bermuda for Portsmouth on the 3rd instant.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., will, we believe, after his stay with Sir Henry Layard, pay a visit to Cyprus in the Helicon before returning to rehoist his flag on board the Alexandra.

Her Majesty will embark on board the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert at Flushing on the 16th inst., according to present arrangements, and will proceed to Queensborough. The Osborne, Alberta, and Syren will be the accompanying squadron.

Rear-Admiral Maxse has been writing to the French papers, to assure the Republic that the real friends of France are to be found among those whose society the Admiral frequented when he was aiding in agitating against the Beaconsfield Government. According to Admiral Maxse, France must look for her English friends among "the English Positivists, Radicals, and the London Democracy." He assures his French readers that they "may confidently rely on their friendship for Republican France." Is this a compliment?

The existing Board of Admiralty, not desiring to commit the succeeding Board to the formation of a Detached Squadron, has sent orders that the ships which had been named for this purpose need not now be brought forward, as was intended. This suspension of the order will only cause a slight delay, should the Liberal Admiralty decide upon re-establishing a Flying Squadron. Meanwhile, Lord Clanwilliam's chances of hoisting his flag as Admiral Commanding lie in abeyance.

We learn from the Admiralty that her Majesty has been graciously pleased, by Order in Council, to direct that on all occasions on which Royal Marines are embarked on board her Majesty's ships, whether as part complement, supernumeraries, or in battalions for service on shore, they shall be subject to the provisions of the Naval Discipline Act in force for the time being, provided the following directions, contained in Sub-clause b., Clause 8, of Section 171, of the Army Discipline and Regulation Acts, 1879, are not infringed, viz.:—"If any such officers or men of the Royal Marines are employed on land, the senior Naval officer present shall, unless such officers and men are serving with seamen under the immediate command of a Naval officer on shore, order that they shall, during such employment, be subject to this Act; and while such order is in force, they shall be subject to this Act accordingly."

The Admiralty and the India Office are by no means satisfied at the result of the recent prosecution of Mr. Dunn, who for so many years has been employed in a responsible position in the Constructors' Department. It will be remembered that Mr. Dunn was accused of having, as Deputy-Constructor of the Navy, agreed with a shipbroker that a vessel purchased for the India Office should be charged for at the sum of £20,000, whereas her real price was £18,500, and the difference was to be divided between Mr. Dunn and the broker. We can quite believe that the Admiralty would not have been party to taking proceedings against an official of the position of Mr. Dunn, had there not been very strong presumptive evidence of his guilt; and therefore, it is not surprising that a new trial has been moved for, and granted, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. The Solicitor-General, in moving for a new trial, brought forward as an argument, in favour of the application being granted, that "it would put an end to a practice which was supposed to exist in the Government Departments." This, we think, is rather a sweeping charge, and hardly fair to a Service in which bribery is, as a rule, most rare.

The naval power of Russia in the East is daily increasing with no unmeasured stride. The Naval depôt at Vladivostock is to be partially abandoned when a more suitable port is opened to her Siberian Fleet. The island of Saghalien is to be made a naval station, Russian convicts being sent there in great numbers to carry out the necessary works, and the Siberian Fleet is to be doubled, five ships of war having just been appropriated for this purpose. The volunteer fleet is also moving in that direction, three, we believe, being already on the spot. It looks as though there were warm work in store for somebody, and the question is, whether we shall be altogether out of it.

Captain Charles Cruttenden, late of the Indian Navy, and formerly Deputy-Director of Transports at the Admiralty, has assumed his duties as consulting officer for the Indian troop service, and is retained to represent Indian interests in the Transport Department. The new arrangements under which the Indian troopships are to be maintained, in accordance with the agreement arrived at between the India Office and Admiralty, will be found summarised in another column.

The officer who was in charge of the launch of the Agincourt when she got across the bows of the mail steamer Minho, and foundered, with the loss of two lives, has been ordered to be sent home, to be placed on half-pay, as a mark of their Lordships' opinion that he showed want of judgment in handling the steam-launch.

The widow of Mr. Greet, who was in command of the Coastguard cruiser Fanny when she was run down and sunk by the steamship Helvetia, has, we are glad to find, been successful in an action for compensation brought against the Steamship Company. The jury assessed the damages at £1,500 for the widow and her six children.

The undermentioned half-pay officers joined the torpedo class which commenced on board the Vernon on Wednesday last:—Captains Musgrave, Dupuis, Fane, Lloyd, and Prattent; Commanders Stopford, Poynder, Lecocq, Nesham, Rainier, Churchill, Bosanquet, Young, Hewitt, and Usborne; Lieutenants Duncan, Levett, Harrison, Eliot, Prince Louis of Battenberg, and Count Metaxa.

Admiral Popoff, whose head-quarters are at Glasgow, where he is superintending the building of the new Imperial yacht Livadia, assisted at the blessing of the vessel this week, in the presence of a number of spectators. Great progress is being made with this new vessel, the breadth of beam of which is very remarkable.

It is with regret that we learn that Lieutenant-Colonel Charles Williams, R.M.A., is lying so seriously ill at his quarters at Eastney Barracks as to give cause for much anxiety.

Commander John H. Rainier, who has been promoted out of the Excellent on completing his term as senior Staff officer, has been fortunate in passing over nearly 120 lieutenants. Commander Rainier has been constantly employed, and is known as an excellent officer. He cannot be said to have gained his step too soon.

The petty officers of the ships at Portsmouth have been enjoying themselves, and a ball which they gave on Wednesday night reflects much credit upon the class.

Commander Atwell Lake, late of the Alexandra, was appointed acting captain of the Téméraire during the delays which occurred in filling that command, on the promotion of Rear-Admiral Watson. Commander Lake now returns to England by mail steamer, having been relieved by Captain the Hon. W. Carpenter on March 28.

Of all the charges which have from time to time been brought against the Naval Service by "economists" of the worst form, not one has been found who could muster the courage to say that the officers were overpaid. The cost of ships, extravagance in the purchase of stores in excess of the demand, the maintenance of large Royal yards instead of going to private builders, and all manner of holes, have been picked in the Administration, so far as it concerns the matériel. But not even the reddest Radical in his most ramping moods has been able to say that either officers or men received too much pay. Seeing, then, with what care the pay of the Navy has been kept down to the present low rates, with the drawback of compulsory idleness and half-pay, it might have been thought that some extra allowance would be made in the case of ships serving on expensive stations. Take Japan as an instance, where everything except provisions is about three times the price that it is in England, the purchasing power of the dollar being about equal to that of the shilling at home. Clothing on that station is very expensive, and the cost of having supplies sent out by an outfitter makes a very considerable increase in the tailor's bill. There was a time when parcels could be sent out by the Peninsular and Oriental steamers free of charge, if necessary; but those good times have passed by, and with less money, or rather with an income worth less, officers are put to greater expense than formerly. This is very unreasonable, especially as the Navy does not know the privilege of drawing batta.

The Japanese training-ship Tsukuba Kan is ordered from Yokohama to America. Thirty students from the Naval College are to join her, to obtain a practical knowledge of navigation.

The crew of the Alexandra, on being paid off on Saturday at Portsmouth, were granted seven weeks' leave, the extra week being given on the recommendation of Admiral Sir Geoffrey Hornby.

Six revolving Hotchkiss cannon, constructed for Naval, field, fort, mountain, and other uses, are now to be seen at the offices of the Company, 43 Parliament Street. The French Government has ordered a considerable number of these cannon, and the Russian Government ordered 200 of them last week. A full description of these guns appeared in the Army and Navy Gazette on March 6 and 13. The Hotchkiss resembles the Gatling in most points, with this exception, that it has only one lock for all the barrels, whereas the Gatling has one lock to each barrel. An accident to either the lock or to one of the barrels of the Hotchkiss will disable the gun. As we have before stated, this would only disable one barrel in the Gatling gun, leaving the remaining barrels efficient and serviceable. We hope, therefore, that before deciding to purchase any further supply of machine guns out of the sum appropriated in this year's Estimates for that purpose, both the Admiralty and the War Office will carefully consider the defects we have enumerated in the various systems now competing for adoption, to the end that the English Service may eventually be supplied with the very best machine gun it is possible to procure. We are informed that great improvements have been made in the Nordenfeldt gun. These are said to render the premature explosion of cartridges absolutely impossible.

The monitor Solimoens is, according to a telegram from Rio, missing, not having returned from gunnery practice, for which purpose she put to sea. She had been four days absent when the telegram was despatched, and some vessels had gone out to look for her.

We regret to hear of the sudden death at Eastney, on Sunday, of Lieutenant-Colonel Poore, R.M.A., who had been unwell for some time, but was not on the sick-list. Colonel Poore entered the Service in 1847, and served with the Royal Marine Battalion in the operations against Bomarsund.

The cadets on board the Britannia rejoined their ship, the Easter leave, on Thursday, the announcement that they rejoined on Friday, last week, being an error.

The independent cruise of the Raleigh will cause no greater wear-and-tear to the ship than if she were employed on a station, and the saving will be very considerable, for her own complement can be reduced, the supernumeraries for passage on the outward and homeward voyages doing their share of the work, instead of going out in hired steamers and having their passages paid for them. It is better, too, for the young hands that they should be kept under the pendant, than be sent out as passengers; and although it has been customary to place such drafts under the charge of Naval officers, yet the life is not the same. We hope this use to which the Raleigh has been put may be extended, and that it may be made possible to arrange in the future for sending reliefs to distant stations on board men-of-war. It matters little on what station a ship may be, so long as the strength of the station she leaves is maintained; and if we moved ships a little more often, making them do some useful work at the same time, instead of keeping them going from one port to another, visiting the same haunts, of some of which the men must be heartily tired, the service would gain in popularity. An attempt has been made to exchange ships between such stations as the West Coast of Africa, the South-East Coast of America, and the West Indies, but the system might be much more generally adopted, and such exchanges might be made more general between stations on which similar classes of ships are employed. A vast sum of money could be saved by utilising the movements of ships of war for sending out stores and reliefs.

Colonel the Hon. S. Mostyn, C.B., 23rd Fusiliers, has been appointed to the command of the brigade depôt at Wrexham, which became vacant some time ago on Colonel W. Cooper completing his four years' service in the appointment.

Captain G. E. Boyle, Rifle Brigade, who is favourably known at Colchester, where he was employed from April, 1874, to April, 1879, as brigade-major, has been selected to succeed Brevet Major H. Spalding, 104th Fusiliers, as a deputy-assistant-adjutant and quartermaster-general at the Cape of Good Hope.

We wish to invoke the protection of the Authorities for the young officers who have entered the Militia for the purpose of obtaining a commission in the Regular Army. In a large number of cases, these young officers are anything but well off, yet the pulls on their pockets are serious. Indeed, we have reason to believe that it is thought quite legitimate to make them pay somewhat heavily for the convenience which they make of the Militia. Even, however, if such is not the case, the ordinary expenses of a Militia regiment are unnecessarily heavy. The officers are apt to look on the training as an opportunity and excuse for a stirring bout of dissipation. Champagne flows like water, and late hours are the rule, though, considering how short a time the training lasts, it might be thought desirable that Militia officers should rise for their early drills with clear heads and refreshed by a good night's rest. Then there is the inevitable ball on a most expensive scale, and many subscriptions for the band, which never can be very good, and from which enjoyment is only derived during one month in the year. We have even heard of a Derby drag in one regiment belonging to the Metropolis. There are also fees, tips, and subscriptions of every sort. Thus, one way and another, the poor candidate for the Line has rather a bad time of it. The idea seems to be that it is very fine to lead a roystering life, and that it is the correct thing to earn the reputation of a crack corps. As a matter of fact, this sort of style is very amateurish, and the more there is of it, the less resemblance there is to a regiment of the Regular Army. The Authorities really ought to look into the matter.

It is with satisfaction we announce that one of the last acts of Lord Beaconsfield's Government has been one of justice to a number of distinguished and meritorious colonial officers and officials, whose services in South Africa have as yet met with no reward, while those who have received military recognition are now honourably provided for by the Colonial Office, the opportunity having been taken advantage of for further recognising the services rendered by Colonels Lanyon, Russell, and Carrington.

Thirty-two years ago, on April 10, 1848, the Duke of Wellington (the memorable Iron Duke) fortified the public offices, the Bank, the bridges, &c., against the Chartist demonstration, of which the present Sir Charles Read (Chairman of the School Board) was, if not the actual, at least a leader. Since then thirty-two years have passed, and on this April 10, 1880, we find the country rejoicing over the election of a Bradlaugh, a Broadhurst, a Bryce, a Passmore Edwards, a Thorold Rogers as Members of the House of Commons. O tempora, O mores!

The following Royal Warrant has been promulgated:—"Whereas, we deem it expedient to amend in certain respects the regulations which govern the Staff appointments of officers of our Regular Forces, and to make provision for all appointments to the Staff of our Army being in future gazetted, our will and pleasure is that Articles 91, 156, and 157 of our Warrant of May 1, 1878, be cancelled, and that the following be substituted in lieu thereof, and that a fresh article be added after Article 151,—Article 151 (a). 91. An officer's Staff service shall reckon towards qualification for promotion from the day after the date of Gazette notifying his appointment to the Staff, or from the date specified in the Gazette. No period of acting Staff service of less than six months' duration shall reckon, unless it be converted into actual Staff service by subsequent confirmation. 151 (a). All appointments to the general or personal Staff of our Army shall be notified in the London Gazette. 156. The staff pay of an officer appointed to the Staff at home shall commence from the day after the date of Gazette, but such pay shall in no case be issued for a period prior to the commencement of duty. 157. The pay of an officer appointed to a station abroad shall, in the event of his being at such station, commence from the date on which he assumes the duties of his appointment. In other cases, his pay shall commence from the date of his embarkation for such station."

The officering of the Native Army in India being so limited now as regards European officers, compared with the number of officers in the days of the old East India Company, the following extract from the military reminiscences of Colonel James, who entered the Madras Army in 1791, is interesting. We must bear in mind that in those days a native regiment on service could boast of something like three times seven British officers (seven being the average number now), and had, besides, a serjeant-major and quartermaster-serjeant, both Europeans. Colonel James says:—"In October, 1804, the 2nd Battalion of the 7th Madras N.I., commanded by Captain John Brown, was sent against Sasselgaum, about twelve miles south of Chandore. Brown and another European officer were killed, more were wounded, and a considerable number had been left behind ill with fever. In fact, every European officer was hors de combat, and the surgeon of the corps overheard the quartermaster-serjeant and the serjeant-major squabbling as to which of them should assume command. The serjeant-major claimed it as his right by virtue of his superior appointment, and the quartermaster-serjeant as the oldest soldier, neither considering the surgeon to be a gentleman, nor to rank with officers, nor that there were 18 or 20 subadars and jemadars, native officers, holding commissions from Government. The arrival of a reinforcement next morning put an end to the debate, and the question was left unsettled." How curiously these lines read to-day, some seventy-five years after they were written! Everything is changed now, and if poor Captain Brown had lived in these days, instead of commanding the 7th Madras N.I., he would doubtless have been a wing-officer in that distinguished corps. And the quaint dispute between the serjeant-major and the quartermaster-serjeant as to which should assume command of the corps, they being fully in accord only on the point that the surgeon of the regiment was not a gentleman, and that the native officers were nobody!

The sixteenth part of the great work of the German General Staff on the Franco-German war, which has just been published, contains a most interesting episode of that campaign, the seven-day struggle round, and for the possession of, Le Mans. Only two more parts are to appear, which will complete the work, and will treat of the operations of the other parts of the German Army during the last month of the war.

Colonel W. Earle, C.S.I., Grenadier Guards, has been appointed to the command of the Chatham District during the absence of Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., who has proceeded to the Cape with the Empress Eugénie.

Respecting the change being effected in the rifle (the Werndl) with which the Austrian infantry is armed, the Vienna correspondent of the Pesti Naplo writes:—"It is a well known fact that Germany, Italy, later France, and even now Roumania, have armed their troops with rifles which carry a good deal farther than the Werndl, invented in 1867. In consequence, all the rifles of the Austrian Army will undergo alteration. The work of adapting the present for the improved arm is being actively proceeded with in the Vienna arsenal, and in the well known small-arm factory at Steyr. The whole process of change consists in adapting, by various operations, the present rifle for the reception of a larger and longer cartridge. Experiments made have shown that it was not necessary to change the system altogether, that the old rifle is not deteriorated or weakened by the alteration, and that, with regard to range and precision, the improved arm is on a level with that of the Powers above mentioned." If the facts are as stated, and we have no reason to doubt their accuracy, Austria is very fortunate in being able to introduce an improved arm at a small expense.

General Miliutin has sent a special commission to Poland, to investigate a number of frauds by Military officers which have recently been brought to light. In one instance, as much as 20,000 roubles is stated to have been embezzled from the regimental funds of a Warsaw cavalry regiment. The commander and several of his subordinates have been placed under arrest.

We are informed that the publication of Colonel Grodekoff's "Ride to Herat," to which we referred last week, has been entrusted to Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. Grodekoff's opinion that Merv is not the key of Herat is likely to occasion attention to be drawn to the work, which will also derive further importance if, as expected, Grodekoff proceeds to the Caspian as Chief of General Skŏbeleff's staff.

The manœuvres of the Austrian Army in the camp at Bruck will take place this year in five periods, extending from May 12 to September 7.

There were, until lately, 73 non-commissioned officers and men of the Army wearing the Victoria Cross. The allowance drawn by each man thus decorated is £10 per annum, and the total cost to the Imperial Government was £780, £30 being paid by the Indian Government. The deaths of the following men decorated with the Cross have lately been reported, viz.:—Lance-Serjeant S. M'Gaw, 42nd Highlanders, and the following discharged men—Private J. Freeman, 9th Lancers; Private T. Murphy, 24th Foot; Corporal W. Oxenham, 32nd Foot; Private P. Mylott, 84th Foot; and Privates T. O'Hea and J. Bradshaw, Rifle Brigade.

The new French Minister of War appears to have made a pretty clean sweep in what are called the bureaux, and thus to have proved that it is not absolutely necessary to put a civilian at the head of the Administration of the Army in order to operate changes in the personnel. General Farre, who brought himself into notice during what may be termed the second portion of the Franco-German war, has treated his old comrades with very little ceremony, and he is naturally accused of having acted from political motives. This may or may not be the case, but it is well known to all acquainted with French military matters that the predecessors of General Farre were mere puppets in the hands of the bureaux; that the Minister, in fact, had no real power, all his good intentions being thwarted by the permanent authorities at the War Office. There seems to be little or no objection to the General officers who have been called upon to replace those superseded. However, the departure of General Séré de Rivière is much regretted, as he was a very able and energetic officer, who had exhibited great professional skill in the reconstruction of the French fortresses. Unfortunately, he had attained the limit of age, and hence his removal. He is replaced by General Cosseron de Villenoisy, who is highly spoken of. We may remind our readers that this officer was placed on the Retired List some years ago by General de Cissey, for having petitioned the National Assembly to bring Marshal Bazaine to trial. It was no wonder that General Cosseron de Villenoisy got into trouble, for showing himself so officious and unmindful of discipline, especially as M. Thiers, who was President of the Republic at the time, was opposed to a court-martial, being aware that it would not redound to the honour and glory of France. Great things are expected by the advanced Liberals from General Farre, but then they expected great things from General Billot and from General Gresley.

There must be something radically wrong in a system of appointing adjutants, when young officers of a few months' service, and under twenty years of age, are gazetted to the position. What possible influence can these young men have, and how is it likely that they will be looked up to and respected, when they have so little experience, and have seen little or nothing of the world? Commanding officers cannot, of course, be blamed; they recommend those among their officers who are best qualified, and they nominate juniors in order to avoid the consequences of constant changes; but their hands ought not to be so tied, and in certain cases captains should, in the interests of the Service, be eligible for the employment, for it is more than ever necessary now that the adjutant of a regiment should not only be well qualified to perform his duties on parade, but be of such age and standing in his regiment that he may carry weight in the orderly-room, and among his brother-officers when off duty.

THE BRIGHTON REVIEW.

Lieutenant-Colonel Warner, commanding the 3rd Middlesex R.V., writes:—"In your article last week on the Easter Monday Review, you say that a battalion stood at ease in quarter-column in a valley, while a company of the enemy on the hill fired into them at a distance of 400 yards. I believe that this refers to the battalion under my command, and I will ask you as a matter of justice to insert a short explanation. After the enemy's outposts were driven out of Balsdean Farm, my battalion advanced in extended order along the valley and the sides of the adjacent hills, towards Newmarket Hill. On approaching the enemy, my skirmishers on the right gained, unperceived, the flank of a battalion in line, and drove it back. This enabled the left to push forward and gain a most advantageous position, from which they fired into two battalions of the enemy in close formation. The grey uniform seemed to conceal our movements, and to give great advantage over the red opposed to us. When time had been allowed for this fire to take effect, an attempt was made to carry the steep hill on the left front, and I think, if an umpire had been present throughout, he would probably have held that, under all the circumstances, the attack succeeded. But there was no umpire on the spot, our slain foes came to life again, the skirmishers soon got within 100 yards, and in accordance with the orders, I directed my men to cease fire. After this, an umpire came up on the enemy's side, and no doubt, finding us inferior in numbers, signalled to us to retire. Such a retreat would have been impossible, in real warfare, without complete destruction. Consequently, I ordered my battalion to fall back from quarter-column and stand at ease, as a sign that it was out of action. Within five minutes, the 'Cease fire' sounded, and hostilities ceased. I venture to think that such a course as I adopted is more instructive to all parties concerned, and more conducive to good discipline, than persisting in an impossible resistance. At all events, I trust that after this explanation you will consider your criticism hardly justified by the facts."

Herr Krupp, at Essen, has purchased 1,300,000 cwt. of Swedish iron. This immense quantity will be conveyed in 30 steamers from Oxeloe Sound Harbour to the Pomeranian harbours. The greater part of it is to be converted into warlike material.

Dr. Lynn, who may fairly lay claim to the title of the "King of Legerdemain," has opened the Piccadilly Hall. Dr. Lynn's entertainment is of the most interesting character, and will amply repay a visit. Conveniently situated as his hall is, his venture ought to prove successful, and we feel assured that it would do so were the public aware what a high place he holds in the world of magic. To our minds he has no equal.
